CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTY-FIRST CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 21, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CULBERSON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ABANDONMENT OF NAVY YARDS AND NAVAL STATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, detailed information relative to the number and character of buildings, their original cost, etc., at the navy yards and naval stations at New Orleans, Pensacola, Port Royal, and New London (S. Doc. No. 830), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and resolutions:

S. 10404. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a right of way through lands of the United States to the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad Co.;

S. 10431. An act to authorize the Argenta Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.;

S. J. Res. 131. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive, for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, two Chinese subjects to be designated hereafter by the Government of China; and

S. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of the message of the President, together with the report of the agent of the United States in the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries Arbitration at The Hague.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 18512. An act for the relief of S. H. Robinson, of Allegheny County, Pa.;

H. R. 31987. An act providing for the releasing of the claim of the United States Government to arpent lot No. 44, in the old city of Pensacola, Fla.; and

H. R. 32767. An act for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26150) to authorize the cities of Boston and Cambridge, Mass., to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River between the cities of Cambridge and Boston.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 10574. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the withdrawal from public entry of lands needed for townsite purposes in connection with irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes," approved April 16, 1906; and

S. 10836. An act to authorize the Minnesota River Improvement & Power Co. to construct dams across the Minnesota River.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 19.

Be it resolved by the house (the senate concurring):

Whereas the United States Government has found it necessary to secure a location for the maneuvers of the Regular Army and National Guards; and

Whereas such maneuvers are necessary for the drill and practice of National and State troops, if they are to excel in military skill; and

Whereas the difficulties in the way of securing a suitable location are of such magnitude as to threaten the efficiency of the Army and militia; and

Whereas there is a vast tract of unoccupied land in Klamath County, Oreg., embraced in the Klamath Indian Reservation and the Crater National Forest, the disposition of which rests with the United States Government: Therefore

Your memorialists do earnestly pray the President and Congress to set aside and appropriate 30,000 acres of land within the Klamath Indian Reservation and the Crater National Forest, for the use of the United States Army and the National Guards of the several States, subject to such rules and regulations as may from time to time be promulgated by the Secretary of War.

Adopted by the house January 26, 1911.
JOHN P. RUSK, Speaker of the House.

Concurred in by the senate February 6, 1911.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, F. W. Benson, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house concurrent resolution No. 19 with the original thereof, which was adopted by the house January 26, 1911, and concurred in by the senate February 6, 1911, and that it is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 15th day of February, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint memorial No. 9.

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon:

Whereas the Persian walnut industry—commonly called the English walnut—of the State of Oregon, is of vast importance to the State and Nation, and inasmuch as there are approximately 250,000 acres of the choicest land in the United States adapted to walnut culture, lying in western Oregon, that can be made to produce from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 worth of the finest walnuts in the world, within 20 years, by well-directed effort; and

Whereas there is urgent need of investigation and experiment relating to the walnut industry of this section, and as McMinnville, in Yamhill County, in this State, is the active center of this industry: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Oregon, respectfully memoralize the Congress of the United States, to establish and maintain at McMinnville, Oreg., an experiment station, devoted to walnut culture investigation, under the direction of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Adopted by the house February 8, 1911.
JOHN P. RUSK, Speaker of the House.

Concurred in by the senate February 10, 1911.
BEN SELLING, President of the Senate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, F. W. Benson, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 9 with the original thereof, which was adopted by the house February 8, 1911, and concurred in by the senate February 10, 1911, and that it is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 15th day of February, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a communication from the secretary of state of the State of Washington, transmitting a copy of house bill 207, passed by the Legislature of that State, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

An act making application to the Congress of the United States of America to call a convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America, as authorized by Article V of the Constitution of the United States of America.

Whereas the present method of electing a United States Senator is expensive, and conducive of unnecessary delay in the passage of useful legislation; and

Whereas the will of the people can best be ascertained by direct vote of the people: Therefore

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Washington:

SECTION 1. That application be, and the same is hereby, made to the Congress of the United States of America to call a convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America as authorized by Article V of the Constitution of the United States of America.

SEC. 2. That a duly certified copy of this act be immediately transmitted to the presiding officer of each legislative body of each of the several States of the United States of America, through the governor of each of the several States, with a request that each of such legislatures pass an act of like import as this act.

Passed the house February 19, 1903.
Passed the senate March 7, 1903.
Approved by the governor March 12, 1903.

THE STATE OF WASHINGTON,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, I. M. Howell, secretary of state of the State of Washington and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of House bill No. 207, approved March 12, 1903, an act relative to election of United States Senators, the same being chapter 61 of the Laws of State of Washington of 1903, with the original copy of said law as enrolled, now on file in this office, and find the same to be a full, true, and correct copy of said original, and of the whole thereof, together with all official indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Washington.

Done at the capitol, at Olympia, this 15th day of February, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] I. M. HOWELL, Secretary of State.

Mr. BURNHAM presented memorials of Mountain View Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of East Conway; of George R. Drake, secretary of the New Hampshire State Grange; of Wesley Adams, overseer of the New Hampshire State Grange; of John Flynn and L. A. Dresser, of Berlin; and of the Berlin Dry Goods Co., all in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM presented a memorial of sundry agriculturists of northern Colorado, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Weld County Farmers' Club, of Colorado, praying for the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BURKETT. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is now pending in our National Congress H. R. 30799, by Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska, providing for graduated payments and a longer time than 10 years in which to repay the construction charges under Government irrigation projects as now provided by law; and

Whereas it appears that the desert lands irrigated by the interstate canal in Nebraska can not be immediately depended upon to provide a living for the settler and his family and make so large a yearly payment as the reclamation act and the regulations of the Interior Department now require; and

Whereas it has been actually demonstrated that these lands will not produce more than one good crop until alfalfa has been grown for two or three years; and

Whereas the abundant productiveness of valuable crops under the other canals have positively proven that it is only a matter of time for development when these lands will fulfill the most sanguine expectations; and

Whereas the season of 1910 has been most unfavorable for agriculture in that territory and that the settlers under said interstate canal are now in distressed circumstances, and there is pressing need for immediate action on the part of Congress to enact into law a more suitable system of payments making the same light during the first years and heavier later when the lands have been developed; and

Whereas we believe the homestead laws should be and were intended for the poor man's benefit, and that under the law returning all payments within 10 years, the poor man is positively barred from completing his payments and gaining title to the lands he may have entered under said reclamation act: Therefore be it

Resolved, The State Senate of Nebraska in regular session assembled heartily indorse H. R. 30799 and any similar legislation along said lines and ask our Senators and Representatives in the National Congress to give same their active support; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Washington and to the honorable Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BURKETT presented a memorial of Local Typographical Union No. 190, of Omaha, Nebr., remonstrating against any increase being made in the rate of postage on periodicals and magazines, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry veterans of the Civil War, of Inman, Nebr., praying for the passage of the so-called old-age pension bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT presented a memorial of Friendship Grange, No. 26, Patrons of Husbandry, of Monongalia County, W. Va., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Maurice McAuliffe, president of the State Farmers' Union, of Salina, Kans., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALINA, KANS., February 16, 1911.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

The Farmers' Union of Kansas, an organization representing several thousand farmers, directs me to communicate following to you:

Resolved by the Farmers' Union of Kansas in annual convention assembled here this day, That we believe that the proposed treaty with Canada would be injurious to the agricultural interests of our State. We therefore respectfully request our Senators to vote against the adoption of the proposed treaty.

MAURICE MCAULIFFE,
President State Farmers' Union.

Mr. GALLINGER presented memorials of Advance Grange, No. 20, of Wilton, of Local Grange, of Strafford; of Local Grange No. 104, of Bartlette, of the State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, and of sundry citizens of Berlin, all in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Garfield Citizens' Association and sundry citizens of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against any change being made in the present board of education, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN. I present a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, recommending that action be not taken by the United States Senate on the Canadian reciprocity agreement until there has been a thorough examination of its details and time for its mature consideration by the American people. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF WOOL MANUFACTURERS,
OFFICE, 683 ATLANTIC AVENUE,
Boston, Mass., February 16, 1911.

Resolved by the executive committee of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, That it is the sense of this committee that no action should be taken by the United States Senate on the Canadian reciprocity agreement until there have been not only a thorough examination of the details of the agreement, but a mature consideration by the American people of the probable effect upon our farming and fishing interests, our commercial relations under treaty with other countries, and the American system of protection.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I present a memorial from the National Society of Colonial Dames of America in Arkansas, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable Senate of the United States in Congress assembled:

The National Society of Colonial Dames of America in Arkansas memorialize your honorable body, and respectfully and urgently protest against the establishment of a criminal reformatory for the District of Columbia on what is known as the Belvoir or White House tract in Virginia, in the near vicinity of the home and grave of George Washington.

The tract of land thus far chosen for the purpose is 3½ miles from Mount Vernon, and forms a part of the peninsula extending within 2½ miles of Mount Vernon, the whole of which peninsula, this society has been informed, it is contemplated ultimately to acquire for the reformatory. The home of Nellie Custis is within about one-half mile of the Belvoir tract, while the house of George Mason is within about 1 mile or less.

This society submits that there can be neither necessity nor propriety in the location of such an institution in the setting of these historic homes so closely associated with the independence of our country, and especially that it would be a national discredit to place a penal criminal institution in the immediate vicinity of the home and burial place of Washington.

A protest was submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia with promptness, when the matter was first brought to the attention of the regents of the Mount Vernon Association, and we join with that association and appeal to this honorable body, because of the firm conviction that it will arouse the sentimental interest of every patriotic citizen of the United States, and this society submits the matter to the Congress of the United States and invokes its portection.

Respectfully submitted.

Done by the National Society of Colonial Dames of America in Arkansas, at Little Rock, Ark., this 9th day of February, 1911.

FRANCES ASHLEY JOHNSON,
President of the Society in Arkansas.

LAURA LEWIS BUNCH,
Secretary of the Society in Arkansas.

Mr. HEYBURN. I present joint memorial No. 6, adopted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho, relative to the abolishment of all rules of the Forest Service governing the removal of dead timber by the settlers. I ask that the joint memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 6.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Idaho (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas under the present rules formulated by the national forestry officials governing and controlling the use of the national forests with reference to removing therefrom dead timber, it is very inconvenient and hard for the settlers who desire to use this dead timber to obtain the same, because the procedure necessary to go through is very lengthy, undesirable, and costly to users thereof; and

Whereas said dry timber, by laying in the national forests, exposes the growing timber to the danger of fire and thereby is a menace to the national forest and should be removed: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to abolish all rules of the Forest Service governing the removal of dead timber by the settlers, so as to make it as convenient as possible to remove the same from the national forest for use by the settlers and thereby favor not only the settlers but promote the welfare and protection of the national forest of the United States.

This memorial passed the house of representatives on the 6th day of February, 1911.

CHARLES D. STOREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This memorial passed the senate on the 15th day of February, 1911.

L. H. SWEETSER,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within house joint memorial No. 6 originated in the house of representatives of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, during the eleventh session.

JAMES H. WALLIS,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Wilfred L. Gifford, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint memorial No. 6, by Hall and Pincock, relating to the abolishing of all rules of the Forest Service governing the removal of dead timber by the settlers (passed the house Feb. 6, 1911; passed the senate Feb. 15, 1911), which was filed in this office the 17th day of February, A. D. 1911, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State.

Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 17th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eleven and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-fifth.

Mr. BOURNE. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 10.

Whereas the Canadian reciprocal agreement proposing the removal of duties upon farm and timber products is now under consideration by Congress; and

Whereas the removal of these existing tariffs upon its products will work inestimable damage to the welfare of the State; and

Whereas by reason of the shipping laws of the United States foreign vessels can not be used between domestic ports, while vessels under any flag can be used between Canadian ports and those of the United States, thereby securing very much lower rates and making the competition more difficult to meet; and

Whereas a tariff commission has been appointed by the President of the United States to examine into and report on the necessity of changes in our present tariffs on all commodities, both raw and manufactured: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Oregon requests its Senators and Representatives in Congress to oppose the ratification or consent of or to said Canadian reciprocal agreement at this time, and until said tariff commission has reported and the country is more fully advised as to the effect such agreement will have upon the industries and development of the United States.

Adopted by the house February 9, 1911.

I, F. W. Benson, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 10 with the original thereof, which was adopted by the house February 9, 1911, and concurred in by the senate February 14, 1911, and that it is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

[SEAL.] F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

Mr. BOURNE. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial No. 8.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives, Congress of the United States, gentlemen:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, would respectfully and earnestly represent to your honorable body that the pension granted to the veterans of the Oregon Indian wars of 1847, 1848, 1855, and 1856, to wit, $8 per month, is inadequate to the deserts and needs of the few of these old veterans who remain with us as living evidence of the patriotic work performed by them.

That the claims of these men to national recognition and gratitude have been already acknowledged by State and Nation, but in fixing their reward the spirit of economy was largely the controlling influence, and the pensions allowed them are entirely too small.

We therefore urge your honorable body to pass a bill granting to the veterans of the Indian wars above mentioned an increase of pensions, thus placing the veterans of all these wars upon the same footing as the veterans of the Civil War. The number of the survivors of all Indian war veterans is now small; they are old and decrepit, and their ranks are fast becoming depleted, and we feel that their services to State and Nation have been sufficient to warrant the payment to them of a pension equivalent to that paid to the survivors of the Civil War.

It is hereby directed that a copy of this memorial, duly signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, and attested by the chief clerks of the two houses, be forthwith forwarded to each of Oregon's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted by the Senate February 10, 1911.

[SEAL.] F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

Mr. BOURNE. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 5.

A memorial to Congress for adoption by the House of Representatives and Senate, now in session, pertaining to protection of manufacturing industries in States in which the interstate-commerce laws at this time render ineffective protection to said manufacturing industries.

Whereas the manufacturers of Oregon and the home industries of this State are made to suffer through the lack of protection afforded on account of the rulings of the courts in reference to the interstate-commerce laws; and

Whereas the State of Oregon is being flooded with goods and with merchandise which, being made in any penitentiary, prison, reformatory, or other like institutions, are proving to be the detriment of the home industries of this State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the State senate and the house of representatives now assembled do present this, a memorial, to Congress, requesting that Congress do protect the various States' industries by providing a law that all such penitentiary and penal made goods be stamped, labeled, or marked by the institution making such goods with the name of the institution, the date of manufacture, and that such goods or merchandise be so stamped, labeled, or marked before leaving such institution for interstate shipment; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Oregon's United States Senators and Representatives.

Adopted by the house February 6, 1911.

[SEAL.] F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

Mr. BOURNE. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 13.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives, Congress of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, would respectfully and earnestly represent to your honorable body that the pensions now granted under existing laws to the veterans of the Civil War are, by reason of advancing age and increasing infirmities, inadequate to the deserts and needs of these old soldiers who are so rapidly passing away.

We therefore urge upon your honorable body the passage of House bill 29346—the Sulloway bill—granting increased pensions to the survivors of the Civil War commensurate with their increasing age and infirmities.

The number of survivors of the Civil War is rapidly growing smaller and their ranks are fast becoming depleted, and we feel that their services to the Nation have been sufficient to warrant the payment to them of the pension provided for in this bill.

It is hereby directed that a copy of this memorial, duly signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, and attested by the chief clerks of the two houses, be immediately forwarded to each of the Oregon Senators and Representatives in Congress.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 8.

To the Congress of the United States, greeting:

Whereas numerous Volunteer regiments who enlisted for the War with Spain in 1898 that were sent to the Philippine Islands and did valiant service there in suppressing the Philippine insurrection after the treaty of peace with Spain was signed were returned to the United States and mustered out without being paid the customary travel pay allowed soldiers under similar conditions:

Therefore we, your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, earnestly pray your honorable body to enact into law a bill for the purpose of giving travel pay to all Volunteer soldiers who remained in the Philippine Islands doing service after the treaty of peace with Spain was signed and who have not heretofore obtained the same.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. GRONNA. I have received a letter from R. T. Kingman, of the Kingman Farm, Hillsboro, Traill County, N. Dak., dated February 16, 1911, with reference to reciprocity with Canada. I ask that the letter may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter presented by the Senator from North Dakota will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, a question of privilege. Where did this document come from?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who asked unanimous consent that it be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a most unusual thing to read into the RECORD.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I believe after the reading of the remainder of the letter he will be perfectly willing that it shall be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course I do not arrogate to myself the right to criticize the judgment of another Senator in asking that matter be printed in the RECORD, but——

Mr. LODGE. Is it a petition?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it is not a petition, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a letter from an individual, the Chair understands.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and it is a most unusual letter, and not at all within the character of letters which we are accustomed to admit into our records.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is being read by unanimous consent. If there is no objection, the Secretary will proceed with the reading.

Mr. LODGE. How long is it? We have not a great deal of time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs the Chair that it consists of six typewritten pages. The Secretary will proceed with the reading, if there be no objection.

The Secretary resumed the reading.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, sufficient of that document has been read for the Senate to understand the argument it contains against the reciprocity agreement. I think I will object to its further reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate permit the document to be read? [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the Secretary will continue the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will state it.

Mr. STONE. I ask whether a further objection can be entertained to the reading of the document?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Whenever the reading of a document is objected to the question is decided by a vote of the Senate, under the rules of the Senate. The Senator from Missouri objected, the Chair put it to a vote, and the Senate voted that the document should be read. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, which is as follows:

THE KINGMAN FARM,
Hillsboro, N. Dak., February 16, 1911.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Knowing from the newspapers your position in reference to this matter of reciprocity with Canada, knowing also that you must be overwhelmed with communications from others on this same subject, it seems useless for me to add my mite; but after reading Mr. Hill's speech delivered in Chicago I am so stirred up I can not help but express my resentment at his tirade and his unjust and unfair statements.

As one of those "ignorant farmers," with no reasoning power of my own, having been imposed upon by those "despicable, scheming demagogues," would like to ask Mr. Hill—

Why is he so ardently interested in the consummation of this agreement? Has he no "selfish axes to grind?"

Why Mr. Hill's visit to Washington at the time when negotiations were pending?

Why, the day after the vote in the House, did Great Northern stock advance on the New York Stock Exchange from $1.29½ to $1.36½?

Why this sudden announcement of his decision to build a $2,000,000 depot in the city of Winnipeg?

Why all this childish, crazed interest all of a sudden in the welfare of the dear people?

There is a reason.

Let any fair-minded man take a Great Northern folder, inspect the map therein, and he will see the reason. He will find 12 separate Great Northern lines, or branches, running to the Canadian boundary line, five of them already penetrating into Canada, each of them merging with the three main lines from Minneapolis and Duluth, all built and in operation, ready to haul 50,000,000 or possibly 100,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat into the already well-supplied markets of Duluth and Minneapolis—markets that always have been and can always be well supplied from the northwestern farms within the borders of the United States.

Is it a wonder that Mr. Hill is interested, exerting every possible influence within his great power to bring about the consummation of this pact? During the years of 50-cent and 60-cent wheat and those big visibles he urged us to "hold on," telling us that in a few years increased consumption would go abreast of production and that we would then be independent of Liverpool and get fair prices for our wheat. Mr. Hill, with his new purposes, has evidently forgotten this, while now that we are within reach of that goal, with prospect for fair prices for our wheat, the floodgates of Canada are to be opened and the larger portion of her $200,000,000 wheat crop dumped upon us, and he tells us now that it will be a good thing for us. * * *

Since the agreement was announced on the 26th of January wheat has fallen 11⅛ cents in Duluth and only 4 cents, or, to be exact, 3⅞ cents, at Winnipeg. To be exact:

	Duluth.	Winnipeg.
Jan. 26	$1.05⅞	$0.94⅛
Feb. 15	.94¾	.90⅛
Depreciation	.11⅛	.04

The commission houses make no bones about the fact that it is a result of this measure, which they all agree must pass.

The membership price on the Minneapolis board has advanced $750 in the last two weeks. All winter long the Minneapolis and Liverpool markets have been practically at the same level. Did Liverpool make the Minneapolis price?

A neighbor of mine who recently sold his farm just across the line from Portal tells me this morning that early in November, 1910, the elevator price of wheat at Estavan, his Canadian town, was 55 cents, while at Portal, on our side, the elevator price was 75 cents. He also tells me that farm land on our side was selling from $25 to $30 per acre, while just across the line the price was from $15 to $20. He sold his for $18. I believe this statement to be true. Jim Hill might explain the difference in the price of wheat between the two towns; he might also explain why, at the same time, the elevator price in the Red River Valley was 95 cents and only 75 cents at Portal, 250 miles west; but of course the Great Northern dividend must be paid.

Take down the bars, flood our country with 100,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat, or even 50,000,000 bushels, and see the result. Our farm price will then be the Liverpool price less the freight, commissions, and the loss from State dockages and mixing houses on the way.

As I understand it, the President is chiefly interested in lowering the cost of living. I do not know what per cent of the common people in the cities buy their bread of the bakers, but I feel sure it is a very large class. Will the lowering of the price of flour 25 cents, 50 cents, or even $1 per barrel make any difference in the price of a loaf of bread? Will the lowering of the price of barley make any difference in the cost of a glass of beer? No doubt the big millers, the big commission houses of Minneapolis, Duluth, and Chicago, the railroads, and the big packers will be benefited. If the President is so anxious to lower the cost of living, why retain the duty on flour and the beef products? Do the big millers and the big packers need this protection?

Must the farmer make all the sacrifice? And, in this connection, are the producers of beef, pork, and mutton getting too much for their stuff? Take the Chicago live-stock quotations of February 15 and you will find beeves quoted from $5 to $6.80 per hundredweight; western steers, $4.40 to $5.60; cows and heifers, $2.60 to $5.70; hogs, $6.75 to $7.30; sheep ewes and wethers, $2.75 to $4.50; lambs, $4.50 to $6.25. Deducting from these prices 50 cents to $1 per hundredweight for freight, shrinkage, and commission to get the net prices the farmer receives, it is a fair statement to say that the average price received by the farmers in the Mississippi Basin would not exceed 5 cents for their beef, 6 cents to 6½ cents for their hogs, and 3½ cents for their mutton. Is this too much? Are the farmers making more than a fair profit at these prices? Even the big packers are making a wholesale price on meats that is fair. From the Breeders' Gazette, of February 1, the last issue of which I have at hand, I find the following market price for beef cuts on the South Water Street Market, Chicago. This includes, mind you, the packers' profit and the South Water Street commission man's profit:

	No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
Ribs	12	11½	8½
Loins	14	13	10
Rounds	9	8½	8
Chucks	8	7½	6½
Plates	7	6½	5½

The same periodical tells me that the cold-storage plants are filled with mutton carcasses, which they find hard work to dispose of at from 5 cents to 8 cents dressed. Are these prices too high? No; 'tis the middle man who is causing the present high cost of living, and there you should look for relief. Pass this measure and you will not lower the cost of living to the consumer 10 cents a week. You will rob the farmer of millions, putting into the pocket of the middle man. You will lower the standard of farms, farm methods, and farm life, put one-fourth of our population back 25 years on the road of progress, open an avenue for millions of our accumulations in the development and upbuilding of a field in another land at the expense of our own, and when you are through you will find that one-third of our people have been robbed of their purchase power to buy the manufactured products of our land. But I fear the hand of Democracy is upon us! The Republican Party and its time-honored principles has been betrayed in the house of its friends. It seems incredible to us that 78 Republicans should have voted for this measure in the House. I am glad there are 88 left. I would like to grasp each one by the hand and congratulate him; and, sir, when free trade shall come equally to all of us, we will not complain, and when it does the other fellow may have time to reflect.

Jim Hill's speech in Chicago has stirred our people to the core. In my honest opinion, there is not a legitimate farmer in this State in favor of this measure. Our people appreciate the position you have taken and expect you and Senator McCUMBER to do your utmost in its defeat.

Sincerely, yours, R. T. KINGMAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 32264) for the relief of Frances Coburn, Charles Coburn, and the heirs of Mary Morrisette, deceased, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1207) thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 10397) for the relief of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1208) thereon.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 32674) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 1209); and

A bill (H. R. 32435) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 1210).

Mr. GUGGENHEIM, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 9915) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to more effectually suppress and prevent the spread of diseases of potatoes known as black scab and wart disease, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1211) thereon.

Mr. OLIVER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4107) for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Schiffer, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1212) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1648) for the relief of Catherine Ratchford, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1213) thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was refered the bill (H. R. 29157) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1214) thereon.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4183) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1216) thereon.

Mr. BRISTOW, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 9669) for the relief of Herbert Thompson, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1217) thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 16th instant, relative to the conveyance by the United States to the Government of Porto Rico of all the rights and title to the buildings and grounds of the insane asylum, known as the "Beneficencia Building," and the buildings and grounds known as the "San Juan Military Hospital," in San Juan, P. R., etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7746) to provide for the erection of a monument on the battle field of Gettysburg to commemorate the services of the United States Signal Corps during the War of the Rebellion, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1218) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 6479) granting an honorable discharge to Matthew Logan, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1219) thereon.

GATE OF HEAVEN CHURCH, BOSTON, MASS.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 9874) to refund to the Gate of Heaven Church, South Boston, Mass., the duty collected on stained-glass windows, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to refund to the Gate of Heaven Church, South Boston, Mass., $3,8[illegible]2.59, collected as duty on stained-glass windows.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury accompanying the report be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

Washington, February 14, 1911.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from your committee, dated the 9th instant, inclosing copies of Senate bill 9874, authorizing the refund to the Gate of Heaven Church, South Boston, Mass., of duty collected on certain stained-glass windows.

The facts in this case, as appear from the records of this department, are as follows:

The windows in question arrived in four consignments and were covered by four different entries, dated March 3, March 30, April 6, and April 12, 1909, respectively. They were described upon the invoices as follows:

"One painted glass window," "portion of a painted glass window," "20 pieces of pictorial glass," and "part of a pictorial glass window," respectively, and were entered as pictorial opalescent glass windows.

The merchandise was consigned to Messrs. Clough & Wardner, and upon the face of each entry there was a statement reading substantially as follows: "Works of art, gift to Gate of Heaven Church, and not suitable for use as windows, and not commercially known as painted or stained-glass windows, and not for use as such."

Upon examination by the appraiser at Boston the merchandise was described either as painted-glass windows or parts thereof, with the advisory classification dutiable at 45 per cent ad valorem under the provisions of paragraph 112 of the tariff act of 1897.

After the windows were placed in position the collector and naval officer at Boston inspected them, and believing that they were entitled to free entry as pictorial paintings on glass under paragraph 703 of the tariff act of 1897, the entries were ordered by the collector to be liquidated free of duty, and they were so liquidated, one on March 30, two on April 13, and one on April 26, 1909, respectively.

Subsequently on further consideration, and in view of the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Perry (146 U. S., 71), the collector, with the concurrence of the naval officer, ordered the reliquidation of the entries, and assessed duty thereon at the rate of 45 per cent ad valorem under paragraph 112 of the tariff act of 1897. This action was approved by the department December 23, 1909. (T. D. 30221.)

Against the reliquidation of the entries the importers filed protests, which protests are now pending before the Board of United States General Appraisers.

The claim for refund of duties is based upon information from the collector of customs at Boston, furnished prior to importation to Mr. Clough, one of the architects of the said church, to the effect that the said windows would be admitted free of duty.

Upon this point the collector of customs at Boston reports as follows: "Early in the year 1909 Mr. Clough, of the firm of Clough & Wardner, architects, called at this office with illustrations of windows and, after the matter had been thoroughly discussed, in view of his statement that said windows were not commercially known as painted or stained-glass windows, and were not intended for use as windows and not suitable for such use, my predecessor, Mr. Lyman, expressed the opinion that such windows should be admitted free of duty under paragraph 703 of the tariff act of July 24, 1897."

In the case of The United States v. Perry (146 U. S., 71) the court held that certain painted-glass windows "consisting of pieces of variously colored glass, cut into regular shapes and fastened together by strips of lead, and intended to be used for decorative purposes in churches * * *, placed upon the interior of the window frame and backed by an outer window of ordinary white glass," which were executed by artists of superior merit, were imported in fragments, and were commercially known as painted or stained-glass windows, were not entitled to free entry under the provisions of paragraph 757 of the act of 1890, which were identical with those of paragraph 703 of the act of 1897.

To the same effect are the decisions of the Board of United States General Appraisers in Treasury decision 10903 of March 7, 1891; Treasury decision 11711 of August 13, 1891; Treasury decision 13617 of December 9, 1892; and Treasury decision 28690 of January 15, 1908.

If, upon this state of facts, Congress sees fit to grant relief, this department perceives no objection thereto.

Respectfully, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GILMER, TEX.

Mr. CULBERSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back with an amendment the bill (S. 10095) to provide for the acquisition of a site on which to erect a public building at Gilmer, Tex., and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment in line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "six," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site on which to erect a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office in Gilmer, Tex., at a cost not to exceed the sum of $6,000.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL B. RYAN.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Claims I report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 19756) for the relief of Michael B. Ryan, son and administrator de bonis non of John S. Ryan, deceased, and I submit a report (No. 1206) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from South Carolina to the report.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay Michael B. Ryan, son and administrator de bonis non of John S. Ryan, deceased, late of Charleston, S. C., or to his legal representatives, $14,582.04, to be taken and accepted as a full and final release and discharge of his claim against the United States as found by the Court of Claims under the act approved March 12, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLEMENT A. LOUNSBERRY.

Mr. DIXON. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back with an amendment the bill (S. 8047) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to muster Clement A. Lounsberry as colonel of the Twentieth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and I submit a report (No. 1205) thereon.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It simply gives the beneficiary the rank without emoluments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the fact that the Twentieth Michigan Volunteer Infantry remained continuously from a date prior to March 11, 1865, to May 30, 1865, below the minimum number fixed by law to entitle it to a colonel, and that a commission of that grade and organization was not issued to Clement A. Lounsberry until June 8, 1865, shall be no bar to the application in the case of said Lounsberry, or of anyone claiming under him, of the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 4, 1897, entitled "An act to provide for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer forces."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Clement A. Lounsberry."

JAMES JONES.

Mr. DIXON. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9221) for the relief of James Jones, and I submit a report (No. 1204) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania to the report.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, James Jones shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company E, Thirty-third Regiment New York Veteran Volunteers, on the 2d day of May, 1863, but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT TEACHERS' RETIREMENT FUND.

Mr. BURKETT. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 5912) to establish and disburse a public-school teachers' retirement fund for the District of Columbia, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 1215) thereon. I wish to state that at the earliest moment—to-morrow, perhaps, if I can get recognition—I shall call up the bill for consideration and passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 31596) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and I submit a report (No. 1220) thereon. I give notice that I shall endeavor to call up the bill to-morrow or at the first opportunity thereafter for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

MOBILE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 31538) to authorize the Pensacola, Mobile & New Orleans Railroad Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across the Mobile River and its navigable channels on a line opposite the city of Mobile, Ala. The bill was returned to the House of Representatives for the signature of the Speaker; but it was discovered that a serious mistake had been made and that it was necessary to recall it in order that it might be amended. Therefore the votes by which the bill was read the third time and passed by the Senate were reconsidered. The bill is now on the table, and I ask unanimous consent that it be taken up in order that I may offer an amendment to it and that it may be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The votes by which the bill was read the third time and passed have been reconsidered. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Pensacola, Mobile & New Orleans Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, operate, and maintain a drawbridge and its approaches thereto, across the Mobile River, at a point in the county of Mobile suitable to the interests of navigation not farther south than the north bank of the Chickasaw Creek at its mouth; to be approved by the Secretary of War in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the act of Congress approved March 26, 1908, entitled "An act to authorize the Pensacola, Mobile & New Orleans Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across the Mobile River and its navigable channels on a line approximately east of the north boundary line of the city of Mobile, Ala.," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, and repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the Pensacola, Mobile & New Orleans Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across the Mobile River and its navigable channels above the city of Mobile, Ala."

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. SMOOT. On the 13th instant, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] presented a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture to the legislative committee of the National Grange, of Concord, N. H., relative to the proposed Canadian reciprocal agreement, and the letter was referred to the Committee on Printing for action. I report from that committee the letter and move that it be printed as a Senate document (S. Doc. No. 829).

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On the 14th instant the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] presented a letter signed by ex-Gov. Bachelder, of New Hampshire, and requested that it be printed as a Senate document, and it was referred to the Committee on Printing for action. I report from that committee the letter and move that it be printed as a Senate document (S. Doc. No. 828).

The motion was agreed to.

POLICEMEN AND FIREMEN'S RELIEF FUND.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate ordered to a third reading and passed the bill (S. 288) for the creation of the police and firemen's relief fund, to provide for the retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such retirement, and for other purposes. I ask that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered, and the request for the return of the bill from the House of Representatives will be agreed to, in the absence of objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ETIENNE CHAPPUIS, DECEASED.

On motion of Mr. BURNHAM, it was Ordered, That there be withdrawn from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying S. 5553, a bill for the relief of the heirs at law of Etienne Chappuis, deceased, and S. 7616, a bill referring the claim of the owners of the steamers Harry Brown and Stella Moren to the Court of Claims, both of the Sixty-first Congress, no adverse reports having been made thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—EMMA C. YOUNG.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Emma C. Young, accompanying Senate bill 8287, Sixty-first Congress, second session, subject to the provision of clause 2 of Rule XXX.

THE THIRD DEGREE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 362), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the select committee of the Senate appointed by the Vice President under authority of a resolution of the Senate adopted on April 30, 1910, to inquire into and report to the Senate the facts as to the alleged practice of administering what is known as the "third degree" ordeal by officers or employees of the United States for the purpose of extorting from those charged with crime statements and confessions, and also as to any other practices tending to prevent or impair the fair and impartial administration of the criminal law, is hereby continued after the 4th of March, 1911, and during the next session of Congress, with the same powers and duties as described in said resolution.

ELK IN WYOMING.

Mr. CURTIS. I present an article relative to the condition of the elk in the State of Wyoming. I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

There being no objection, the article was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A MILE OF STARVING ELK.

Out of the West there comes from the famous Jacksons Hole country a plain, unvarnished tale of truth told by a plain, unvarnished man of the mountains, in which it is made apparent that all of these things have happened and are happening now in Wyoming. And to back up that story, this man brings the evidence of the camera.

Thirty thousand elk are wintering in the Jacksons Hole country in Wyoming. They are not wary or timorous, these elk. They do not shun the haunts of man. On the contrary, they come up to his doors. For they are starving, and the State of Wyoming is feeding them $5,000 worth of hay in an effort to keep them alive until the snow is gone and the growths of springtime will furnish them with the natural food which a hard winter has taken from them.

Thirty thousand starving elk!

It sounds like one of the tall stories that westerners reserve for eastern consumption, but it isn't. The camera doesn't lie unless it is tampered with, and Ben Sheffield, of Moran, Wyo., who made the eloquent pictures on this page, did nothing to his instrument that a good photographer should not do. He just went down to Jackson, smuggled himself down in a load of hay, and drove out into the valley around the town.

The elk came trotting around the load. Thousands of them came, until the wagon was the center of an ocean of brown bodies and tossing heads. Then Sheffield turned loose his films, and the pictures are the result. After the picture taking the hay was pitched off to the waiting animals, which struggled and fought for a mouthful much like the ordinary Holstein cows of local fame.

Aside from the deplorable circumstances of inevitable starvation for a large number of the elk, the mere figures which develop in telling the tale of the Jacksons Hole elk are such as to startle the average American in whose ears is constantly dinned the song that all big game is going the way of the buffalo, and that the deer, the moose, the mountain sheep, and the elk, the largest species of American wild game, soon will have vanished from the face of the earth and become, like the buffalo, a subject for lamentation and national shame.

Whatever may have happened to the elk in other portions of the country, it is evident that in Wyoming it is far from the possibility of immediate extinction. A glance at the figures incident to the situation as it exists at present will show that the elk still is with us in numbers to satisfy even the most hoggish sportsman:

Sixty thousand elk are wintering in Jacksons Hole.

Thirty thousand of them are being fed by the State.

Twenty-five thousand of these 30,000 would starve but for this aid from man.

Five thousand of them will starve in spite of it.

Twenty-five thousand of them will be saved by feeding.

Fifty-five thousand elk will be alive in Jacksons Hole when the snow leaves.

Unless an epidemic of disease should break out among the herds and carry them away by thousands, Wyoming next fall will continue to be a paradise for the hunter of big game.

The conditions as they exist near Jackson this last winter are without precedent. It is doubtful if the eyes of white men ever beheld as many elk herded together in one locality. Possibly at some long past time, when elk and buffalo roamed the prairie without fear of smokeless powder or telescope sights, Indians may have seen as many or more, but since civilization set up its tepee near Jacksons Lake it is certain that no such numbers ever congregated at a single time for man's inspection.

The elk, unlike the departed buffalo, does not love to live together in countless multitudes. Although, like all members of the deer family, it is possessed of the herding instinct, it prefers to dwell in regiments rather than in great armies. Under normal conditions the elk finds a couple of thousands of its numbers about right for a community, and this number forms a band which picks its feeding ground and lives contentedly by itself. But when a hard winter sets in all bands set forth for the regions where the snow is light and the feed plentiful, and in Wyoming this happens to be in the Jacksons Hole country along Flat Creek.

Jacksons Hole is a valley 60 miles long and 10 miles wide, which lies about 60 miles south of Yellowstone National Park. Completely surrounded by the Teton, Big Horn, and Gros Ventre mountain ranges, it is the one section in that region which is well protected against the killing weather of a Wyoming winter. Particularly is it protected in the southern end along Flat Creek. The temperature is higher there and the snowfall lighter than in any other section of the State. As a result the country has become the natural wintering ground of the elk.

This winter was one of the hardest that Wyoming ever has had, and that is saying much. All over the State the snow lay 4 feet deep, save in the southern end of Jacksons Hole, where a foot or 18 inches was the average. The cold and the snow driving them from their chosen feeding grounds in the mountains to the north and west, the various big bands of elk one by one gave up the fight to remain in their old winter homes and struck out to the southward, toward the protected hay country along Flat Creek.

Over the long, cold trails, breaking through breast-deep snow in the foothills, dying by scores in prairie blizzards, they came by the thousands, all heading for the same destination. Through the snow-choked mountain passes leading into the valley they fought their way, thin, weak, and starving, panting for a sight of the valley below. Nearing the valley their trails converged; one band joined another, which in time drew to it other recruits until in the end there was a continual stream of starving elk pouring over the mountains, hurrying desperately southward to where they would find food and protection.

Then nature played one of those ironical little jokes with which it loves to remind its children, animal or human, of their helplessness and dependence. The snow was light in Jacksons Hole, sure enough. But at the beginning of the winter a few warm days had been followed by a sudden killing spell of cold. The first 6 inches of snow melting under the sun of the warm days, had immediately been frozen by the sudden cold. On top of this fell about a foot of soft, white snow. The starving creatures, rushing on to the feeding ground, where before there always had been food in plenty, scraped through the top snow and struck their sharp hoofs against a 6-inch layer of solid ice.

Beneath the ice there was grass in plenty. It might as well have not been there at all. The elk could not reach it. They pawed vainly at the hard surface, then wandered about, frantically searching for willows or other shrubs or dropping in their tracks according entirely to their condition.

Sixty thousand of them came rushing into the valley. Thirty thousand of them remained scattered in small herds along the northern end and were found along the rivers and in the surrounding mountains. Thirty thousand rushed to the valley's southern end, stripped the willows along Flat Creek to the ground in a few days, and then looked dumbly around, with starvation for nine-tenths of their number staring them in the face. Majestic antlered bulls bellowed their final pang of hunger and fell helpless into the snow beside the weak cow or calf. The white face of the valley became dotted here and there with little brown heaps. Flat Creek became choked with lumps of similar description.

From far away these lumps looked like rocks; on closer inspection they became dead elk with the bones sticking through the hide. There were hundreds of them within a few days. There would have been thousands in a few weeks. Then the hand of man took a part in the unequal combat against nature.

In the middle of February the settlers in Jacksons Hole became alarmed at the terrible fate awaiting 25,000 of the noblest game animals of the West. It was certain that this number would perish unless they were fed and fed at once. Seven hundred dollars was raised among the settlers for the purchase of hay, and an appeal made to the legislature for help for the starving elk. One week later State Game Warden Nowlan came into the town of Jackson with the news that $5,000 had been appropriated by the State for the care of the elk during the winter. The legislature had acted promptly, and the elk were saved.

In their semidomestication the animals roam to within easy gunshot of town, and on March 17, the day during which Mr. Sheffield made the pictures, an excited citizen of Jackson came running to the hotel with a demand for the "fellow with the camera."

"Come on with me," he cried when Sheffield appeared. "I'll show you a chance for a picture that will beat them all."

Hurriedly he led the way to the rear of a grocery store. A noble bull elk was nosing around among a pile of tin cans, searching for a stray morsel of canned corn or tomato.

Sheffield set up his camera. Then he took it down without making exposure.

"What's the matter?" queried the guide. "Can't you get him?"

"Yes," said Sheffield, "but if I took that picture and showed it for a wild elk, every man who saw it would call me a liar. So what's the use?"

Thus the world lost a pictorial record of one feature of a condition which never existed before in the wild animal world, and which probably never will exist again. For even Jackson, Wyo., will hardly ever have another 30,000 elk coming to its doors and begging to be fed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

S. 8736. An act providing for the releasing of the claim of the United States Government to arpent lot No. 44, in the old city of Pensacola, Fla.;

S. 10690. An act providing for aids to navigation along the Livingstone Channel, Detroit River, Mich.;

S. 10757. An act to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904; and

S. J. Res. 140. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Little Rock, Ark., in May, 1911.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 21613. An act for the relief of Francis E. Rosier; and

H. R. 23695. An act to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the northern district of Mississippi at the city of Clarksdale, in said district.

LAND IN PENSACOLA, FLA.

Mr. FLETCHER. A few days ago the Senate passed a bill providing for the releasing of the claim of the United States Government to a certain lot in the old city of Pensacola, Fla. The House has passed a similar bill and it is now before the Senate. It is the bill (H. R. 31987) providing for the releasing of the claim of the United States Government to arpent lot No. 44, in the old city of Pensacola, Fla. I ask the Chair to lay the bill before the Senate, with a view to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill indicated, for which the Senator from Florida asks present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS SEALS.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to ask unanimous consent to call up a House bill to correct the record of a soldier, and the reason I ask it at this crowded time is because there is a bill pending in the House, and we have to correct his record here before the bill can be acted on there. It is the bill (H. R. 16268) for the relief of Thomas Seals.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pension shall accrue from the date the name of said Thomas Seals was dropped from the pension rolls to the date of the approval of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Thomas Seals shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as private in Company I, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on the 6th day of August, 1862: Provided, That no pension shall accrue from the date the name of said Thomas Seals was dropped from the pension rolls to the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES JUDGES.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 9693) to provide for the payment of the traveling and other expenses of United States circuit and district judges when holding court at places other than where they reside.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "their," to strike out "actual and necessary expenses of travel and maintenance" and insert "necessary expenses of travel, and their reasonable expenses, not to exceed $10 per day, actually incurred for maintenance," so as to read:

That hereafter the circuit and district judges of the United States, and the judges of the district courts of the United States in Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, shall be allowed and paid their necessary expenses of travel, and their reasonable expenses, not to exceed $10 per day, actually incurred for maintenance, consequent upon their attending court in pursuance of law at any place other than their official place of residence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PASSED ASST. PAYMASTER EDWIN M. HACKER.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 10476) for the relief of Passed Asst. Paymaster Edwin M. Hacker.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment in line 7, after the word "Navy," to strike out the remainder of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH UNITED STATES INFANTRY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the resolution (S. Res. 358) submitted by Mr. BULKELEY yesterday, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to transmit to the Senate a list of names of soldiers of Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, recommended as eligible for reenlistment by the "court of inquiry relative to the affray at Brownsville, Tex.," who have applied for reenlistment or have reenlisted under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1909, and special orders of the War Department, numbered Special Order 79, April 7, 1909, convening court of inquiry.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. BURROWS. I notice on the Calendar of Business that—it is agreed by unanimous consent, and upon the request of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER], that on Wednesday—immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, he may address the Senate upon the question of his election thereto.

I desire to state to the Senate that after that address and the remarks of any other Senator who may desire to address the Senate it is my purpose to call for a vote upon the question involved.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before adjournment?

Mr. PENROSE. Before adjournment?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am glad to hear that, Mr. President.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to certain charges relating to the election of WILLIAM LORIMER, a Senator from the State of Illinois, by the Legislature of that State, made in obedience to Senate resolution 264.

Mr. BEVERIDGE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE resumed his speech. After having spoken in all about four hours and a half, with interruptions,

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will inquire of the Senator from Indiana whether he feels like continuing this evening. He has been speaking for a long time. I know the Senator must be very much exhausted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I feel perfectly strong, but I doubt very much whether at this time of the night, with what I have before me, there having been a good deal of interruption, I can conclude. If satisfactory, I can go on after the unanimous consent to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. What would be the Senator's preference in regard to the matter?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think, with the testimony remaining, and the law also, as I have finished with only two witnesses and gotten into a third, and there are many others, it is probably impossible at this late hour to conclude to-night, and I can go on after the unanimous consent to-morrow.

[For Mr. BEVERIDGE's entire speech see Senate proceedings of Friday, February 24.]

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator to withhold that motion for a moment. I yield the floor now with the understanding, of course, that I shall conclude my remarks to-morrow after the unanimous consent, of which notice has been given.

Mr. KEAN. I do not understand the Senator. After the morning business?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it would be better for the Senator from Indiana to conclude after the morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire renew his motion?

Mr. GALLINGER. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will withhold the motion for a moment——

Mr. GALLINGER. I withhold the motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to know if unanimous consent has been given to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to proceed to-morrow after the time consumed under the other unanimous-consent agreement which was made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No request for unanimous consent has been placed before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent, with the acquiescence of the Senator from Indiana, that he be permitted to conclude his remarks to-morrow after the time has been consumed under the unanimous consent previously granted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire withhold his motion?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withhold my motion, Mr. President. I will, however, make the suggestion that I do not think it would be quite the fair thing for the Senator from Indiana to close the discussion. I hope that there will be an opportunity after the morning hour for the Senator to conclude. I think we can arrange that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The only trouble about it, Mr. President—and that is why I was trying to conclude to-day—is that the very unusual thing was done the other day by the sitting Member of getting unanimous consent to address the Senate immediately after the morning business. As we all know, a unanimous-cousent agreement can not be set aside by a subsequent unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So that if I go on at all to-morrow, I suppose that I can not help going on after one unanimous consent has been exhausted. I regret that, and was surprised at it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, Mr. President, I wish to say, if I understood the Senator from New Hampshire correctly with reference to the suggestion that the sitting Member should close the debate, that I do not understand that that unanimous consent was granted to cover that proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Had it been, I should have certainly objected. I wish to say on that point, Mr. President, that since the sitting Member has not seen fit to offer his testimony in this case as a witness before the investigating committee it seems to me that he ought not to be permitted—and I for one should object to his being permitted—to offer his testimony, as it were, in writing by giving him the opportunity to conclude this debate, without the chance being given to the Senate or to some Member of the Senate of thoroughly reviewing what he may submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that other Senators desire to speak.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I will say for the information of the Senator from Wisconsin—who is entirely right in his position—that the request for unanimous consent, of course, did not involve closing the debate or otherwise; but merely that the Senator from Illinois should address the Senate immediately after the routine morning business. That unanimous-consent agreement, like all unanimous-consent agreements, unfortunately, can not be changed, even if we were to try to change it, even by unanimous consent. Thereafter, Mr. President, I have no doubt at least that there are many Senators who will ask that a vote shall be taken before adjournment on that day or at some convenient time. So the only thing that remains for me is to go on to-morrow, after the unanimous consent already given has been exhausted; and it was for that I understood the Senator from Wisconsin asked unanimous consent for me. Then any Senator will have an opportunity, which nobody can cut off, of saying what he pleases.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this matter——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has asked unanimous consent that the Senator from Indiana be allowed to proceed to conclude his remarks to-morrow upon the termination of the existing unanimous-consent agreement already entered on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me it is unnecessary to give unanimous consent. The Senator from Indiana can do that, and we could not foreclose him if we tried.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that is true; but I was rather surprised at the unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have given notice that I may occupy a few minutes; but I will take my chances to-morrow or on some other day. I will not be in the way of the Senator from Indiana, I will say to him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am sure of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. So, I think, Mr. President, that I will renew my motion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, I take it for granted, if the Senator will withhold his motion for a moment, that there is no unanimous consent going to be granted, although having been granted to the sitting Member I do not see why it should not be granted to a member of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I might ask it for myself, then.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is true. I take it, then, that it is understood, at least there is an agreement among us—a gentlemen's agreement—that after the expiration of the unanimous consent to-morrow—that is, after the address of the sitting Member—I shall be permitted to conclude my remarks.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; we can not prevent the Senator from doing that. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 574) to authorize J. W. Vance, L. L. Allen, C. F. Helwig, and H. V. Worley, of Pierce City, Mo., to construct a dam across the James River in Stone County, Mo., and to divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the said river to create electric power, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10430. An act to authorize the establishment of a marine biological station on the Gulf coast of the State of Florida;

H. R. 18696. An act to provide for a suitable memorial to the memory of the North American Indian;

H. R. 18893. An act relating to the title of lands inherited by minor heirs of Indian allottees, and sold by order of court, and for other purposes;

H. R. 31651. An act providing for adjustment of conflict between placer and lode locators of phosphate lands;

H. R. 31652. An act to authorize the Central Vermont Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the arm of Lake Champlain between the towns of Alburg and Swanton, Vt.;

H. R. 32170. An act for the protection of game in the Territory of Alaska; and

H. R. 32220. An act to authorize the Board of Supervisors of the town of High Landing, Red Lake County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red Lake River.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President of the United States to return to the House the bill (H. R. 25081) for the relief of Helen S. Hogan, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing and binding, in the form of eulogies, of 17,100 copies of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of Baron von Steuben in Washington, December 7, 1910, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 26150. An act to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of the Charles River in the State of Massachusetts;

H. J. Res. 146. Joint resolution creating a commission to investigate and report on the advisability of the establishment of permanent maneuvering grounds, camp of inspection, rifle and artillery ranges for troops of the United States at or near the Chickamauga and Chattanooga Military Park, and to likewise report as to certain lands in the State of Tennessee proposed to be donated to the United States for said purposes;

S. 10757. An act to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904;

S. 8736. An act providing for the releasing of the claim of the United States Government to arpent lot No. 44, in the old city of Pensacola, Fla.;

S. 10690. An act providing for aids to navigation along the Livingstone Channel, Detroit River, Mich.;

S. J. Res. 140. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Little Rock, Ark., in May, 1911;

S. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of the message of the President, together with the report of the agent of the United States, in the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries Arbitration at The Hague; and

S. [illegible]. An act to authorize the Argenta Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 31652. An act to authorize the Central Vermont Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the arm of Lake Champlain between the towns of Alburg and Swanton, Vt.; and

H. R. 32220. An act to authorize the board of supervisors of the town of High Landing, Red Lake County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red Lake River.

H. R. 10430. An act to authorize the establishment of a marine biological station on the Gulf coast of the State of Florida, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

H. R. 18696. An act to provide a suitable memorial to the memory of the North American Indian, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

H. R. 18893. An act relating to the title of lands inherited by minor heirs of Indian allottees and sold by order of court, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 31651. An act providing for adjustment of conflict between placer and lode locators of phosphate lands, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 32170. An act for the protection of game in the Territory of Alaska, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

HELEN S. HOGAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 61) of the House of Representatives, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 25081) for the relief of Helen S. Hogan.

STATUE OF BARON VON STEUBEN.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 58) of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed and bound in the form of eulogies, with accompanying illustrations, 17,100 copies of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of Baron von Steuben in Washington, December 7, 1910, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 to be delivered to the National German-American Alliance for such distribution as said alliance may desire to make, and the remaining 100 copies shall be bound in full morocco and distributed through the Department of State to the descendants of Baron von Steuben and the speakers who took part in said celebration.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE AMOS L. ALLEN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 17, 1911.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. AMOS L. ALLEN, a Representative from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Members of the House (with such Members of the Senate as may be joined) be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Maine will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 363) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. AMOS L. ALLEN, late a Representative from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 22, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 21, 1911.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who has made us and crowned us with glory and honor, filling us with an immortal soul to spring over the abyss of death, and bade it wear the garment of eternal day, we bless Thee for the endearing ties of love and friendship that time nor space can sever, but when death comes and takes from us one of our dear ones the heart is bowed in sorrow and grief. But we bless Thee for the angels of faith and hope which come whispering to the soul—

> Be still, sad heart, and cease repining,
> For behind the clouds is the sun still shining;
> Thy fate is the common fate of all,
> Into each life some rain must fall,
> Some days must be dark and dreary.

Once more our hearts are touched in the removal yb death of one of the Members of this House, who, though a modest, unobtrusive man, yet with single fidelity to duty he filled acceptably all trusts and has passed on. Bless his colleagues, friends, and those who are bound to him by the ties of kinship, and help them to look forward with faith in the eternal verities in Thy Fatheriy love and care. And all praise we will give to Thee. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 17, was read and approved.

HELEN S. HOGAN.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution (H. Con. Res. 61), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States be and is hereby requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 25081) for the relief of Helen S. Hogan.

The question was taken and the resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TAX UPON WHITE PHOSPHORUS MATCHES, ETC.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to submit a privileged report on the bill H. R. 30022.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a privileged report. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 30022) to provide for a tax upon white phosphorus matches, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 32170) for the protection of game in the Territory of Alaska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful to kill grouse, ptarmigan, shore birds, and waterfowl from September 1 to March 1, both inclusive, anywhere in the Territory of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think there should be some amendment to conform to the original enactment pertaining to the time when these grouse and waterfowl can be killed.

Mr. MANN. It does. It is from September 1 to March 1.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It does.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 21613. An act for the relief of Francis E. Rosier; and

H. R. 23695. An act to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the northern district of Mississippi at the city of Clarksdale, in said district.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 10574. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the withdrawal from public entry of lands needed for townsite purposes in connection with irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes," approved April 16, 1906.

MEMORIAL TO THE NORTH AMERICAN INDIAN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18696) to provide a suitable memorial to the memory of the North American Indian.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be erected, without expense to the United States Government, by Mr. Rodman Wanamaker, of New York City, and others, on a United States reservation in the harbor of New York, in the State of New York, a suitable memorial to the memory of the North American Indian.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act a commission consisting of the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the United States Senate for the Sixty-first Congress, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives for the Sixty-first Congress, the Secretary of the Department of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General of the United States, and Mr. Robert C. Ogden, of the city of New York, shall be created, with full authority to select a site in the harbor of New York, and a suitable design, and to contract for and superintend the construction of the said memorial.

The following committee amendments were read:

Strike out the word "shall," in line 3, section 1 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

After the words "harbor of New York, in the State of New York," in line 6 of said section 1 of the bill, insert the words "upon a site to be selected by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy."

In line 11 of section 2 of the bill strike out the words "for the Sixty-first Congress."

In lines 12 and 13 of section 2 of the bill strike out the words "for the Sixty-first Congress, the Secretary of the Department of State."

In lines 14 and 15 of section 2 of the bill, on page 1, and line 1 on page 2, strike out the words "the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General of the United States."

In lines 2 and 3 of section 2 of the bill, page 2, strike out the words "a site in the harbor of New York and," so that the bill as amended will read as follows.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if that carries an appropriation.

Mr. HAWLEY. It does not.

Mr. GOULDEN. It does not carry any appropriation, and I have a letter from Mr. Wanamaker to the effect that he does not expect it and never will ask it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third, was read the third time, and passed.

CHINESE STUDENTS AT WEST POINT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 131, authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point two Chinese subjects, to be designated hereafter by the Government of China.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit two Chinese subjects, to be designated hereafter by the Government of China, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said Chinese subjects shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give their utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction: And provided further, That in the case of the said Chinese subjects the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 shall be suspended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be passed.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire just for a minute to make an inquiry in reference to this resolution. I know that it has been usual, since I have been a Member of Congress, in some instances, to grant this privilege to foreign nations, but I have never thought the policy was a good one. We, by our own statutes, limit the number of cadets at our Military Academy which can be educated there. I know many American citizens would be glad of the opportunity to pay for that privilege, as foreign nations are permitted to pay, and it can not be done. The only way it can be done now is by the designation of Senators, or Representatives, or by the President. Now, the Members of this House, and Senators, have not enough appointments at their disposal to satisfy the demands of our people to have their sons educated in this academy. I repeat that I know of men with abundant means who would be glad to have their sons educated there and to pay for it. They are not permitted to do it. Still, I am not disposed to interfere with any policy of the Government on this line. I merely want to call attention to it. As far as I am concerned, I do not agree with that policy which permits a foreign nation to enjoy this right and privilege which is not accorded to our own citizens.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The resolution states there shall be no expense incurred by this Government by reason of the admission of these two cadets, but the Government will be called upon to supply quarters; and if we allow every nation of the world to send two cadets to our Military Academy we will have to extend our quarters, and the Government will have to pay the expense of doing that. Hence it looks to me like, indirectly, if not directly, it will necessarily entail an extra expense upon the Government if these cadets are allowed entrance into the academy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will remember that Congress would always have the right to draw the line whenever it became a burden to the Government to provide quarters. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of State are both exceedingly anxious that this resolution shall pass, for reasons which I am sure the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] will appreciate when he stops to think. It does not entail any expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. MACON. Except in the indirect manner which I have mentioned.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have adopted the rule almost always of granting to any nation requesting it, especially the South and Central American Republics, the right to send cadets to West Point to be educated at the expense of their Government, but using the facilities at West Point without in any way interfering with the proper and legitimate operation of that great school to educate officers for the service of the Nation.

It is an act of comity just now, especially in view of our present relation with China. That Government is exceedingly anxious to be accorded this privilege, and the executive departments, especially the Secretary of War and the Secretary of State, believe that this measure should pass at once in order to show our friendship toward that nation. I can see no harm that can come from it. It is an act of friendship to a friendly nation. It is something that has never been denied to any nation up to this time, and to deny it now to China would be virtually a statement or notice of hostility to that nation. It seems to me that when it is considered that they pay all the expense, and that it is a place that we can not fill under our law, there should be no objection. We would have to change our entire law in order to fill up our present facilities there, as suggested, by letting our sons go there at personal expense. At present we have one cadet from each congressional district in the United States and one from each Territory and the District of Columbia, and——

Mr. MONDELL. And one appointed by each Senator.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and 40 from the Nation at large, appointed by the President of the United States. I do not see how we could extend the number of cadets beyond what we have at present without giving more to the President. It would not be possible to allow citizens to send their children there to be educated, because it would require buildings of 100 times the capacity we have at the institution now, and of course that would not do. Congress here gives specific authority only when the State Department and the War Department unite in requesting that that be done. I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I want it distinctly understood that if I should object it would not be because of any hostile feeling that I have for China, because I have none. It would be purely in the interest of an economic administration of the affairs of this Government to put a limit to matters of this kind. But, under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman thinking it might be considered by China an act of hostility toward her if this Government were to refuse the admittance of these cadets into the academy, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was read a third time and passed.

MINOR HEIRS OF INDIAN ALLOTTEES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 18893) relating to the title of lands inherited by minor heirs of Indian allottees and sold by order of court, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where inherited lands of minor heirs of Indian allottees in Oklahoma have been sold and conveyed at guardian's sale, or by any Indian agent of the United States, assuming to act as guardian of such minor heir, for the proportion of the appraised value required by the laws of the said Territory or State, and such conveyance has been approved by a court of said Territory or State having jurisdiction under the laws thereof to appoint guardians for minors; and the conveyance thereof, in pursuance of such sale, has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and payments for said lands, in accordance with the terms of such sale, has been made, such sale and conveyance shall be valid, notwithstanding any defect or irregularity in the court proceedings authorizing, directing, or approving such sale.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Insert after the word "allottees," in line 4, the words "of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe and Kiowa Reservations."

Insert after the word "have," in line 4, the word "heretofore."

Strike out in line 5 the words "or by any" and insert in lieu thereof the words "by an Army officer as."

Add at the end of the bill, after the last word, "sale," the following: "Where such defect or irregularity is due solely to the fact that an Army officer as Indian agent was assuming to act as guardian of the minor heir or heirs."

The bill as amended will read as follows:

"That in all cases where inherited lands of minor heirs of Indian allottees of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe and Kiowa Reservations in Oklahoma have heretofore been sold and conveyed at guardian's sale by an Army officer as Indian agent of the United States, assuming to act as guardian of such minor heir, for the proportion of the appraised value required by the laws of said Territory or State, and such conveyance has been approved by a court of said Territory or State having jurisdiction under the laws thereof to appoint guardians for minors; and the conveyance thereof, in pursuance of such sale, has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and payment for said lands, in accordance with the terms of such sale, has been made, such sale and conveyance shall be valid, notwithstanding any defect or irregularity in the court proceedings authorizing, directing, or approving such sale, where such defect or irregularity is due solely to the fact that an Army officer as Indian agent was assuming to act as guardian of the minor heir or heirs."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MARINE BIOLOGICAL STATION ON GULF COAST, FLORIDA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10430) to authorize the establishment of a marine biological station on the Gulf coast of the State of Florida.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to establish a marine biological station on the Gulf of Mexico at a point on the coast of the State of Florida, to be selected by him in said State: Provided, That the State of Florida donates and transfers, free of cost, to the Government of the United States necessary land and water rights upon which may be erected such buildings, wharves, and other structures as may be necessary for the proper equipment of said station, such biological station, buildings, wharves, and other structures not to cost exceeding $50,000.

SEC. 2. That the professors, instructors, and students of the several land-grant, agricultural, and mechanical colleges of the United States shall be admitted to said station to pursue such investigation in fish culture and biology as may be practicable, without cost to the Government, under such rules and regulations as may be from time to time prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

REMISSION OF CHINESE INDEMNITY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 102) to amend the resolution of May 25, 1908, providing for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MONUMENT ON BATTLEFIELD OF GETTYSBURG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23530) to provide for the erection of a monument on the battlefield of Gettysburg to commemorate the services of the United States Signal Corps during the War of the Rebellion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PURCHASE OF OLDROYD COLLECTION OF LINCOLN RELICS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 28985) for the purchase of the Oldroyd collection of Lincoln relics, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

REAPPRAISEMENT AND SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS AT PORT ANGELES, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 8241) providing for the reappraisement and sale of certain lands in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PROOF OF DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 10318) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant further extensions of time within which to make proof of desert-land entries.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the substitute in lieu of the original bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, grant to the entryman under the desert-land laws in the counties of Benton, Yakima, and Klickitat, in the State of Washington, a further extension of the time within which they are required to make final proof, provided such entryman shall, by his corroborated affidavit, filed in the land office of the district where such land is located, show to the satisfaction of the Secretary that because of unavoidable delay in the construction of irrigation works intended to convey water to the land embraced in his entry, he is, without fault on his part, the time limited therefor; but such extension shall not be granted for a period of more than three years, and this act shall not affect contests initiated for a valid existing reason.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that at the bottom of page 2, after the word "part," there is an omission of two lines, and there ought to be inserted the language which is found on lines 8 and 9 on page 2:

Unable to make proof of the reclamation and cultivation of said lands as required by law within.

In printing the bill there was evidently an omission of two lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

Insert at the end of line 21 the following:

"Unable to make proof of the reclamation and cultivation of said lands as required by law within."

Mr. MONDELL. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The substitute as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. MANN. There should be an amendment to the amended title by adding at the end of the new title the words "in the counties of Benton, Yakima, and Klickitat, Wash."

By unanimous consent, the title was amended so as to read: "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant further extensions of time within which to make proof on desert-land entries in the counties of Benton, Yakima, and Klickitat, Wash."

MILITARY RECORDS OF CERTAIN SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 276) modifying certain laws relating to the military records of certain soldiers and sailors.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in all laws approved during the year 1910, and having for their object the removal of disabilities accruing from defective records in the military or naval service of the United States, the words "Provided, That, other than as above set forth, no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to or by reason of the passage of this act" shall not prohibit or prevent the granting of a pension on an application made after the approval of this act, and accruing only from the date of said application.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the effect of that change.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. That proviso was drafted originally to apply to a land case, where the soldier only wished to prove up a homestead, with no idea of getting a pension.

The Committee on Military Affairs has placed all the restrictions possible about the correction of military records, desiring to give no larger scope or possibility of getting anything out of the Treasury. In certain cases the committee believed that the men were entitled to pensions, but the Pension Office have held that the proviso referred to would prevent a pension being granted. There are only 20 or 30 cases of that sort. They were all carefully considered before the bills became laws, and the committee believe it to be only fair and just that this joint resolution should pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER, ARGENTA, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 10431) to authorize the Argenta Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Argenta Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River from a point in the city of Little Rock, Ark., suitable to the interests of navigation, to some point in the city of Argenta, on the north bank of said river, in the county of Pulaski, State of Arkansas, said bridge to be for the purpose of the passage of the street car traffic carried on by said company or under its authority, and also, at the option of said company, its successors and assigns, to be used for the passage of wagons, vehicles, interurban cars, animals, and persons on foot and in vehicles, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, except as to section 3 of said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE CHAMPLAIN, ALBURG, VT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 31652) to authorize the Central Vermont Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the arm of Lake Champlain between the towns of Alburg and Swanton, Vt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Central Vermont Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Vermont, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the arm of Lake Champlain between the towns of Alburg and Swanton, in the State of Vermont, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6 strike out the word "the" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Missisquoi Bay, an."

In line 7, after the word "Champlain," insert the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just an inquiry for information. I should like to know if this bill has been approved by the War Department.

Mr. MANN. It has been approved by the War Department, and certain amendments inserted which the War Department recommended.

Mr. SULZER. And this does not interfere with navigation in any way?

Mr. MANN. The War Department reports that it will not interfere with navigation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is 1906 the last bridge act?

Mr. MANN. It is the last bridge act.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There has been no act subsequent to 1906?

Mr. MANN. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DAM ACROSS JAMES RIVER, MO.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 574) to authorize J. W. Vance, L. L. Allen, C. F. Helwig, and H. V. Worley, of Pierce City, Mo.; A. B. Durnil, D. H. Kemp, Sig Soloman, J. J. Davis, S. A. Chappell, and W. M. West, of Monett, Mo.; M. L. Coleman, M. T. Davis, Jared R. Woodfill, jr., J. H. Jarrett, and William H. Standish, of Aurora, Lawrence County, Mo.; and L. S. Meyer, F. S. Heffernan, Robert A. Moore, William H. Johnson, J. P. McCammon, M. W. Colbaugh, and W. H. Schreiber, of Springfield, Greene County, Mo., to construct a dam across the James River, in Stone County, Mo., and to divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the said river again to create electric power.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That J. W. Vance, L. L. Allen, C. F. Helwig, and H. V. Worley, of Pierce City, Mo.; A. B. Durnil, D. H. Kemp, Sig Soloman, J. J. Davis, S. A. Chappell, and W. M. West, of Monett, Mo.; M. L. Coleman, M. T. Davis, Jared R. Woodfill, jr., J. H. Jarrett, and William H. Standish, of Aurora, Lawrence County, Mo.; and L. S. Meyer, F. S. Heffernan, Robert A. Moore, William H. Johnson, J. P. McCammon, M. W. Colbaugh, and W. H. Schreiber, of Springfield, Greene County, Mo., their heirs or assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam in the Big Bend of the James River, in section 22, township 23 north, range 24 west, in the county of Stone and State of Missouri, across the said James River at said point, and to impound thereat in what is known as the Lower Narrows of the Big Bend of the said James River the waters of said river, and by canal and tunnel to divert and conduct across said narrows such portion of the water of said river, through said tunnel into said river again, as may be necessary for electric-power purposes. The construction, maintenance, and operation of the dam herein authorized, as well as the determination of the rights and obligations under the permission granted hereby, shall be in all respects in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act in whole or in part is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question. If I heard section 2 aright, it reserved the right to repeal, but I did not hear the Clerk read that it reserved the right to alter or amend.

Mr. MANN. That is in the bill. Section 2 says that the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act in whole or in part is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to hear it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act in whole or in part is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have a statement about this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a number of local people on James River desire to construct a dam there for power purposes. This bill has been gone over both by the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate and the War Department and materially changed from the way the original bill read when it was introduced. The bill in its present form has the absolute approval of the War Department. In fact, it was practically prepared by the War Department. We are assured that it will absolutely protect the Government, and that the dam and all the work will be constructed under the general dam act. I think the interests of the Government are absolutely protected. Of course, it is limited to 50 years, which is the limit under the general dam act.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask if the Government should alter, amend, or repeal would it be obliged to pay any expenses that it would be put to.

Mr. MANN. No; under the provisions of the general dam act the right to alter, amend, or repeal is reserved to the Government without any liability on the part of the Government for making or requiring any changes to be made in reference to the dam. There would be no liability on the part of the Government if it required the dam to be removed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Who would pay the expense?

Mr. MANN. The parties interested, and if they did not the Government is authorized to do it and compel them to pay it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They might not be financially responsible. It occurs to me that there will not be a place in the United States where a dam could be erected and water power furnished for electrical energy which will not be covered by legislation at this session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that we have not reported near all of the dam bills presented to us.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PLACER LODE LOCATORS OF PHOSPHATE LANDS.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 31651) providing for adjustment of conflict between placer and lode locators of phosphate lands.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in case of any conflict between locators under the placer laws and the mineral-lode laws on locations heretofore made of lands containing valuable deposits of phosphate or phosphate rock the respective claims of the locators shall be determined as though location of said lands under either of the above laws was valid at the time said locations were made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Reserving the right to object, I would like some explanation of this.

Mr. MONDELL. This is for the purpose of adjusting conflicts that may arise between placer and lode locators of phosphate lands. Most of the locations of phosphate lands were made under the placer laws. Later locations were made under the lode law, and this bill provides that the original locator, whether he be a lode or a placer locator, shall be held as having made a legal location. The department is somewhat embarrassed in that if they hold that the placer location is the proper location they are urged to hold that nothing but placer locations can be made; but this provides that whether the first location is a placer location or a lode location, if it is in every other way regular, it shall be held to be a legal location.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is not this a matter that relates to mining entirely?

Mr. MONDELL. No; it is a matter that relates entirely to the acquisition of public lands.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Why so?

Mr. MONDELL. Because it provides for the disposition of public lands.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is reported by the Public Lands Committee, but my opinion is that it ought to have gone to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. MONDELL. It is undoubtedly within the jurisdiction of the Public Lands Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN WYOMING.

The next business was the bill H. R. 28623, to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Wyoming.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have 100,000 square miles of trout streams in the State of Wyoming. We have just established a hatchery in Florida, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I object, Mr. Speaker.

COMPENSATION OF SUPERINTENDENT, ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY.

The next business was the bill H. R. 24212, to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes to provide a compensation of $100 per month with fuel and quarters for the superintendent of the Arlington (Va.) National Cemetery.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4875 of the Revised Statutes, which is now as follows: "The superintendent of the national cemeteries shall receive for their compensation from $60 to $75 a month each, according to the extent and importance of the cemeteries to which they may be respectively assigned, to be determined by the Secretary of War, and they shall also be furnished with quarters and fuel at the several cemeteries," be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4875. The superintendents of the national cemeteries shall receive for their compensation from $60 to $75 a month each, according to the extent and importance of the cemeteries to which they may be respectively assigned, to be determined by the Secretary of War, except the superintendent of the Arlington (Va.) Cemetery, whose compensation may be $100 per month, at the discretion of the Secretary of War; and they shall also be furnished with quarters and fuel at the several cemeteries."

With the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "statutes," in line 4, down to and including the word "cemetery," in line 10.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know the reason for the passage of so important a bill as this on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It seems to carry a right sharp appropriation.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, in answer to my distinguished friend from Arkansas, I will state that in 1864, when there were but 200 acres in the national cemetery at Arlington, the compensation of the superintendent was fixed at $75 per month. Since then there have been added to it, so that to-day there are in the inclosure 408 acres and outside of the inclosure 48 acres, making a total of 456 acres which are now under his direct supervision. He is responsible for the payment of about $30,000 in wages yearly. There are a number of men under him, upward of 100, who receive from $50 to $75 per month. Then he has 600 interments yearly to look after. All in all, this gives him only $100 per month, an increase of $25. It is a meritorious case, and should become a law.

Mr. MACON. Is that the only increase in the bill?

Mr. GOULDEN. That is the only increase, from $75 to $100.

Mr. MACON. Is that the only change?

Mr. GOULDEN. The only change. The superintendent, Mr. Magoon, now in charge, is a first-class man in every particular.

Mr. MACON. Then I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED LAKE RIVER, MINN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 32220) to authorize the board of supervisors of the town of High Landing, Red Lake County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red Lake River.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of supervisors of the town of High Landing, Red Lake County, Minn., be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red Lake River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near section line between sections 28 and 29, township 153 north, range 40 west, in the county of Red Lake, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on engrossing and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

NATURALIZATION OF WIVES AND CHILDREN OF INSANE ALIENS.

The next business was the bill (S. 9443) providing for the naturalization of the wife and minor children of insane aliens making homestead entries under the land laws of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when any alien, who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, becomes insane before he is actually naturalized, and his wife shall thereafter make a homestead entry under the land laws of the United States, she and their minor children may, by complying with the provisions of the naturalization laws be naturalized without making any declaration of intention.

With the following amendment:

Line 8, before the word "provisions," insert the word "other."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD AND COUNTY-ROAD RIGHTS OF WAY, FORT RUSSELL MILITARY RESERVATION, WYO.

The next business was the bill (S. 9904) granting certain rights of way on the Fort D. A. Russell Military Reservation, at Cheyenne, Wyo., for railroad and county-road purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Colorado Railroad Co., a corporation created by and organized under the laws of the State of Colorado, and authorized to do business in the States of Colorado and Wyoming, is hereby authorized to build its line of railroad on the following-described portion of the Fort D. A. Russell Military Reservation, to wit:

Beginning at a point on the east boundary line of the military reservation, said point being the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 1, township 13 north, range 67 west; thence south along the east boundary line of military reservation 2,390 feet to a point; thence north 9 degrees, 21 minutes west, 344.3 feet to a point which is 56 feet west of the east line of said military reservation; thence north 1 degree, 4 minutes east, 2,055 feet to the place of beginning.

SEC. 2. That a right of way for a county road for use of the public is hereby granted to the county of Laramie, a municipal corporation of the State of Wyoming, upon the following portion of the Fort D. A. Russell

Military Reservation at Cheyenne, Wyo., more particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the east line of said military reservation, said point being the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 1, township 13 north, range 67 west of the sixth principal meridian; thence south along the said east line of said military reservation to the southeast corner thereof; thence northwesterly on the southwesterly boundary line of said military reservation to a point which is 150 feet west of the east line of said reservation when measured at right angles thereto; thence north on a line 150 feet west of and parallel with the easterly boundary line of said reservation to the north line of the northwest quarter of said section 1; thence east 150 feet along the north line of said section 1, to the place of beginning, said strip of land being 150 feet in width on the east side of that portion of said reservation situated in section 1, township 13 north, range 67 west, as aforesaid; saving and excepting therefrom that portion of said strip of land hereinabove, in section 1 of this act, described as granted to the Colorado Railroad Co. for the purpose of its railroad.

With the following amendment:

Line 10, page 3, after the word "railroad," insert "Provided, That it shall be in the power of the Secretary of War at any time to revoke the license granted in this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to call attention to some of the language of the bill and to ask for an explanation. First, on page 1, line 6, I observe that the railroad company is "authorized to build its line," and that by the proviso on page 3, at the end of the bill, the Secretary of War is to have the power "at any time to revoke the license granted in this act." Thus it appears that, according to the proviso, the bill is to be construed as simply conferring a license.

But the bill would do far more than confer a license. I call attention to the fact that by section 2, pages 2 and 3—

A right of way for a county road for use of the public is hereby granted to the county of Laramie, * * * said strip of land being 150 feet in width.

That is not a license to the county. A right of way is granted.

I call attention also to the very significant language on page 3, beginning with line 7:

Saving and excepting therefrom that portion of said strip of land hereinbefore, in section 1 of this act, described as granted to the Colorado Railroad Co. for the purposes of its railroad.

Thus, by this language, the very bill itself declares not that it confers a license but that it makes a grant to the railroad company. Therefore the proviso authorizing the Secretary of War to "revoke the license," and so forth, is not applicable to anything in the bill, because there is no license about it.

There is a grant to the county of Laramie and another grant to the railroad company.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to an amendment striking out the word "license" and inserting the word "right," but it seems to me that the right to revoke whatever we grant here is very clear. It seems to me there is not much difference whether we grant or license, but whether it be a grant or license it is revocable under the terms of the amendment made by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to the bill in its present form.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I suggest to the gentleman if there is any reasonable amendment he desires to offer we would like to hear it. The bill has been recommended by the War Department and work has been stopped that the people there are very much interested in. It only conveys to the railroad company less than 1 acre altogether.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If this is simply conferring a license upon a railroad company to use certain land belonging to a military reservation, there ought to be reserved the right to amend, alter, or repeal.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The committee would be willing to accept the amendment in lieu of the present one, but I think, in justice to the people there, this question ought to be settled.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I propose an amendment by adding at the end of the bill that the right to amend, alter, or repeal is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am willing to accept that. We simply took the amendment of the War Department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I move an amendment to add a third section by inserting the words "the right is hereby expressly reserved to alter, amend, or repeal this act."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a third section:
"The right to alter, amend, or repeal is hereby expressly reserved."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FORT MACKENZIE MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 9903) to authorize the Sheridan Railway & Light Co. to construct and operate railway, telegraph, telephone, electric power, and trolley lines through the Fort Mackenzie Military Reservation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Sheridan Railway & Light Co., a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Wyoming, be, and the same is hereby, empowered to survey, locate, construct, maintain, and operate railway, telegraph, telephone, electric power, and trolley lines through the Fort Mackenzie Military Reservation, in Sheridan County, State of Wyoming, upon such terms and in such location as may be determined and approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to occupy and use for all purposes of railway, telegraph, telephone, electric power, and trolley lines, and for no other purpose, a right of way 50 feet in width through said Fort Mackenzie Military Reservation, with the right to use such additional ground where cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet in width, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no part of the land herein authorized to be occupied shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, telephone, electric power, and trolley lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That before the said railway company shall be permitted to enter upon any part of said military reservation a description by metes and bounds of the land herein authorized to be occupied or used shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the said railway company shall comply with such other regulations and conditions in the maintenance and operation of said road as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by adding—

SEC. 3. The right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as section 3:
"The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CONSOLIDATING CERTAIN FOREST LANDS IN THE KANSAS NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 32571) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Kansas National Forest.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of consolidating the forest lands belonging to the United States within the Kansas National Forest, be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, to exchange lands belonging to the United States which are part of the Kansas National Forest for privately owned lands lying within the exterior limits of the said national forest: Provided, That the lands so exchanged shall be equal in area and substantially equal in value: And provided further, That upon the consummation of such exchange the land deeded to the United States thereunder shall forthwith become, and thereafter continue to be, national forest lands to all intents and purposes, as if such land had been duly withdrawn by the proclamation which placed the contiguous land under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture for forest purposes.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "shall," strike out the rest of the bill and insert the words "become a part of the Kansas National Forest."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what is the necessity of making this exchange of land.

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman it is in order to block up the lands that are owned by the Government in this forest. Privately owned lands are scattered throughout the Government lands, and parties who own these lands scattered through the Government lands have lands on the outskirts of the Government lands, and the Government wants to acquire the land that is scattered through its lands by exchanging other land for it contiguous to ranches or farms owned by private parties.

Mr. HAMLIN. Suppose some of these private owners refuse to make an exchange; then the purpose would not be accomplished.

Mr. MADISON. Then it can not be made.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is no provision to compel them in any way by condemnation?

Mr. MADISON. Oh, not at all; this is simply a matter of exchange where the Government and the parties who own privately owned land find it to their mutual advantage.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Does it let them go into other States, or is it confined to the State of Kansas?

Mr. MADISON. Absolutely.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not object.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I was trying to ask a question about the bill. I notice that the language of the bill is that the Government exchange lands of "substantially" the same value. Why not leave out the word "substantially" and have it "of equal value?"

Mr. MADISON. Well, because it would probably be impossible to find two tracts of land that would be of exactly the same value. Now, if the gentleman will read the bill he will see that it provides that no exchange shall be made except it be made by the Secretary of the Interior upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, so that these two officials must concur in the exchange. They must both believe that the exchange that is being made by the Government is an absolutely fair one and one that protects the rights and interests of the Government; and an actual examination is required before any exchange can be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRONZE CANNON FOR UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 132, authorizing the delivery to the commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans of one or two dismounted bronze cannon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to deliver to the order of the commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans one or two dismounted bronze cannon captured during the late War with Spain or during the Philippine insurrection, to be used by the said United Spanish War Veterans for the purpose of furnishing official badges of the order: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States through the delivery of said cannon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall object to it unless the gentleman in charge of the bill is willing to strike out in the sixth and seventh lines the words "or during the Philippine insurrection."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will not raise that objection, for the reason that there were cannon that the Spanish Government left there during the Philippine insurrection.

Mr. MANN. Either accept the amendment or let it go.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not care anything about it. I hope, however, the gentleman will not raise it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I do not think there is any sentiment in the Spanish War veterans getting any old bronze cannon from the Philippine War and melting them into badges. I object unless the gentleman accepts that amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I accept the amendment.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, then I move to strike out of lines 6 and 7 the following words:

Or during the Philippine insurrection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 6 and 7, "or during the Philippine insurrection."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

PROCEEDINGS AT UNVEILING OF THE STEUBEN STATUE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House concurrent resolution 58.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed and bound in the form of eulogies, with accompanying illustrations, 17,100 copies of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of Baron von Steuben in Washington, December 7, 1910, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 to be delivered to the National German-American Alliance for such distribution as said alliance may desire to make, and the remaining 100 copies shall be bound in full morocco and distributed through the Department of State to the descendants of Baron von Steuben and the speakers who took part in said celebration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if these reports will be put through the folding room.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXCHANGE OF DESERT AND NATIONAL FOREST LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 30280) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to exchange certain desert lands for lands within national forests in Oregon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Oregon is hereby authorized to relinquish its selection heretofore made under the terms of the act of August 18, 1884 (28 Stats., p. 372), and acts amendatory and supplemental thereto of the following lands:

Sec. 3; E. ½, E. ½ of W. ½, SW. ¼ of SW. ¼ of sec. 4; SW. ¼, W. ½ of SE. ¼, SE. ¼ of SE. ¼ of sec. 5; S. ½ of sec. 6; all of secs. 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22 of T. 24 S., R. 33 E., Willamette meridian, containing 8,793.47 acres; and the Secretary of the Interior, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, may issue patent to said lands in exchange for and upon reconveyance to the United States of the following lands within national forests in the State of Oregon:

All of fractional sec. 36, T. 21 S., R. 12 E.; all of sec. 16, T. 21 S., R. 12 E.; the SE. ¼ of sec. 36, T. 20 S., R. 14 E.; all of sec. 16, T. 23 S., R. 16 E.; the S. ½ of NW. ¼, the NW. ¼ of NW. ¼, the NE. ¼ of NE. ¼, the S. ½ of sec. 16, T. 28 S., R. 10 E.; S. ½ of N. ½ of sec. 16, T. 15 S., R. 31 E.; NW. ¼ of NW. ¼ of sec. 16, T. 17 S., R. 32 E.; all of sec. 36, T. 3 S., R. 47 E.; all of sec 16, T. 19 S., R. 31 E.; SE. ¼ of SE. ¼ of sec. 16, E. ½ of NE. ¼, W. ½ of NW. ¼ of sec. 36, T. 20 S., R. 33 E.; all of sec. 16, T. 3 S., R. 31 E.; S. ½ and NW. ¼ of sec. 36, T. 19 S., R. 32 E.; N. ½ of sec. 16, T. 14 S., R. 33 E.; all of secs. 16 and 36, T. 7 S., R. 34 E.; sec. 16, T. 8 S., R. 32 E.; all of sec. 36, T. 14 S., R. 35½ E.; all of sec. 36, T. 2 S., R. 40 E., Willamette meridian.

Provided, That the timber or undergrowth shall not have been removed from said forest lands.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

On line 5, page 1, strike out the word "eighty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ninety."

On line 1, page 3, strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

At the end of the bill add the following: "Provided further, That upon reconveyance to the United States the lands shall become parts of the national forests in which they are situated."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from Oregon state the character of this bill. It seems to be an exchange of a great amount of land.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLIS], who introduced the bill, is not here. I will make a brief statement if the gentleman desires. As the House will note from the report, it is proposed that the Government shall grant 8,793 acres of desert land for 9,401 acres of land within a forest reserve. The exchange of land gives the Government some 601 acres more than it surrenders, and it gives the Government the ownership of that amount of land within the boundaries of a reserve which has forests on it. These lands which are to be exchanged are desert in character, and can only be made habitable by irrigation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What particular value has this desert land that the State of Oregon should be willing to give forest land in exchange for it?

Mr. MONDELL. The parties who desire to irrigate are the owners of the land in the forest reserve. They desire to make the exchange, and the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture think the exchange would be a most excellent one for the Government.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the character of the timber?

Mr. MONDELL. It is not heavily timbered land, but there is some timber on it, and it is in a reserve. The Secretary of Agriculture says the land has some value for timber.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I observe that in his letter the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ballinger, says:

The bill under consideration does not name the present owner of the school sections, nor whether they are to be conveyed by the State or some private corporation or individual claiming through or under the State. Neither does it name the proposed patentee of the lands to be received in exchange, whether the State, a private corporation, or individual. It is presumed, however, that the Portland Co. is the beneficiary of the bill; that it proposes to reconvey the school sections to the United States and will take title to the lands received in lieu thereof.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no question about that, Mr. Speaker. The committee was fully informed on that subject, and it is so stated in the report. The company that proposes to irrigate the desert lands are the owners of the lands in the forest reserve, and in order to enable them to irrigate that land we are proposing to give them the opportunity to exchange.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this corporation a corporation or a company composed of private individuals?

Mr. MONDELL. I believe it is a corporation organized for the purpose of irrigating these lands.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I object.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN SILETZ INDIAN RESERVATION, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 27298) relating to homestead entries in the former Siletz Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all pending homestead entries heretofore made within the former Siletz Indian Reservation in Oregon upon which proofs were made prior to December 31, 1906, shall be passed to patent in all cases where it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the entry was made for the exclusive use and benefit of the entryman, and that the entryman built a house on the land entered and otherwise improved the same, and actually entered into the occupation thereof and cultivated a portion of said land for the period required by law, and that no part of the land entered has been sold or conveyed, or contracted to be sold or conveyed, by the entryman, and where no contest or other adverse proceeding was commenced against the entry and notice thereof served upon the entryman prior to the date of submission of proof thereon, or within two years thereafter, and where any such entry has heretofore been canceled the same may be reinstated upon application filed within six months from the passage of this act where at the date of the filing of such application for reinstatement no other entry is of record covering such land: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent or forestall any adverse proceedings against any entry upon any charge of fraud: And provided further, That any entryman who may make application for patent under the provisions of this act shall, as an additional condition precedent to the issuance of such patent, be required to pay to the United States the sum of $2.50 per acre for the land so applied for; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue such regulations as may be necessary for carrying this act into effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FISH HATCHERY AT PARIS, TEX.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2130) for the establishment of a fish hatchery at Paris, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object to that, as well as to all these other fish-cultural bills.

AN ACT PROVIDING FOR THE RETIREMENT OF CERTAIN MEDICAL OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 9351) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the retirement of certain medical officers of the Army," approved June 22, 1910.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota think this bill should pass?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I do.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved June 22, 1910, entitled "An act providing for the retirement of certain medical officers of the Army," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

Strike out the words "in the War of the Rebellion," following the words "enlisted man," in said act, so that the act as amended will read:

"Be it enacted, etc., That any officer of the Medical Reserve Corps who shall have reached the age of 70 years, and whose total active service in the Army of the United States, Regular or Volunteer, as such officer, and as contract or acting assistant surgeon, and as an enlisted man, shall equal 40 years, may thereupon, in the discretion of the President, be placed upon the retired list of the Army with the rank, pay, and allowances of a first lieutenant."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. I object.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FISH-CULTURAL STATION, UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 3661) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Utah.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this matter of the production of food fish is of such importance that the Government has already established 36 fish-cultural stations in various other parts of the Union.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RESTORATION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN MILLARD COUNTY, UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 8457) to restore to the public domain certain lands withdrawn for reservoir purposes in Millard County, Utah.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore to the public domain, subject to entry under the public-land laws of the United States, such portions of the lands withdrawn under the act of October 2, 1888, for a United States reservoir site, in Millard County, Utah, not necessary for reservoir purposes, as he may designate.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause down to the word "restore," in line 4, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof "That the President may, in his discretion."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, in 1894, under the act of October 2, 1888, certain lands were withdrawn for reservoir purposes in the county of Millard, Utah. Nothing has been done since that time with this tract and there is no Government irrigation system now in contemplation. This withdrawal stands in the way of a Carey Act project to reclaim this land. This bill simply authorizes the President, in his discretion, to restore these lands to the public domain. Under the existing law the President has the right to restore the land, but without this act the land would be subject to entry only under the homestead law. The purpose of the bill is to restore the lands to the precise status that they were in when they were withdrawn, so that they will be subject to the Carey Act proposition or acquisition under general public-land laws.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is there anyone living on this land?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. No; it is vacant land.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much land is involved in this?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Four or five thousand acres.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much is it worth?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. It is not worth anything. It is as much a desert as Sahara.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I observe that it was withdrawn 23 years ago, in 1888.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. It was withdrawn under the act of 1888; but it was withdrawn in 1894.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Seventeen years ago.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Seventeen years ago, and this act puts it wholly within the discretion of the President.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the President will not go out there to look at the land. He will rely upon the judgment of other people, and there will be tremendous pressure on him one way or the other. I would like to know what it was reserved for.

Mr. MONDELL. This is one of the old reservations under the law of 1888. The President on application could restore these lands now, but if they were restored under existing law they could only be restored for homestead entry. These people want to enter them under the Carey Act, another form of homestead. They desire to have them irrigated under the Carey Act. This gives the President discretion to restore them under any of the land laws.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They were reserved for the purposes of a reservoir, for the storage of water, were they not?

Mr. MONDELL. The original withdrawals covered vast areas, which from time to time have been reduced by presidential proclamation, as it is found that the lands are not needed for reservoir purposes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I only want to get at the facts. The original reservation was for the purpose of storing water.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And that water was supposed to be used for irrigation purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. The reservations were made very large, including vast areas that were not needed for reservoir purposes in many cases, and this is one of them.

Mr. MANN. The original reservation was to permit the Government to use the land for reservoir purposes, and the purpose of this is to permit the State to do it under the Carey Act.

Mr. MONDELL. No; this land is now subject to the right-of-way act. A private individual could use this land now for a reservoir.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. MONDELL. But that is not what is wanted. They want to irrigate the land.

Mr. MANN. That is what I say.

Mr. MONDELL. They want to reclaim it. The President can restore the land, but he can not restore it to any entry except homestead entry under the present law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion right there?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This land was reserved for reservoir purposes, and now it is proposed to irrigate the very land which was to be submerged.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that sometimes more land was reserved than was actually needed for the reservoir site.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Where are they going to get the water to irrigate this?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I will say in answer to that that when this land was withdrawn it was a kind of blanket withdrawal, and the lands now desired to be restored to the public domain do not include the site of the depression in which the water could be stored. These are simply lands that can not be used for reservoir purposes at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has there been a report on this from any Government official?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Oh, yes; the Secretary of the Interior has no objection to it—he recommends it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He has no objection to it, but does he know anything about it?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Only as he has been advised by his subordinates. There is no possible harm in this bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I shall not object to the bill, but I want to say just one word. A law has been passed—I do not know how or when—which permits the printing of only 100 private bills at a time. We put private bills through under suspension of the rules, and only 100 copies of a private bill are printed for a membership of 391 in this House. Why such a law as that was ever passed I can not understand. We ought to have a bill, or two bills if necessary, with the report, for each Member.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. This is not a private bill; this is a public bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY TO THE BUCKHANNON & NORTHERN RAILROAD CO.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 10404) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a right of way through lands of the United States to the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad Co.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to grant the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad Co. a right of way through lands of the United States, on the western bank of the Monongahela River, in the State of West Virginia, adjacent to Locks Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14, at such price, and on such terms and conditions, as he may consider just, equitable, and expedient.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MINN.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 32341) to authorize the St. Paul Railway Promotion Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near Nininger, Minn.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the St. Paul Railway Promotion Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Nininger, in the county of Dakota, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE PISCATAQUA RIVER, N. H.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 32213) to authorize the city of Portsmouth, N. H., to construct a bridge across the Piscataqua River.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby given the city of Portsmouth, N. H., or its assigns, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Hampshire, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Piscataqua River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Portsmouth, in the county of Rockingham, in the State of New Hampshire, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HOT SPRINGS MOUNTAIN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 31806) to amend an act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon United States commissioners over offenses committed on a portion of the permanent Hot Springs Mountain Reservation," approved April 20, 1904.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1218), is amended so as to read as follows:

"That any United States commissioner duly appointed by the United States district court for the eastern district of Arkansas, and residing in said district, shall have power and jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any and all violations of said act of Congress approved April 20, 1904."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, being an act to amend an act entitled 'An act conferring jurisdiction upon United States commissioners over offenses committed on a portion of the permanent Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, Ark.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ORGANIZED MILITIA.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 28436) to further increase the efficiency of the Organized Militia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is too important to be taken up under unanimous consent, and I object.

MESSAGE AND REPORT OF NORTH ATLANTIC COAST FISHERIES ARBITRATION AT THE HAGUE.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the Senate joint resolution 139, authorizing the printing of the message of the President, together with the report of the agent of the United States in the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries Arbitration at The Hague.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President's message of February 1, 1911, together with the report of the agent of the United States in the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries Arbitration at The Hague, transmitted therewith, and the appendices to the report, be printed as a public document, together with an additional 500 copies for the Department of State, the cost thereof to be defrayed out of the appropriation for printing and binding for Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF EXPLOSION AT COMMUNIPAW, N. J.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was House joint resolution 282, to investigate the causes of the explosion at Communipaw, N. J., and to report the results of such investigation with recommendations regarding such legislation as will tend to prevent a recurrence of same.

The Clerk read the title to the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LIGHT AND FOG-SIGNAL STATION, SAN PEDRO BREAKWATER, CAL.

The next business was the bill (S. 10011) for establishing a light and fog-signal station on the San Pedro Breakwater, Cal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a light and fog-signal station on the San Pedro Breakwater, Cal., at a cost not to exceed $36,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL, LINCOLN ROCK, ALASKA.

The next business was the bill (S. 10015) for rebuilding and improving the present light and fog signal at Lincoln Rock, Alaska, or for building another light and fog-signal station upon a different site near by.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to rebuild and improve the present light and fog signal at Lincoln Rock, Alaska, or establish a light and fog-signal station upon a different site near by, at a cost not to exceed $25,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that this present light is on a rock in a channel in Alaska, and the new head of the Lighthouse Service stated that he wanted to replace that light or place it on a new sight near by.

Mr. MANN. The present lighthouse, owing to too severe storms, is ready to fall down, and there has been a question as to whether it would be more economical to put underpinning under it or to reconstruct it or build a new light near to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How near does the gentleman from Illinois believe the department contemplates building the light, if it builds it near by the site, which is now a submerged rock in the channel?

Mr. MANN. I do not know how near by, but I suppose right adjoining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The head of the department stated some place within 5 miles. I think I shall object to this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the gentleman will make a mistake if he does. This light is necessary, and it is liable to fall down. I will say to the gentleman we have a great many requests for new lights——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it is necessary at this point, it should be built nearer than 5 miles from it.

Mr. MANN. But a light even within 5 miles might be sufficient. Lights are not very common in that locality.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but this is on a submerged rock in the channel, placed there to mark that channel and to prevent ships striking the rock. How valuable it would be 5 miles away is difficult to tell.

Mr. MANN. It might be very valuable 4 or 5 miles away.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have seen that rock. The lighthouse is not placed there for the purpose of preventing vessels running on that rock. That rock is itself out of the water a great portion of the time. It is not under the water all of the time. I have seen it when not under the water.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it be not a submerged rock, I shall not object.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about his facts. I trust he will not object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not mistaken about the facts. I state what the head of the Lighthouse Service has testified to.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands that the appropriation is left to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman thinks this is very important, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL AID TO NAVIGATION.

The next business was the bill (S. 10177) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Establishment, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish and provide the following additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Establishment, under the Lighthouse Service, in accordance with the respective limits of cost respectively set forth, which shall in no case be exceeded:

To construct a power house and foundry and complete the equipment, wiring, etc., of the power plant at the general lighthouse depot, Staten Island, N. Y., at a cost not to exceed $30,000.

To rebuild and improve the present light and fog-signal station, or construct a new light and fog-signal station, at Brandywine Shoal, Delaware Bay, Del., at a cost not to exceed $75,000.

To rebuild and improve the Buffalo Breakwater North End Light Station, N. Y., at a cost not to exceed $60,000.

To complete the lighting of the breakwater and piers at Superior Entry, Wis., at a cost not to exceed $25,000.

To establish a lighthouse depot on the site belonging to the War Department on Governors Island, Boston Harbor, Mass., or on the site belonging to the Marine-Hospital Service, Treasury Department, on Chelsea Creek, Boston Harbor, Mass., and authority is hereby granted for the transfer of the site authorized from the proper department to the Department of Commerce and Labor—

With the following amendments:

Line 17, page 2, after the word "labor," insert:

"And when the Department of Commerce and Labor shall have acquired such site, as herein authorized, the lighthouse depot now located on Lovells Island shall be moved to the site thus acquired."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois how it is that the title of this site is in the War Department, and is then to be transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor. Why is not the title in the General Government?

Mr. MANN. Well, the title to property of this sort is in different departments.

Mr. MORSE. Is that true with lighthouse sites?

Mr. MANN. Yes; it is true of lighthouse sites; also true of military reservations, and with those reservations it is in the War Department. There is one title in the War Department, one in the Treasury Department, and we want permission to put title in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill the necessity for the passage of a bill carrying so many dollars in this way by unanimous consent. We ought to understand something about a bill carrying $204,000.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman in reference to that, each one of the items in this bill has been gone over very carefully. The bill was prepared at the request of the Department of Commerce and Labor on letters, both here and in the Senate, from the new commissioner after considerable investigation showing that there is an absolute actual necessity for the authorization carried in this bill. We have requests for many authorizations which have not been carried.

Now, in regard to the power house, the Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that under the authorization heretofore made they can not construct the power house. The Brandywine Shoal light is in a bad condition; the Buffalo Breakwater Shoal is in the same condition; and at Superior Entry, Wis., the Government has extended its breakwater and piers out so that it is absolutely necessary to put a light there; and the lighthouse depot in Boston Harbor it is necessary to change in order to get access to it and for economical administration. Of course, that involves the extra expense.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in the estimates presented by the department there are——

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman I will not consent to any amendment inserting any other item.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not seek to insert any other item at this time, but I think the gentleman might give me some information as to other items which are found under the head of "Special work," as urged by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman appreciates we are occupying time by courtesy of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I realize that, but I hoped the gentleman would extend me the courtesy of answering a question or two.

Mr. MANN. I would if nobody would object, but I am afraid somebody will object on account of our occupying the time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If this is the conclusion of legislation that is to come from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce regarding aids to navigation, that would settle the question; but I am hopeful there may be some information in regard to recommendations from the department, on which up to this time apparently Congress has not acted.

Mr. MANN. I would say to the gentleman who introduced a bill in reference to aids to navigation, part of which was already provided for——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did that with the idea of bringing the entire matter to the attention of the committee, so that they would understand what we needed along the Delaware.

Mr. MANN. We have covered in these bills on the calendar every one which in the opinion of the commissioner of lighthouses, after a thorough explanation, are absolutely necessary, and I think there will be no other bills reported from the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of that statement, will the gentleman tell us something about the condition of the lighthouse station at Edgemoor, on the Delaware River? As a matter of fact, it is tumbling down and is unfit for the purpose for which it was intended.

Mr. MANN. We made some provision for Edgemoor in the last omnibus bill, and the commissioner informs us they have all the authority they need.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman will bear me out that the authority given in the last bill has not been exercised and the condition has grown worse than it was last year.

Mr. MANN. It has not been exercised; but so far as my committee is concerned, it has been exercised, and it now rests with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman is not to be held accountable for the fact that the lighthouse station at Edgemoor is tumbling down.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. That rests with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KELIHER. I would like to ask the gentleman why Castle Island, in Boston Harbor, rather than Governors Island, has been selected for the placing of this light.

Mr. MANN. Last year in the bill we authorized the provision as to Governors Island. The Lighthouse Board desires Castle Island. If there is no objection, I propose to offer an amendment, which will be in the language of the Senate bill, so as to throw that whole matter into conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which is the language printed in the bill, to strike out lines 11 to 21, in the last paragraph, so as to throw that whole paragraph into conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out on page 2, lines 11 to 21, both inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"To establish a lighthouse depot on the site belonging to the War Department on Castle Island, Boston Harbor, Mass., or on the site belonging to the Marine-Hospital Service, Treasury Department, or Chelsea Creek, Boston Harbor, Mass., and authority is hereby granted for the transfer of the site authorized from the Treasury Department to the Department of Commerce and Labor; and when the Department of Commerce and Labor shall have acquired such site as herein authorized the lighthouse depot now located on Lovells Island shall be moved to the site thus acquired."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a question. The information developed by my colleague [Mr. MORSE] was very interesting to me. I confess my ignorance. I did not know that the Marine-Hospital Service owned the site to a lighthouse depot.

Mr. MANN. The Marine Hospital Service is part of the Treasury Department, and the Treasury Department owns the site.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The bill says "on the site belonging to the Marine-Hospital Service," which means the Marine-Hospital Service of the Treasury Department. Now, then, does the gentleman say that the fees to these sites, the real estate upon which these lighthouse depots are located, are in the respective Government departments?

Mr. MANN. They are in the United States, but the department can not permit the use by any other department except by authorization.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then they do belong to the Government?

Mr. MANN. It belongs to the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it then technically an accurate use of language to speak of real estate which is Government real estate as belonging to a department of the Government?

Mr. MANN. The site belongs to that department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the site is in fee in the department, then it is subject——

Mr. MANN. It may not be the most acourate language. I do not undertake to say.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The most accurate? It is not accurate at all.

Mr. MANN. We did not undertake the review of the language of the Senate, although this item was prepared by the department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It may have been prepared by the department, but this does not——

Mr. MANN. We frequently transfer sites from one department to another.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has a deservedly excellent reputation as a lawyer, and does he want to approve in the legislation of the United States a palpable misstatement of the law to the effect that the title to real estate is in a department of the Government when it is not in a department at all?

Mr. MANN. The title is in the Government, but I think the site does belong to the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest right there? I got an appropriation for the marine hospital out at Pittsburg, and the parties who went out to inspect sites finally decided that the best site for the hospital would be a portion of the arsenal property not being used. I had to have an act passed to authorize the Secretary of War to make a deed to the Secretary of the Treasury for that marine-hospital site.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He makes it to the Secretary of the Treasury for the United States Government. He does not give Franklin MacVeagh a deed to this land?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The fee is in the Government.

Mr. MANN. The fee is in the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He gives it to him as United States Treasurer, but it does not belong to the Treasury Department.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The control of it does.

Mr. MANN. The title of course is in the Government.

Mr. DALZELL. The real title is in the Government, of course.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then, the land belongs to the Government; but this bill speaks of a site belonging to the War Department.

Mr. MANN. I have offered an amendment to throw this entire paragraph into conference, so that anything of that sort will be corrected. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I hope it will be corrected. As it stands it is not a correct statement of the law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right of amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration has been waived, and the question now is on the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I have an opportunity to refer to the amendment? I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KELIHER] offered an amendment as to a change of site.

Mr. MANN. No; I offered the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION, DETROIT RIVER, MICH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 10630) providing for aids to navigation along the Livingstone Channel, Detroit River, Mich.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I object to that bill.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection for just a moment.

Mr. MACON. I will reserve it, of course.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Government is now constructing the Livingstone Channel in the Detroit River, where all the commerce of the Detroit River will pass. There is now a cofferdam there, so that this work is in the dry. This channel will probably be opened next year, the year 1912. That is what the Army engineers now report. The channel can not be utilized without lights along the channel, and we are informed that if we put in the foundation for these lights in the dry, in the cofferdam, they will be far less expensive than they would be if we put them in the wet, after the cofferdam is removed and the water is in the channel. The channel has cost the Government probably $5,000,000 or $6,000,000.

Mr. MACON. How did the Government happen to dig the channel?

Mr. MANN. It is part of the river and harbor improvement. It is the Detroit River, and all that commerce in the Detroit River will pass through this channel when completed.

Mr. MACON. That, of course, passes the traffic from one lake to the other?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MACON. Then I realize the importance of it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. SISSON. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish and provide such lights and buoys as may, in his judgment, be necessary to properly mark the Livingstone Channel in the Detroit River, Mich., at an expense not to exceed $210,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrosed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DELAWARE RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 32400) to authorize the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Delaware River from Lower Makefield Township, Bucks County, Pa., to Ewing Township, Mercer County, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Co., their lessees, successors, and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto, across the Delaware River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, from the township of Lower Makefield, county of Bucks, State of Pennsylvania, at or near the southeastern boundary of the borough of Yardley to a point at or near 10 feet south of the existing bridge in the township of Ewing, in the county of Mercer, in the State of New Jersey, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS SOUTH BRANCH OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 32440) authorizing the Moline, East Moline & Watertown Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the south branch of the Mississippi River from a point in the village of Watertown, Rock Island County, Ill., to the island known as Campbells Island.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Moline, East Moline & Watertown Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the south branch of the Mississippi River from a point in the village of Watertown, in the county of Rock Island and State of Illinois, to the island known as Campbells Island, in said county of Rock Island, said bridge to be a wagon and street railway bridge, whose use is to be free to the public, the same to be built in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The Clerk also read the amendment, as follows:

In line 7, page 1, after the word "point," insert the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the amendment?

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

DAM ACROSS OUTLET OF NAMAKAN LAKE AT KETTLE FALLS, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 10596) to authorize the Rainy River Improvement Co. to construct a dam across the outlet of Namakan Lake at Kettle Falls, in St. Louis County, Minn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Rainy River Improvement Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the outlet of Lake Namakan at Kettle Falls, in St. Louis County, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906."

SEC. 2 That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 8, after the word "Minnesota," insert the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

Subsequently,

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 10596) to authorize the Rainy River Improvement Co. to construct a dam across the outlet of Namakan Lake at Kettle Falls, in St. Louis County, Minn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] withdraws his objection to this bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct, Mr. Speaker. In view of the explanation made by the gentleman from Minnesota, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will inquire if that is not in violation of the rule.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair supposes it is; but still, under these conditions, if there is no objection to it, by unanimous consent all rules can be suspended and this bill passed, as this is suspension day. That would avoid the technical trouble.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but there are many Members who will have bills objected to who can not move to suspend the rules.

Mr. MANN. We have done this several times.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the rules will be suspended and the bill, with the amendment, will be passed.

There was no objection.

Accordingly the rules were suspended, and the bill as amended was passed.

DAM ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, SAUK RAPIDS, MINN.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 10757) to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void and all rights acquired under the same forfeited unless the construction of the dam herein authorized be commenced on or before the 1st day of July, A. D. 1911, and such construction continued with and the dam completed within two years from the date last mentioned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. The bill provides—

That section 3 of an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void and all rights acquired under the same forfeited unless the construction of the dam herein authorized be commenced on or before the 1st day of July, A. D. 1911, and such construction continued with and the dam completed within two years from the date last mentioned."

That is all of it. There is no statement of the old law of 1904, nor any statement as to how the old law is to be changed by the amendment proposed in this bill.

Now, I take it from the phraseology of the bill that the rights of these parties under the original law—the law of February 26, 1904—have expired. Is that so?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes. The construction was required to be begun within one year and finished within three years from the date of the passage of the original act. The concern spent some money there, the exact amount of which I do not know, but which can be stated by my colleague [Mr. LINDBERGH].

Mr. LINDBERGH. About $2,500.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. But the work was not completed within that time. So we passed an act providing that construction should commence on or before the 1st day of July, 1910. That was withdrawn and changed to 1911, and this makes the change. The company have gone ahead in good faith and spent their money, and this is a legitimate enterprise.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, we reported a bill a short time ago from our committee which was just like this. Meanwhile a bill came over from the Senate providing for the 1st of July, 1910, instead of the 1st of July, 1911. I informed the Speaker that it was like a substantially similar bill on the House Calendar which we had reported, the only distinction being between 1910 and 1911. I admit my error. I did not catch the difference. That bill passed. Now, it ought to be passed in this form, because this is the only way in which it will do any good.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is a suggestion concerning the form of this bill which occurs to me and which I desire briefly to present. The proposed amendment to the law of 1904 is not itself specifically set forth. The bill simply provides that a single section of a law enacted in 1904, about which we do not remember anything and which we have not here to read, shall "be amended so as to read as follows," and then proceeds to set forth only the proposed new amended section. From this bill we can not tell just what change is to be made in the old law. This ought not to be so.

Some legislatures require that an amendment to a law shall first be set forth in full in connection with the particular provision of the old law which it is proposed to amend and then followed by that provision as it will appear when amended. Only in that way is it possible from a mere reading of a bill to understand what would be the effect of a proposed amendment to a law. Congress ought by law to make such a requirement as to all proposed amendments to Federal statutes.

Mr. MANN. I can tell the gentleman about that. In the form in which we report these bills we have invariably provided the time when work should be commenced and the time within which it must be completed. This simply amends that section, changing the time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

DAM ACROSS ST. CROIX RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25502) to authorize James D. Markham and Chauncey A. Kelsey and others to construct a dam across the St. Croix River between Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION, LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Little Rock, Ark., in May, 1911.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the executive committee of the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, to be held at Little Rock, Ark., in the month of May, 1911, such tents, with necessary poles, ridges, and pins, as may be required at said reunion: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property, the same to be delivered to said committee designated at such time prior to the holding of said reunion as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and William M. Kavanaugh, general chairman of said executive committee: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from said William M. Kavanaugh a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MONDELL. To make a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 28623) to establish a fish hatchery in the State of Wyoming.

ARPENT LOT, PENSACOLA, FLA.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House passed a House bill, H. R. 31987, providing that "the United States hereby remises, releases, and quitclaims under the heirs of Charles J. Heinberg, deceased, and Bertha Heinberg, his widow, and their assigns, all of arpent lot No. 44, in the old city of Pensacola, Fla.," but there was a Senate bill on the calendar to the same effect which should have been passed, and I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the House bill was passed and substitute the Senate bill for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the bill S. 8736, in precisely the same language as the bill referred to, which was passed by the House, be substituted for the House bill, and that the House bill lie on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The bill H. R. 31987 was ordered to lie on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois asked leave to withdraw the report to establish a fish hatchery in Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and would like to hear from the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILSON] saw the Speaker about it and said there was some mistake in the report and wished to withdraw it. The Chair knows nothing about it, but suggested that he leave the request on the Speaker's table.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask that that be postponed until I can see the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILSON].

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 32212).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to turn back to a few matters which were passed yesterday without prejudice. The first is on page 50, in relation to the appropriation for the crypt for John Paul Jones. That was passed without prejudice, and I think a point of order was pending against it.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the gentleman will offer an amendment, and I make a point of order to the paragraph, so that they may offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. If they have the right to offer an amendment, I will make the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. I move to strike out the paragraph and insert——

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw the point of order so that the gentleman may offer his amendment.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The paragraph can go out, and then the gentleman can offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order.

Mr. MACON. I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 50 substitute for the paragraph beginning on line 3 and ending on line 15 the following:

"The Secretary of the Navy shall have plans and specifications and estimates prepared for the cost of the completion of the crypt at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., as a permanent resting place for the body of John Paul Jones, and shall report the same to the next session of Congress."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I understand the motion is to strike out the paragraph and insert that which has been offered.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. LOUD. I submit this as a part of my remarks:

[House report No. 2114, Sixty-first Congress, third session.]

JOHN PAUL JONES.

Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 8868:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8868) providing for a permanent resting place for the body of John Paul Jones, having had the same under consideration, report thereon with the recommendation that it pass with the following amendment:

Section 2, line 13, strike out the words "one hundred and thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-five."

This bill has the approval of the President of the United States, as will appear by the following extract from his annual message at the opening of the present session of Congress, in which he states:

"I unite with the Secretary (of the Navy) in the recommendation that an appropriation be made to construct a suitable crypt at Annapolis for the custody of the remains of John Paul Jones."

This bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear from the following extract from the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy:

"The department renews its recommendations that $135,000 be appropriated to provide an appropriate resting place for the remains of John Paul Jones."

Similar legislation has been recommended by previous Secretaries of the Navy, as will appear from the following letters:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 26, 1906.

SIR: The crypt of the chapel at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, having been selected as the place of final deposit of the body of John Paul Jones, I have the honor to recommend that suitable provision be made for finishing this part of the building in a manner appropriate to such purpose.

Under existing contracts the crypt of the chapel will be left in the rough, with exposed concrete and brickwork. The department has been in correspondence with the architect of the building, Mr. Ernest Flagg, and has received from him an estimate and tentative plans for the finishing of the crypt. A copy of the letter of the architect is inclosed for the information of the committee. It will be seen that Mr. Flagg's suggestions are based upon a substantial, though not the more costly, style of finish and decoration.

Inasmuch as the appropriations heretofore made for the erection of buildings at the Naval Academy are not sufficient to cover the finishing of the crypt in the manner herein suggested, even if such action could appropriately be taken without the special sanction of Congress, the draft of a measure authorizing the work and providing an appropriation of $135,000 therefor is inclosed.

Learning that, in the preliminary steps connected with this matter before it was taken up by the Government, Gen. Horace Porter, ambassador of the United States at Paris, had expended from his private purse the sum of $35,000, this department was prepared to recommend that he be reimbursed therefor; but he has most generously and patriotically declined to accept such reimbursement, suggesting that, instead, the sum originally proposed for the finishing of the crypt, $100,000, and which, it was feared, would be inadequate to do so appropriately, be increased by the amount of any reimbursement to which he might be supposed to be entitled. In view of this public-spirited suggestion by Gen. Porter, the sum named in the estimate for the finishing and decoration of the crypt is made $135,000. This sum, it is believed, is barely sufficient to complete the work in a simple but suitable and substantial manner.

Very respectfully, CHARLES J. BONAPARTE, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 11, 1908.

SIR: Under date of April 26, 1906, my predecessor addressed a letter to you, inviting attention to the crude and unfinished condition of the crypt of the chapel at the Naval Academy, which had been selected as the place of final deposit of the body of John Paul Jones, and recommending that suitable provision be made for completing this part of the building in an appropriate manner.

Under existing contracts the crypt of the chapel has been left in the rough, with exposed concrete and brick, and appropriations heretofore made for buildings at the Naval Academy are not sufficient to cover the finishing of the crypt in the manner desired, even if such action could properly be taken without the special sanction of Congress.

Before submitting its letter above mentioned the department obtained an estimate and tentative plan for the completing of the crypt in a substantial, though not expensive, style of finish and decoration, at a proposed cost of $135,000.

Believing that from all considerations the crypt of the chapel at the Naval Academy should not be left in its present condition, I have the honor to submit a draft of a bill making provision for its proper completion, concurring in and renewing the recommendation made by my predecessor that the matter receive your favorable consideration and that of the committee. The amount to be appropriated for this purpose is, in the draft submitted, left blank.

Very respectfully, V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 4, 1908.

SIR: The department has the honor to inform the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives, that the crypt of the chapel at the United States Naval Academy, selected as a permanent resting place for the body of John Paul Jones, has been left with only the foundation prepared. Appropriations heretofore made for buildings at the Naval Academy are not available for further preparing this crypt.

In the search for the body of John Paul Jones, Gen. Horace Porter, ambassador of the United States to France, expended from his private purse the sum of $35,000, and patriotically declined reimbursement for the same, generously suggesting that the amount be added to the sum of $100,000 originally proposed for the crypt, but thought to be inadequate.

In view of this public-spirited suggestion by Gen. Porter, the department recommends that there be inserted in the estimates for naval appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, an item of $135,000 for completing and finishing in every respect the crypt of the chapel of the United States Naval Academy in accordance with plans obtained by the department.

Very respectfully, TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY, Secretary.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The following letter was received from Gen. Horace Porter, through whose patriotic efforts the body of John Paul Jones was returned to the United States for proper interment:

277 MADISON AVENUE,
New York, December 3, 1910.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed printed reports will show that this appropriation of $135,000 passed the Senate without opposition in 1908 and was favorably reported by the Naval Committee of the House in 1909, but has never been presented to the House for its action. It has been urged by your predecessor, by Secretaries Bonaparte, Metcalf, Newberry, and Meyer, by The Navy League, Paul Jones clubs, patriotic societies, the press, and hosts of public-spirited citizens.

All appeals to Congress thus far, however, have been without avail. For 113 years the body of this great central figure in our naval history was allowed to lie neglected in a sort of dumping ground in a distant land, and when brought back to the country he so eminently served it has lain for five years equally neglected, stowed away like old lumber in a building at Annapolis with every effort defeated to have it put at least in consecrated ground.

The body was taken by the Government to Annapolis, believing that the memories it would awake would be an inspiration to the midshipmen at the academy. Instead of that it remains only as a reminder of a nation's humiliating neglect of its historic defenders and is a sad example to young men about to enter the naval service.

The question is not the erection of a monument to a hero's memory or the conferring of any title or distinction, but the poor privilege of providing for his remains a decent burial in consecrated ground.

If England were guilty of dishonoring the body and memory of Nelson in such a manner she would justly incur the contempt of every civilized nation.

A number of patriotic gentlemen are willing to provide the means for taking the body for burial, if permitted, to a lot in a city cemetery, if this session of Congress refuses it a sepulcher, so that the remains may rest at least in consecrated ground; but when it is remembered that Paul Jones was buried in Paris by charity, the expenses having been borne by a humble commissary of police, it would constitute a further national disgrace to leave his remains to be buried in his own country again by the cold hand of charity.

President Taft is very earnest in this matter and you will find in his message to Congress recommendation of an appropriation.

Senators DEPEW and ROOT will interest themselves in the Senate, and among those in the House who are in favor of the appropriation are OLCOTT, OLMSTED, DWIGHT, RAINEY, and, I think, Speaker CANNON, who has a letter from me on the subject.

Your well-drawn bill seems to cover all the points. Perhaps it might facilitate progress if you introduced the bill identical with the bill that passed the Senate and was approved by the Naval Committee and the House, copy of which is inclosed.

Nineteen patriotic societies of the country and all patriotic people will all deeply appreciate the effort you are to make with this Congress.

If the appropriation is not secured this session it will probably never be secured.

Yours, very sincerely, HORACE PORTER.

Hon. GEORGE A. LOUD,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

In another letter, under date of May 28, 1910, Gen. Horace Porter states, in part, as follows:

Many promises were made by the Government that the body of Paul Jones should be given a decent sepulcher, but notwithstanding the urging of our Presidents, Secretaries of the Navy, 19 patriotic societies, Paul Jones clubs, and public press, etc., there has been no step taken even to place it in some consecrated place. It still lies on a few trestles, stowed away like old lumber in one of the Annapolis buildings. His poor body was probably better off during the 113 years of neglect in Paris, for there at least it reposed in consecrated ground.

The promise was to have the crypt of the chapel at Annapolis fixed so as to serve as a mausoleum for the remains of this illustrious patriot, but all efforts for an appropriation to carry this out have entirely failed.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 25 of the bill, lines 11 to 13, against which a point of order was made yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to return to page 25, to that part of the paragraph which relates to the 150-ton floating crane.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order on that paragraph yesterday because I was not convinced at the time that it was an absolute necessity, but since the convening of the session this morning I have become convinced that in all human probability that crane will be a necessity for proper work in that yard. I therefore withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order to ascertain some information. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts inform the committee as to the need of this crane at this yard? Is there any crane of like capacity existing there at the present time?

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I will say for the information of the gentleman that there is no crane of this size anywhere in the world. There is no floating crane at the Boston yard of any sort at present, with the possible exception of one which was sunk, a small crane, last summer. The need of the Navy to-day is for cranes of at least 150 tons capacity. There is urgent need for such a crane at the Boston yard.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to say there is no existing crane at the Boston Navy Yard?

Mr. ROBERTS. There is a smaller crane, which sunk last summer, and has not yet been put into condition for use, a crane of about 50 tons.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this for a floating crane or a stationary crane?

Mr. ROBERTS. I am speaking of floating cranes entirely.

Mr. STAFFORD. What yards in the country are now equipped with floating cranes?

Mr. ROBERTS. The New York yard has a floating crane under process of construction, possibly about completed, of 100 or 110 tons capacity. There is a crane at Puget Sound yard under process of construction of about 110 tons. There is a crane authorized for Pearl Harbor. The authorization last year was for 110 tons, and this bill has changed that authorization to 150 tons.

Mr. STAFFORD. Those are the three instances that have floating cranes?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any provision made for a floating crane at the League Island yard, Philadelphia?

Mr. ROBERTS. Not at present, but it is the intention of the department to ask for these cranes at all of the important yards, because of the necessity for such a piece of apparatus to handle the heavy weights that are now called upon to be handled by these cranes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall the discussion a year ago when this subject was under consideration. At that time I did not think the discussion satisfied me clearly that there was need of having a floating crane at every yard. I can see where at New York, Puget Sound, and Pearl Harbor there might be need of having a floating crane, but to equip every yard with a floating crane for temporary use might not be necessary.

Mr. ROBERTS. All of the important yards of the country now have assigned to them a definite number of battleships for repairs, instead of sending a great number of battleships into one yard. The fleet is thus divided and four or five battleships are assigned to each of the important yards, so that the repairs may go on simultaneously on the fleet in all these yards, and not only go on at once but be expeditiously done. For that reason it is necessary that we have the apparatus in the yards to handle these weights.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform us how much of the time of the year one of these floating cranes would be utilized in such a yard as the Boston yard, considering the work that yard has had in the past several years?

Mr. ROBERTS. That would be impossible to accurately determine.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, approximately.

Mr. ROBERTS. It would depend entirely on the nature of the repairs that were required. For instance, if anything is needed about the guns or the turrets, the crane is indispensable. If anything is needed in the way of installation of new boilers, the crane is indispensable. It is impossible to say when a particular ship will require those repairs to the turrets, to the guns, or the boilers. That may come at any time. An explosion in the boilers may necessitate the taking out of the boilers and the putting in of new ones. It is then absolutely necessary even in time of peace to have a machine that can do that work, and in time of war it would be suicide almost not to have such machines.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has not answered my question as to the approximate time they will be engaged in a year.

Mr. ROBERTS. It is impossible to answer that question.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no use of appropriating $350,000 for a floating crane that may be used for only one month in a year.

Mr. ROBERTS. It is impossible to answer the gentleman's question just as much as it is to tell the gentleman how much of the year a dry dock is occupied. It is not that it should be continuously occupied, but that we should have it there when needed.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is another floating crane at New York to perform that work, there is no necessity for having one at Boston.

Mr. ROBERTS. These cranes under the law can not be removed without legislation from one yard to the other.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman can not give any more definite information as to the need of it I will feel compelled to make the point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. The crane at New York is not large enough to do the work that is required of it, either in the New York yard or elsewhere. That is the point of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman makes the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not need to make the point of order since the provision is not in the bill.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, on page 26, "Navy yard, Washington," we passed over an amendment, to which a point of order has been made, and the point of order was made, I think, by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. It was reserved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. FOSS. I would ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] whether he intends to insist on his point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order on this proposition last night more for the purpose of getting information than anything else. It contains so much legislation, and I am very much afraid if it becomes a part of this bill that it will tend to delay and postpone the proceedings instead of expediting them. If the gentleman has any information on that line, I would like to hear it. In other words, is it absolutely necessary now that legislation of this or similar kinds become law before the Government can do the business it contemplates doing?

Mr. FOSS. The department has so advised us in the letter which I inserted in the RECORD, on page 3021. This whole matter has been submitted to the Attorney General, and he says that under the law he is unable to secure a clear title for right of way upon which to build this track into the Washington Navy Yard. And if the gentleman will note that letter he will see it is stated—

> The Department of Justice finds no provision of law under which the necessary legal proceedings can now be taken to clear the Government's title to the lands in question.

Mr. COX of Indiana. On which page is the gentleman reading?

Mr. FOSS. On page 3021 of yesterday's RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; although I am yielding in the time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to call the chairman's attention to this language in the bill and see what he thinks of it:

> That it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, etc.

What do you leave the discretion there in the Secretary of the Navy for—to give him the right to request the Attorney General to begin these proceedings if it is absolutely necessary on the part of the Government that it have legislation of this kind? Why not make it immediately mandatory upon the Attorney General that he shall begin these proceedings?

Mr. FOSS. I have no objection to it so far as that is concerned, only the Attorney General will move upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy, because the Secretary of the Navy has charge of all of these things. It is under his department. As far as that is concerned there is no disposition on the part of the department to delay this matter one day.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, as I recollect, we passed some legislation relating to this some time ago.

Mr. FOSS. We did, and we got a very satisfactory solution of the whole difficulty.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Under that law, passed last year, is it not up to the Attorney General or the Government to move in this matter at once?

Mr. FOSS. I thought we would have the right to move at once. I was surprised when this proposition came to the committee. It seems that, under the decision of the Attorney General, he does not feel that he can go ahead. Now, I say, let us give him the legislation.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I wanted to ask the gentleman.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is that because of the fact now that it requires, first, the request of the Secretary of the Navy before the Attorney General can act?

Mr. FOSS. No; the Secretary has already requested the Attorney General.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, the construction of the law, as it now exists, by the Attorney General, is that it does not authorize him to proceed.

Mr. FOSS. I am willing to strike out those words:

> At the request of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SIMS. I am trying to get at the gentleman's contention in the matter, whether or not the law as it now exists authorizes the Attorney General to proceed, or whether it must be supplemented by additional legislation.

Does the Attorney General claim that, under the provisions of the act passed in 1910, which expressly authorized condemnation proceedings, he can not move condemnation proceedings to acquire the land? The act includes condemnation and the law of condemnation in this District is very clear and specific, and here is an amendment proposing to change the whole law of condemnation and to have a lawsuit to settle the title of every claimant, whether in good faith or not, and give the United States and every claimant an appeal to the Supreme Court and delay the matter perhaps for 20 years and allow these tracts to remain on K and Canal Streets. Now, does the Attorney General of the United States claim, and is the gentleman warranted in saying, that under that act we have not authorized him to proceed by condemnation? Why do we have to acquire title before we can condemn? You can always condemn and let the parties litigate over the proceeds where there is any question about the title to any specific piece of land.

Mr. FOSS. I will state to the gentleman that I am just as anxious to see the construction of this track into that yard as the gentleman is. Last year, as I said a moment ago, we arrived at a very satisfactory solution of this question with the railroad company, and we passed a law giving the Attorney General the right to institute condemnation proceedings to acquire title to this property on which to build the tracks. Now, that law that we passed last year was submitted to the Attorney General, and he says that he has not sufficient authority under it to institute the necessary legal proceedings that will enable the Government to acquire clear title to that property, and in this letter that the Secretary of the Navy sends here he says that the Department of Justice has drafted a provision that would give the Attorney General the necessary authority in the premises.

Mr. SIMS. To do what? Not to condemn.

Mr. FOSS. To clear the Government title to the land in question.

Mr. SIMS. Before commencing condemnation proceedings? Now, why should that be the case?

Mr. PADGETT. We simply have this statement before us: The Department of Justice finds no provision of law under which the necessary legal proceedings can now be taken to clear the Government title to the land in question.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, yes; to clear the Government title. But you can condemn when there is any question about the title. Are you going to have condemnation proceedings instituted to clear the title before the Government starts to institute that improvement? You do not have to have a clear title to institute the proceedings.

Mr. PADGETT. Where the Government claims to own the land itself, and there is a dispute as to its title, why, it would be a queer thing for the Government to condemn its own title.

Mr. SIMS. It could condemn the land on this right of way. The Government can condemn, and the right to the proceeds, as well as the land itself out of which the proceeds arise, may be determined by subsequent litigation.

Mr. PADGETT. The Department of Justice says that it can not proceed and wants further authority. The Navy Department has submitted a provision, asking us to put it in the bill to expedite the matter.

Mr. SIMS. To clear the title?

Mr. PADGETT. We are trying to comply with the request of the Department of Justice and expedite the matter. We leave it to the House. If you block it, we can not help it.

Mr. SIMS. The object and purpose of this is interminable delay. This railroad company has occupied public property here for 40 years without compensation, and it is to be the beneficiary in this case.

Mr. PADGETT. The Department of Justice has acted in good faith and has submitted to us a proposition to the effect that they can not proceed without this legislation. We are trying to get the legislation, so that the department will have no further excuse for delay.

Mr. SIMS. A year ago, when I offered an amendment here to have the United States Government acquire this land and build this track, the railroad company was powerful enough to throttle the amendment and keep its tracks on K and Canal Streets, and thus serve private interests without even paying taxes on the roadbed.

Mr. PADGETT. I know nothing about the railroad company, and I care nothing about it.

Mr. SIMS. I can offer an amendment here now authorizing the Government to construct, own, and operate this road, but a point of order will be promptly made against it.

Mr. PADGETT. Last year, when we authorized the railroad company to pay a portion of this expense, we directed the department to proceed in condemnation proceedings. Now the Department of Justice says that under the provision as enacted it is incapable of proceeding and needs further legislation. In this we are simply trying to comply with the request of the Department of Justice.

Mr. SIMS. There is not a line in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the effect that they have not the power of condemnation now as the law stands.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy says that the Department of Justice finds no provision of law under which the necessary legal proceedings can be had.

Mr. SIMS. For what?

Mr. PADGETT. The necessary legal proceedings to be taken to clear the Government title to the land in question. Now, Congress provided last year that this road should be placed on the Government land, and if the Department of Justice is powerless to proceed, I am in favor of giving it all necessary power to proceed, in order that the Department of Justice may have no further excuse or justification for delay.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Did your committee have the Attorney General before them?

Mr. PADGETT. We did not.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Did you have any of his decisions?

Mr. PADGETT. We did not have anything before us. This is a matter that has come up since we reported the bill, and has been sent to us, and we are introducing it here by way of amendment. We have had no hearings whatever.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this the only information which the gentleman's committee has, coming from the Secretary of the Navy in the shape of this letter——

Mr. PADGETT. That is all I have.

Mr. COX of Indiana (continuing). In which the Secretary of the Navy states the opinion of the department?

Mr. PADGETT. That is all I have.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It looks to me as though this Committee of the Whole ought to have some more information than that.

Mr. PADGETT. I have given the gentleman all I have, and I have said that our purpose was to expedite the matter and to remove any possible excuse for further delay.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is what I had reference to.

Mr. PADGETT. And this legislation will accomplish it.

Mr. SIMS. I will cut this short by making the point of order and letting it be ruled on.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to return to page 22, Bureau of Equipment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to page 22.

Mr. SIMS. Let me offer this amendment in lieu of the portion stricken out.

Mr. FOSS. I shall make a point of order against it.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman of course can do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

From and after the passage of this act the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. shall not carry nor deliver freight or passengers to any point, except to the Washington Navy Yard, over its present tracks on K and Canal Streets SE., being the navy-yard connection.

Mr. FOSS. I make a point of order against that. This does not relieve the situation at all.

Mr. SIMS. It would relieve the situation if the gentleman would let it go in. Why does the gentleman want this company to deliver to private individuals——

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FOSS. I ask to return to page 22, Bureau of Equipment. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] reserved a point of order upon that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it had been my intention to insist upon this point of order, but as the Secretary of the Navy has the power to distribute the duties of the different bureaus among other bureaus, and as the purpose of this is merely to permit the utilization of the appropriations for one year in accordance with his desire to distribute these duties, I shall not at this time insist on the point of order; but I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that if he is in favor of this so-called Meyer's system he need not be encouraged in the hope that this will aid in having it permanently fixed upon the service. I withdraw this point of order in the hope that in the next Congress a reorganization will be effected which will put these naval establishments in control of men fitted to conduct great industrial enterprises and take them from under the control of men who are educated and prepared to fight and to handle great ships but who are not fitted to conduct industrial operations. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. FOSS. Now I desire to return to page 21, "Coal and transportation." That paragraph was passed over yesterday at the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 21, line 10, after the word "dollars," the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to transport coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman want to develop the Alaskan coal fields?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to say for the benefit of the committee that I did not offer this amendment as a matter of form. It is an amendment to prevent the Navy from taking coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. This question came up before the committee last year, and it was defeated by only one vote. At that time I did not urge it, because I was afraid it might embarrass the department if it was done without notice to them. But during the year, notwithstanding the fact that the committee refused that amendment by only one vote, the Navy Department has not made any particular effort to investigate as to the coal on the Pacific coast until recently. This report could easily have been ready now for Congress.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that to-day we are using or testing out the Washington coal on the Maryland and also on the West Virginia?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am well aware of the fact, and I am aware that they did not test it until it was too late to get a report to the committee when this bill was up for consideration. I have an unofficial report of the test, and it shows that the Maryland with Pacific coast coal maintained a sustained speed of 15 knots for 24 hours, and during that 24 hours she consumed only 215 tons of coal. I doubt whether that record has ever been surpassed even by Pocahontas coal, that we now send around to the Pacific coast. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Navy Department always used this coal until 1904.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the relative price of the coal from the East and the Washington coal?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It costs about one-half as much for the Pacific coast coal as it does to take around the Atlantic coal to the Pacific, and the difference between the two coals in efficiency is about 6 per cent. In some respects, perhaps more, but in other particulars less.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman means that the eastern coal is 6 per cent more efficient than the western coal?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and it costs from two to three times as much. I want to call attention to the fact that the Oregon when it made its famous trip from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean made its best record of that entire trip when it was using Pacific coast coal, the very coal that the Navy now refuses to use in time of peace.

Mr. MADDEN. What eastern coal is the gentleman comparing the western coal to?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am comparing the western coal with the Pocahontas coal, the only coal that the Navy uses, so far as I know, on our coast.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the best steam coal in the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; probably.

Mr. KITCHIN. And the gentleman says the eastern coal costs three times as much?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, it costs 50 to 100 per cent more. I received a statement from a coal man yesterday, who said it cost three or four times as much, but I think he is in error. I think the price of the Atlantic coal is $7.50 delivered at the navy yard, and the Washington coal is about $3.50 delivered at the navy yard.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose the gentleman's amendment should be enacted into law, would the people who own the coal mines in Washington raise the price when there was no competition?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am not informed what they are going to do, and I can not anticipate what they are going to do. If the Washington coal dealers should undertake to do that, the Government could go into British Columbia and get the coal there, which is equal, practically, to Pocahontas coal, and they could get it for what the freight would be to take Pocahontas coal to the Pacific.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman approve of reciprocity?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do to that extent. A reciprocity that would never be tried.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

By unanimous consent the time of Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington was extended five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I wish to call the committee's attention to this fact, that while I am not advocating the use of British Columbia coal, it is admitted that that coal is equal to the Pocahontas coal.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is clearly in order. This same amendment was offered a year ago to the same paragraph in the same identical language, and the point of order was overruled.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DIEKEMA). The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington is, in the opinion of the Chair, clearly a limitation, and not new legislation. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I hope that this discussion on the point of order will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not. The gentleman's time has been extended for five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want the committee to know the fact that this means a saving of almost $1,000,000 a year to the Navy Department, and it is a question we ought not to pass by lightly. As I started to say, when interrupted, I am not in favor of using British Columbia coal, but I would rather see British Columbia coal used by the navy yard on the Pacific coast, when it costs not more than half as much as Pocahontas coal, and is equally as good, than to send Pocahontas coal around to the Pacific coast in foreign ships, operated by Chinese coolies, when you can get the coal from British Columbia and lay it down in the yards upon the Pacific coast for the same money that you pay the foreign ships to carry this Pocahontas coal to the Pacific coast.

Mr. KITCHIN. After paying the tariff upon it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the incentive or inducement for the Navy Department to follow that practice if it is to the benefit of the Government to purchase Pacific coast coal at a much lower price? The department must have some reason for transporting the Atlantic coast coal to the Pacific coast.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will be mighty glad to answer that question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can we not trust the Navy Department officials in this matter to determine what is the best thing to do, or does the gentleman's argument lead the conviction that they are purposely purchasing a much higher priced article——

Mr. HAMER. They never made a test of the coal until lately, and how could they know?

Mr. STAFFORD. If they never made a test, now that it has been made why can not the Secretary of the Navy purchase the cheaper priced coal, if it is as efficient?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to answer the gentleman's question by calling his attention to a fact that occurred while I was insisting on having this coal tested. Last September I insisted that the test be made, as I had been insisting ever since the committee, by one vote, refused to insert this amendment a year ago. I got a dispatch from Washington City, when I asked that the proper grates be inserted so that the test might be fair. Here is the dispatch:

> Cost herringbone grate bars of boiler, Maryland, $2,800; one-half boilers, $1,550. Not recommended.

That was from the commandant down at the Mare Island Navy Yard. Here was an item of a million dollars a year involved, and yet he refused to put in a proper grate to make the test because it would cost $2,800. I say that it was not only absurd, it was worse than that; it was stupid incompetence. As I said to the department at that time, I say it absolutely demonstrated that the commandant at the Mare Island Navy Yard and the men who had this matter in charge did not want to make a fair test. This action so demonstrated conclusively. Let me say that since that time they have made the test and that the coal has been found to be efficient, even without proper grates. The Oregon, as I have said, used this coal when she made the best portion of her record, and when the French fleet came into the port of Seattle they used this coal, and they found it efficient. Our Navy used it until 1904, and they found it efficient; the Revenue-Cutter Service uses it and finds it efficient, and all the merchant vessels use it and find it efficient. The Navy Department alone objects to it. Their great objection is that it makes so much smoke. But who is going to see the smoke in time of peace? What difference does it make then?

Mr. KITCHIN. Do the marine vessels on the coast use this western coal?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They not only use it, but foreign naval vessels upon that coast use it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Do the vessels engaged in foreign commerce use this coal?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They do. The highest and best class of vessels we have on the Pacific use it. And, another thing, I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that in case of war we would be compelled to use this coal. Now, why should we continue to spend a million dollars a year for Atlantic coal to use in time of peace when we would have to use Pacific coast coal in time of war?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STANLEY. I ask that his time be extended.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to limit the debate upon this proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] will not attempt to limit this debate right now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think the gentleman will not save any time by insisting on closing this debate now.

Mr. FOSS. Not at this time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEARRE. Do I understand the purpose of the gentleman's amendment to be for the United States to use the coal that is found in the State of Washington?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. PEARRE. What is the purpose?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The purpose of my amendment is to keep the Navy Department from taking coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean for naval purposes.

Mr. PEARRE. And thereby compelling the Navy Department to use the coal of the Pacific coast?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman wants to know, I want to prohibit the Navy Department from sending around to the Pacific coast the Pocahontas or any other Atlantic coals. They do not use any other coal from the Atlantic coast, however, so far as I know.

Mr. PEARRE. Does not the gentleman think it is better to leave that in the discretion of the officials of the Navy?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. We have left it in the discretion of the Navy for years, and we have not been able even to get an efficient test. They have not yet made a report on this coal; the only report I have is an unofficial report. When are they going to do it? How long are we going to wait? We have waited for years. They have had since the last naval bill was passed until now, and they have given us no information.

Mr. PEARRE. Then the gentleman practically admits the purpose of the amendment is to compel the use of the Pacific coast coal and to prevent the transportation across the continent of any of the eastern coal?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Have you any data to show how much it would save the Government in case the Navy was compelled to buy western slope coal?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It would save between $900,000 and $1,000,000 annually. It would be more if they would send more vessels around there. They have all the vessels on this side, and never permit one on the Pacific to go any higher than San Francisco.

Mr. KAHN. I would suggest that the battleship fleet is in the Atlantic and the cruiser fleet is in the Pacific.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The cruiser fleet and all the naval vessels are now down in the Southern Pacific. I have a statement here now from the Secretary of the Navy, and there is but one vessel to-day in active commission north of San Francisco.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask this question—it seems to be a matter of importance: What reason has been given, as the result of these tests, and there have been reasons given after tests, for not using that coal? What do the naval officers say?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say to the gentleman that they have said it was not efficient, but have made no tests. We have never been able to get a test until the one they are making now. I served notice on them, and the action of this committee was sufficient notice to them a year ago, that Congress was not going longer to permit the use of Atlantic coal on the Pacific unless they would by test demonstrate the necessity for so doing.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the excessive amount of smoke the only objection?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is not the only objection, but the main objection. I have here, as I say, an unofficial report, which was sent to me in confidence. I am not going to give the name of the man who sent it to me. I have not been able to get the official report, although I hoped I would by this time.

He says in this report, which I have here, that practically the only objection the naval officers made to him was the smoke. That statement comes not from the Navy Department but from the gentleman who wrote me.

Mr. STANLEY. May I ask the gentleman, Do your western coal people belong to the Coal Trust?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am not in the coal business, nor the trust business, and I do not know.

Mr. STANLEY. I presume, from the hard time they have, that they are not in it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not think they are.

Mr. STANLEY. There is a close system of interlocking directors between the eastern coal fields—a great many of them—and the United States Steel Corporation, and it seems they are kissing each other. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I can not yield further. I want to make just one more statement, and then I shall be through. I want to show to the House a photograph that demonstrates another result of carrying this coal around the Pacific coast—the result not on the cost to the Navy but on the merchant marine.

I hold in my hand a photograph showing 17 merchant vessels rotting at anchor, placed in that position by foreign vessels which our Government permits to violate the coastwise laws of the country. That is only incidental to this naval question; but here are the pictures to show what they are doing along that line.

Mr. PEARRE. Then I understand that the gentleman's charge is that there is collusion practically between the Navy Department and the eastern coal operators.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not say who is responsible, but I am just giving the facts. I say there is no excuse for the action of the Navy in spending from $900,000 to $1,000,000 a year in bringing coal around from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast for the use of the Navy in time of peace. I assert that it is worse than a waste of public funds, for, in addition to wasting it, it does incalculable harm to American shipping.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman means to imply that in time of war they would have to use the western coal?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; in case of war on the Pacific. So if this coal is to be used in war, it seems to me of highest importance that they become accustomed to its use in time of peace.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I agree thoroughly with the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Washington. The closest corporation in this country is the combination between the Pocahontas coal people and the Navy Department, and it has been so for 20 years. I know that during the Spanish-American War, when Alabama coals that were perfectly good for steaming purposes were offered to the Navy Department for $3.25 a ton over the ship's rail at Mobile, only a night's sail from Tampa, the Navy Department bought Pocahontas coal and shipped it by rail to Tampa at an expense of $9.60, and that proposition has been kept up ever since.

Now, what control these particular people have over the Navy Department I do not know. But I do know this, that there is no other coal field in America that can sell coal to the Navy Department. The supply of the Navy is confined to this one field only.

Mr. CARY. Is it not a fact that the railroads and the coal companies are one and the same, and is not that the reason for the long hauls?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know about that. But I know this, that they have drawn millions of dollars out of the Federal Treasury on this coal question. There is no reason in time of peace why these Pacific coals could not be used for our Navy. They are absolutely as good steaming coals as the Pocahontas coal. They are the same class of coals as the Alabama grades of coal, and 20 years ago, when Mr. Herbert was Secretary of the Navy, he sent out the battleships Montgomery and Mobile to test the Alabama coals, and the only difference between them and the Pocahontas coal was not that they did not produce as much steam power or that they did not have as great a steaming radius per ton per mile as the Pocahontas coal, but that they produced a little more smoke and clogged the flues a little sooner, a few hours sooner in a 40-hour trial. Now, what have these men got to do but clean the flues?

Why should the Government of the United States spend millions of dollars in time of peace to relieve a captain and crew from the necessity of cleaning flues one or two hours less in 40 hours' time?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Was there anything found in that experiment as to the relative effect of the use of the coal on the life of ships? In other words, would a ship using Alabama coal last just as long as if its fires were kept up with the other coal?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think there was anything said in that report on the subject. The whole proposition is this: California coals and Alabama coals have a little more volatile matter in them and a little less fixed carbon than the Pocahontas coal. That is the only difference. They produce just as much steam power, and some of them produce more steam power, than the Pocahontas coal. They do produce more smoke and more dirt; but why should we ship coal at an immense expense around the Horn and across the continent to enable a few captains and ships' crews to do a little less work in handling their fuel? More than that, it is an injustice to the people. This business of making the Navy Department a close corporation, bound in here between the Allegheny Mountains and the Potomac River, has got to stop, or you will raise a prejudice against the Navy in this country that will bring more injury to it than anything else you can do. You want to build all your battleships on the eastern coast line. You want to buy all your supplies on the eastern coast line. You want all the navy yards there. You do not want the people of the United States to have any share in this Navy except in a few States. You might as well make up your minds, if you want a big navy and a navy that will be popular with the people of the United States, you have got to stop this, and you had better stop it right now by voting for the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HOBSON, Mr. SULZER, and several other Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], a member of the committee, as he was first on his feet.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to close debate on this proposition in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then recognize the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], who moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to amend by making it 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to amend by making it 30 minutes. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. Foss, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to take my full five minutes. It is not necessary in order to make the short statement I wish to make.

It is true that while in the testing of coal the Navy Department has found the Pocahontas coal always the superior coal of those tested, yet it is also true——

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption for information, because I know he is informed about this subject?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the gentleman know whether or not the Navy Department has made any tests of the Alaskan coal?

Mr. HOBSON. I am just about to bring up that point and various other points. I wish to register here a complaint that the Navy Department is not encouraging the development of appliances so that it can use the other coals. When it found, for instance, that the coal in Alabama approximated to the needs of the Navy it would have been in the line of economy and the best interests of the Government to have undertaken to develop smoke-consuming devices and other devices, so that the department could then use Alabama coal.

The same applies to the Pacific coast coal, not only that mined on the mainland but that in Alaska, and the Navy Department has not shown great interest in developing additional sources of supply that would prove of great, if not vital, importance in time of war, and we are put to millions of dollars of expense, perhaps, unnecessarily. I will not say unnecessarily, but perhaps.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What bureau buys this coal?

Mr. HOBSON. The Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, formerly the Bureau of Equipment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman think of the remedy of changing the officials of this bureau more often than they are changed?

Mr. HOBSON. That is a difficult question to answer, but I do think that the Navy Department itself, when it can see a possible inducement to save the Government a great deal of money to give it new supplies of coal, ought to encourage experiments instead of discouraging them.

The statement of the gentleman from California as to the reason they declined to take up further experiments with coal on the Pacific coast is in line with the reasons for not making experiments in general for improving the matériel of the Navy, the adverse report of an officer sufficing to cut off experiment. It would have cost $1,500 to change the grate bars! Therefore the officer there, who perhaps did not wish his own account to be made higher and wishing to make a record for economy, disapproved, and the Navy Department accepted his disapproval as final.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to say that the test that I referred to was made with the old grate bars. According to the testimony of experts, if it had been made with changed grate bars it would have been more effective, but notwithstanding that it comes within 6 per cent of the efficiency of eastern coal.

Mr. HOBSON. I remember the instance. They used the old grate bars; they did not go into it with the earnest purpose of trying to find out the full value of the coal to see if they could not improve or adopt the grate bars and other burning appliances so that the Pacific coast coal could be generally used. I wish to point out at this time the steadfast inertia and impediment of the Navy Department in the general development of matériel in the Navy, lo, these many years. We can not hope for better things from the department unless Congress takes an interest in improvements and developments. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. STANLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some one who is opposed to the amendment.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment, because I think it is very bad and an entirely mistaken policy to put a limitation on this provision which practically amounts to a prohibition upon the Navy Department of the United States to transport coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific, no matter what the conditions or circumstances may be.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is not the part of cautious statesmanship to put such a prohibition upon any great department of the Government of the United States. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama, my distinguished friend, Mr. UNDERWOOD, is a little franker than the distinguished gentleman from Washington, because the gentleman from Alabama does make practically an open accusation against the Navy Department as to its conduct with reference to the selection of the coal which it uses or should use in the battleships and ships of the Navy.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], who has just taken his seat, that it should be the purpose of the Navy Department—and in the absence of any proof to the contrary I think it is the business of the Congress of the United States to assume that it is the honest purpose of the Navy Department—to so administer the affairs of that great department as that the natural resources of the United States should be utilized for all governmental purposes whenever they can be, and whenever it is in the interest of economy, and therefore to the interest of the Government of the United States that they should be.

I furthermore agree with the gentleman from Alabama, who has had a distinguished naval career and who is thoroughly familiar with matters connected with the Navy and therefore speaks with more authority than a great many others in the House, that the Navy Department should so adjust its appliances and machinery and look after new appliances that the Navy is to use, not only the coal of the Pocahontas region but the coal of the Pacific coast and the coal of Alabama.

Mr. Chairman, I am not informed whether there is collusion, as has been said here, between the Secretary of the Navy or the Navy Department in any of its officials and the operators of the West Virginia coal region.

If gentlemen undertake to insinuate that, and that has been seriously insinuated here, then it is a matter which should be investigated by the Congress of the United States. Mr. Chairman, I think we are all compelled to assume, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, that the Navy Department is being administered honestly and fairly. I hold no brief for the West Virginia coals. On the contrary, I may say that the best steaming coal in the world comes from a section of the country in which I live and whose people I have the honor to represent in this Hall—the Georges Creek coal of Maryland—the coal par excellence, the best steaming coal in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEARRE. For a question.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I pretty thoroughly agree with the gentleman, that the Cumberland coal is one of the best, if not the best, steaming coal in the world, and yet Cumberland has been practically excluded by the Navy Department and Pocahontas coal has superseded it. Now, why? Not because Pocahontas coal is a better steaming coal than Cumberland. Why the change?

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I entirely agree with the gentleman, who is familiar with coal, and I am glad to have his confirmation of my statement that the Georges Creek coal is one of the best steaming coals in the world. As I said before, I hold no brief for the Pocahontas coal, and I say and reiterate that the Navy Department should be so administered as to open these contracts for coal to bids upon the part of all operators in all sections of the country. But that will not justify the gentleman from Washington in passing a law here which will practically create a monopoly, as far as the Pacific coast coals are concerned, to the extent that it will prohibit the use of any part of this appropriation for the transportation of coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. I oppose the amendment, therefore.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, perhaps the best steaming coal in the world is the coal that comes from the regions in West Virginia and Maryland known locally as the Georges Creek, Clear Creek, New River, and Pocahontas fields, and that being the case, the Navy Department can find a sort of excuse for declining to use other coals, because the highest test of the very best of the coals of that region is higher than the best test of the best coals found anywhere else, just a trifle, in British thermal units. It runs, I think, less than a hundred above that of the best Pacific coast coal. It is a little lower in ash, a little higher in fixed carbon, by some two or three points lower in moisture; and so if you are selecting absolutely the best steaming coal on earth, the best of the coal of the region we have referred to is that best coal. But the difference between those coals and the coals of the Pacific coast is so small, is so immaterial, that there is no excuse for excluding these western coals, at least in time of peace. In time of war it may be best that we have the greatest efficiency in British thermal units in our battleships, when they are cargoed with coal; but in time of peace there is no such argument, and in the matter of economy, at least $1,000,000 a year could, I am told, have been saved the past three or four years by the use of those coals.

Furthermore, beyond the fact that we produce some 5,000,000 tons of coal on that coast, we produce some 47,000,000 barrels of oil per year, equivalent to some 14,000,000 tons of coal.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes and I can not yield. The entire fleet on the Pacific could be readily equipped with oil burners, and a number of the vessels of the Navy have been so equipped, so that oil, the best and cheapest fuel on the Pacific coast, could be used. Yet, in spite of that fact, in spite of the fact that the difference in British thermal units, in moisture, in fixed carbon, in ash, between the two coals is trifling; in spite of the fact that California oil is the cheapest and best fuel for ships in the world, they are sending eastern coal clear around the Horn. Another thing, Mr. Chairman, as good steaming coal as there is in the world, and not barring the West Virginia and Maryland coals, is to be found in Alaska.

There is a bill on the calendar of this House proposing to open those Alaskan coal fields. There is coal just as good as the best of the Georges Creek coal and the best of the Pocahontas coal entirely tied up, and if we were to have a war to-day our Navy would be useless on the Pacific, because there is not enough fuel there for the use of the Navy, and it would take from six to seven weeks to bring cargoes around the Horn to supply the Navy. So this amendment, I hope, would have two effects—first, it would compel the Navy to use those western coals, and I hope it would have some effect in helping to open the great coal fields of Alaska. There are coals there in plenty, and no additional appliances in the way of grates are necessary to burn them. Some one somewhere in the navy yard may have imagined a different grate was necessary to burn western coals, but no change of grates is needed to burn the bituminous coal of the Pacific coast. If they attempted to use the lignites of Utah and Wyoming, and they can be used for naval purposes, it would perhaps require a different grate, but no different grate is needed, and no different grate would be used in the burning of the Pacific coast bituminous coal than is necessary in the use of the coals on the Atlantic coast.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is recognized.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, with all that has been said relating to this coal proposition I want to make this commentary: There is more coal and better coal on the Pacific belonging to the United States than there is on the Atlantic. Then why, I ask, should the Government spend hundreds of thousands of dollars, aye, millions of dollars, every year to transport coal in foreign bottoms, under foreign flags, from the Atlantic to the Pacific in order to coal our fleet? It seems to me to be an absurdity. Not only that, but it is poor governmental economy and bad business administration of public affairs.

Here is an opportunity to save the taxpayers of the country several millions of dollars every year, and all the Government has to do is to utilize its own coal product. All that the gentleman from Wyoming has said about the coal fields of Alaska is absolutely true. The Government is in possession of reports regarding these coal fields which prove conclusively that the Pacific coast coal is better for steam purposes than the Atlantic coal, and hence I can not understand why every year we are compelled to discuss this question and submit to the imposition. For the past 10 years, whenever this proposition has been before the House, I have stated the facts. All the Government has to do is to mine and produce its own coal on the Pacific coast and save the taxpayers of the country annually millions of dollars. Why is it not done? There is a reason, and the people are thinking about it, and they want to know. It is about time for us, the representatives of the people, to finally vote right on this question, and for that reason I shall vote again, as in the past, for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman says the people are thinking and want to know the reason. Will he state the reason why they do not do this?

Mr. SULZER. If I had the time I could give all the facts.

Mr. PRINCE. In two or three words.

Mr. SULZER. If I had time I could give the reason, but the gentleman is a very intelligent man and knows the reason just as well as I do. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. I am frank to say to my colleague I do not.

Mr. SULZER. Then, if the gentleman does not, it is about time he studied the proposition, and found out. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. I wanted to get the information from one who knew.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; I know, and everybody here knows, or ought to know. It has been strongly intimated by several of the speakers who have preceded me. It is about time the Government stopped transporting ship coal for its fleet from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. There are a lot of us here who really do not know about that. If the gentleman knows it, he owes it to the House to elaborate it a little for our information. What is the reason assigned by the gentleman for the fact that the Navy does not use the Pacific coast coal?

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman who asks this inquiry, I may say, is a distinguished editor, and sometimes I get a copy of his paper, read it, and some of the editorials, doubtless written by the gentleman, have given me some of the information I possess regarding this coal imposition on the Government. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, the greatest coal fields that have ever been discovered are in Alaska and belong to the Government; and the Government can get all the coal it needs for the cost of production and transportation. Why should the Government stand in its own way? Why should the Government stand in its own light and deprive itself of millions of dollars' worth of coal every year, but also deprive the patriotic people of the Pacific coast of this great boon? It is beyond my ken and I say it should cease. I trust the amendment will prevail.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, that we have transformed ourselves here in the committee into a body of coal experts, I want to say that we, too, produce coal out in the State of Illinois [laughter], and I think an amendment ought to be offered here providing that the Navy shall use coal from every coal-producing State in this country. [Laughter.]

It would be a very sensible proposition to provide such an amendment as that, and not leave it to the American Navy and its officers to say what kind of coal shall be used by our ships. It is a very important question that we have before us. We appropriate here $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 for a great battleship, and the proper coal is one of the great essential elements in the running of that great ship. There is no more important duty imposed upon our steam engineering department in connection with the Navy than the duty of selecting coal of the greatest efficiency, so that our ships may always be kept in a proper condition, ready in time of war.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to remind the gentleman that there are no battleships on the Pacific to use this coal.

Mr. FOSS. That is all right. There were a good many of them there not long ago. We had the whole fleet out there. I suppose the gentleman would like to have the whole American Navy in Puget Sound 12 months in every year. [Laughter.] I do not doubt it. We have officers in the Navy who have made this question a life study. Are we going to accept their statements, or are we going to make ourselves experts on this floor and say what coal shall be used? We are using western coal to-day in our navy yards to run our power plants, and the reason why they are not using the Washington coals on the ships is because the Washington coals are 25 per cent less efficient than the coal we are using.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What coal are you using?

Mr. FOSS. We use three kinds; not from one State alone in the American Union, but from three States. We use Pocahontas coal, Georges Creek coal, and New River coal. The idea that anybody should stand upon this floor and make insinuations against the Navy Department or denounce it because it uses these three different kinds of coal from three different States in the Union, for no other purpose than to try to get their own coal into the bins and bunkers of our battleships, is ridiculous and absurd. Have there been tests of this coal and Alaska coal? Yes; any number of tests.

All previous tests and examinations of coals mined in the States bordering the Pacific Ocean indicate that the western coals were not suitable for use in the Navy.

That is the statement of the department.

In the fall of 1909 arrangements were made with the Director of the Geological Survey to send to the Pacific coast a number of expert mine investigators to make a thorough and exhaustive investigation of every known mine of importance, particularly in Washington and British Columbia, the facilities of each mine, quantity and quality of output, etc., so that more definite and reliable data could be obtained.

The statement shows that the British Columbia coals are somewhat better than the State of Washington coals, but neither equal the straight run of mine of Pocahontas or New River coals obtained in the Eastern States. The volatile matter and ash are excessively high and the fixed carbon and heating values excessively low.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I ask two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. The Navy Department are as desirous of using these coals, if they are proper, as any coal mined anywhere in the country, and in the hope that some Pacific coast coal may be found which will avoid the necessity of shipping eastern coal to coal depots in the Pacific the department has arranged for an exhaustive test under actual steaming conditions of a number of the State of Washington coals—and for this purpose has designated one of the large armored cruisers of the Pacific Fleet—the U. S. S. Maryland—to make the tests. That vessel will use the Pacific coast coals, and at the same time the U. S. S. West Virginia will use the eastern coals in order that a direct comparison as to the relative value of the two coals can be obtained.

Mr. Chairman, that is the situation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. I do not want to consume all the time, because I want the gentleman from West Virginia and other gentlemen to have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman a question in regard to the argument made——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. FOSS. How much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes and a half.

Mr. FOSS. I can not yield.

Mr. BUTLER, Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania, and Mr. PEARRE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], who is a member of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, perhaps it is not so important for us to determine here at this time the character of coal that should be used in these great ships of war as it is to determine whether there is any combination between the Navy Department and these coal sellers. Let me give you here a bit of my own personal experience.

I wandered away from the fields of Pennsylvania to go to Virginia and West Virginia in search of gold in a coal mine. With an honorable end in view. I bought a very small and insignificant bit of stock in a coal company doing business in West Virginia, in the New River field, where coal is found good enough to eat for dessert on the finest table in the land. I made an inquiry of the Navy Department concerning the price the Government was paying for New River coal. I knew very well that I could not be interested in a contract with the Government and did not intend to sell, but I was desirous of obtaining the information; and I discovered that the coal mined in this district of West Virginia, where men crawl upon their bellies to get it, we could sell anywhere, to even a poor man, for 50 cents a ton more on the average than the Navy Department would give for it. We ought to be fair toward these men, honorable in their administration of the affairs of our Government, not one of whom can stand here to defend himself.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman please state how this coal is purchased by the Government, whether by bids?

Mr. BUTLER. By bids.

Mr. PEARRE. Open to any bidder?

Mr. BUTLER. Open bids, and there are often, I understand, ten or a dozen bidders.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman does not mean to say that the Pacific coast has an opportunity to submit bids?

Mr. BUTLER. I know nothing about that. I do not know where the department buys its coal.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. One minute. I have a great desire that injustice shall not be done to these officials, who, I know, are endeavoring to save the money of the Government.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman has no objection to injustice being done the taxpayer.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes; I want to look out for the taxpayer, too. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that the Pocahontas coal operators sell their coal to the Government for 50 cents a ton less than they can get for it from private parties.

Mr. BUTLER. I am giving the gentleman my own experience in a little mine in West Virginia in which I was and am interested, from which we could always sell the coal for 30, 50, or 60 cents more a ton, on the average, than we could have obtained from the Government.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The coal operators, then, are great public philanthropists.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is it not too late to offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. No; amendment is in order. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment of the gentleman from Washington the words: "And provided further, That in the event of the coal companies on the Pacific coast improperly and unduly raising the price of coal the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to purchase coal from British Columbia, or such other place where a proper price can be obtained."

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate on the paragraph or amendments is in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Foss) there were 72 ayes and 28 noes.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent for 15 minutes to make some remarks on the naval bill.

Mr. HOBSON. Before the gentleman does that, will he permit me to ask unanimous consent to return to page 15, that we went over yesterday?

Mr. PADGETT. I will withhold my request.

Mr. HOBSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 15 in connection with an amendment that I will offer.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear what the gentleman's amendment is before I grant consent.

Mr. HOBSON. I wish to recur for the purpose of adding an amendment to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not this same subject under consideration yesterday, and did not the gentleman propose an amendment to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objected?

Mr. HOBSON. He made a point of order against the amendment I then proposed, but this that I am going to offer is a different proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Illinois is temporarily absent from the Chamber, and therefore I object.

Mr. HOBSON. I did not intend to raise it while the gentleman from Illinois was absent, and I will withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, when the Secretary of the Navy submitted his annual report, I found in it the statement:

The Navy Department estimates for the expense of the naval establishment for the next fiscal year shows a saving of about $5,000,000 compared with the amount appropriated last year.

I also found this statement:

The inauguration of the steaming competition awakes a lively interest in the engineering matters throughout the service. This interest has brought about increased efficiency and economy of expenditure. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, the horsepower of the machinery of the fleet has been increased 15 per cent and the average cruising speed has been increased about 15 per cent, yet the total cost of fuel used on vessels in the Navy has decreased over $2,000,000.

Noticing that, I was impressed with it, and when the hearings came on Admiral Cone was before the committee, and I asked the admiral about the matter.

Admiral Cone, on page 262 of the hearings before the Naval Committee, stated:

The decrease in cost of fuel used in vessels of the Navy has amounted to $2,000,000 during the past year. About $750,000 of this amount is due to increased efficiency, the balance to decreased cruising.

That raised an interesting question. The opinion gathered from the statement of the Secretary of the Navy was that efficiency and economy had saved $2,000,000, and when we come to analyze this we found that the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering stated that of the supposed $2,000,000 only $750,000 was due to the increased efficiency and that $1,250,000 was due to reduced cruising. I got a little more interested in the matter and began to investigate further, and I have here a statement, which I will insert in the RECORD, showing the distance steamed by the United States battleships during the fiscal years 1908, 1909, and 1910, giving the steaming distance of each ship for each year separately. I shall give only the total now.

The total distance steamed in 1908 was 286,820 miles, the total distance steamed in 1909 was 568,229 miles, and the total distance steamed in 1910 was 108,213 miles. The number of battleships engaged in the cruising in 1908 was 22, in 1909 was 22, and in 1910, 21. The average per ship—and that gives the test of the matter—in 1908 was 13,037.3 miles; in 1909 the average for each ship was 24,828 miles, and in 1910 it was 5,153 miles. So that the cruising per battleship in 1909 was substantially five times as much as the cruising per battleship in 1910. It will be seen, therefore, that we have to take the statement of the Secretary with reference to the saving of $2,000,000 on account of increased efficiency with reference to the foregoing facts.

I wish also to call attention to another matter. It was stated in the first part of the report that there had been a saving of $5,000,000 in the estimates submitted for the next fiscal year, as compared with the amounts appropriated for the last year. I wish to call attention to the fact that while the amount carried in this bill is $5,929,314.14 less than the appropriations of last year, there is one fact that I wish to emphasize, and in doing that I want to call attention to the statement of Admiral Mason on page 60 of the hearing:

Mr. PADGETT. May I ask this question? I saw a statement in the paper the other day that there had been a saving of $5,000,000, comparing the estimates of this year and the appropriations of last year. One million eight hundred thousand dollars of it is made up of this amount that you have cut out of your estimate there because of the fact that you have not let the contracts for the ships, is it not, Admiral?

Admiral MASON. I don't know on what that report of saving was based. This $1,800,000 is not a saving; it is a delayed payment.

The CHAIRMAN. That really is not a saving, is it? That is to say, it simply means postponing the day of judgment?

Admiral MASON. Well, I have not reported any savings.

In other words, because the contract for the building of the battleship New York is held up in New York Navy Yard and has not been awarded, they have withheld submitting in the estimates $1,800,000 that would have been submitted if that contract had been let. So that whenever the building of the ship New York is begun this will have to be appropriated, and it is merely a postponement and not an economy.

I wish to call attention to a further fact. The total appropriations carried for increase of the Navy in the present bill this year are $25,755,547.67, and the sum total for the increase of the Navy in last year's appropriation was $33,770,346, or a difference of $8,014,798.33 omitted from the present bill under the item increase of the Navy. Therefore, if you add to that the $1,800,000 deferred on account of the battleship New York, you have $9,814,798.33, and then if you deduct from that the difference between the present year bill and these amounts, the $5,929,316.14, you have an excess or an increase this year of $3,885,482.92. In other words, last year we appropriated to meet the authorization, and because the authorizations of last year have not been fully carried out in contract, and because of the accumulations, as shown by the testimony of the constructor, there is an unexpended balance of about $6,000,000 they are withholding, and not asking for and submitting estimates to come into the present bill and which must come in the next year's bill or in the succeeding year's bill.

I do not wish the House to be misled by these estimates and provisions in the bill. There is no reduction. The fact is that the naval program for the increase of the Navy is larger in this bill than it was in last year's bill. Yet last year they asked appropriations and received appropriations of $33,000,000, and this year they are only asking for $25,000,000. It is simply, if you please, postponing——

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTS. The report of the Secretary of the Navy and his comparison of the amount to be called for in this year's bill, with the amount appropriated last year, was based on his recommendation for increase, was it not, and the figures that the gentleman is giving are based on what the committee actually voted for increase, which was six or seven million dollars more than the Secretary recommended? So that all his comparisons go for naught when you take into consideration the changed condition from the time the Secretary made his estimates and the conditions as they exist at this moment.

Mr. PADGETT. I have given both, and I have called attention to the fact that while last year for a smaller program we appropriated $33,000,000, this year, for a larger program, we are only appropriating $25,000,000. So that there must of necessity be carried to future appropriations a larger amount in the years to come.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BENNET of New York). The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS. Let me ask a further question. In the authorization for increase last year there were included moneys not only for the vessels authorized that year, but payments on vessels prior to that time?

Mr. PADGETT. And the same the present year.

Mr. ROBERTS. And the increase last year was due to the rapid advance of the work authorized before last year, which has not taken place in the current or last fiscal year, and that amount of increase will fluctuate from year to year in proportion as the contracts are let and the contractors rapidly or slowly execute the contracts and call for payments under those contracts?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, I was simply calling attention to the difference in the actual appropriations of this year and the actual appropriations last year, showing that the department has not asked for the usual and ordinary appropriations this year. And that is shown by the testimony of Admiral Watt, as it appears on page 221, where he shows that, having unexpended balances of $6,000,000, he is proposing to use that continuing appropriation instead of asking for the appropriations this year.

I find, Mr. Chairman, that my voice is in such condition that it is practically impossible for me to proceed. I have here a statement, which I shall insert as a part of my remarks in the RECORD, that takes up in detail the different statements submitted by the bureaus and analyzes them, and they show that instead of being decreases in the administration there have been increases, and that this apparent decrease is due not to an actual reduction, but simply to a postponement and deferring to future years of appropriations for works that are called for in the present bill. Let us not deceive ourselves. If we carry out this program, the money must be appropriated in the bills to come next year.

Following is the statement referred to:

MEMORANDUM ON ECONOMIES.

On page 325 of the hearings before the committee, paragraph 4, of the statement by Paymaster General Cowie, the following is found:

"In 1909 the improvements, renewals, maintenance, costs of yards (navy), including amounts paid for leave, holidays, and disabilities, were $23,610,887.59, and in 1910 these expenditures are but $22,088,377.28."

In order to ascertain whether or not there is really a decrease in the maintenance of yards and stations, it is necessary to compare the figures given for maintenance in 1909 and 1910. The cost of maintenance of the following principal items for 1909 will be found in Statement B, Table 8, Paymaster General's Report, 1909, as follows:

Buildings	$583,202.66
Yard appliances	198,870.08
Yard craft	589,609.45
Machinery plant	555,951.07
Office force	1,498,917.34
Heat, light, fuel, water	771,685.31
Hand tools and repairs of same	353,252.96
Handling stores	929,875.66
Power plant	366,260.03
Total	5,847,624.56

The maintenance for the same items for 1910 are found in Statement B, Table 8, following page 73, Paymaster General's Report, 1910, as follows:

Buildings	$250,071.07
Yard appliances	50,388.34
Yard craft	297,426.21
Machinery plant	185,401.06
Office force	474,442.30
Heat, light, fuel, water	247,855.51
Hand tools and repairs of same	25,355.44
Handling stores	277,316.56
Power plant	102,021.99
Total	1,910,278.58

A comparison of these items shows such striking differences that it must be conceded that such a saving in one year in maintenance alone is impossible, and the differences must be accounted for in some other way than by a saving.

It must be remembered that 1910 was the first year in which there were any indirect charges made that were worth taking into account, and most, if not all, of the above differences would be absorbed in the cost of work as a part of the indirect charges, and would not appear in any table from which these figures were taken. This is strikingly indicated by a comparison of the two items for "Office force" and "Power plant."

A comparison of the figures for maintenance for 1909 and 1910, as shown in the Paymaster General's report, "Statement B," page 81, 1909, and "Statement B," page 73, 1910, shows a difference between $10,408,729.54 in 1909, and $5,434,325.24 in 1910, although these charges were apparently for identical items. It therefore is apparent that the indirect charges amounting to $3,692,777.59 have not been included, although as much of the maintenance charges of yards and stations as any other item. The amount of indirect charges for 1910 are found in the Paymaster General's report, "Statement B," page 14, being the sum of $3,012,252.47, plus $680,525.12; total, $3,692,777.59.

The sum of $10,408,729.54 for 1909 includes military expenditures of yards, while in 1910 they were kept separately; and in the total of $5,434,325.24 these military charges, amounting to $4,848,676.05, have not been included and for purposes of comparison, at least, should properly be added. These military charges are shown in the Paymaster General's report, "Statement B," page 84, 1910, being totals for pay and allowances of officers at shore stations entitled "S," "T," and "R."

Therefore to the total of $5,434,325.24 should be added the indirect charges of $3,692,777.59 and the military charges of $4,848,676.05, making a total of $13,975,778.88.

It therefore seems apparent that instead of being a reduction in maintenance charges on shore for 1910 over 1909, as claimed by a comparison of the two tables, there has been an actual increase of $3,567,049.34.

Continuing in the same paragraph of Paymaster General Cowie's statement, the following is found:

"These figures include the pay of all officers and enlisted men at shore stations as well as all military costs incident to the management of the navy yard. The latter expenses are not separated, however, from the general or industrial costs of navy yards operating in 1909, whereas in 1910 the military expenditures amounted to $4,848,676.05, which were separated, but which are included in the $22,688,377.28 above. The decrease in the cost of maintenance appears to have been due to reduced expenditures for power plant, machinery plant, handling stores, heat, fuel, and light, whereas many expenditures on account of permanent improvements were increased because of the cost of quay walls and piers, dry-docks, yard appliances, and fire apparatus."

Paragraph 5 of the same statement is as follows:

"In considering navy yards as industrial plants, it is assumed, for comparison only, that the costs of yard maintenance are the gross costs, both civil and military, and that the productive work is limited to that done for the fleet and for other departments of the Government. Upon this hypothesis the productive work at navy yards was as follows:

	1909	1910
New construction (labor and material)	$3,743,743.42	$4,466,019.27
Repairs to hull and machinery	7,140,399.24	8,203,841.52
Repairs to equipage	216,349.19	277,908.43
Labor on manufactured articles	4,408,361.34	4,379,061.01
Work for outside parties	58,382.29	52,178.34
Work for other departments of the Government	577,435.73	299,929.03
	16,144,671.21	17,678,937.60
Gross yard improvements, renewals, and maintenance charges (see par. 4)	23,610,887.50	22,688,377.28

Paragraph 6 is as follows:

"If there had been no improvements in the economy of navy-yard administration and operation in 1910, i. e., if these gross charges had borne the same ratio to the productive work in 1910 as in 1909, then the gross charges would have been $25,854,684.54, indicating a decrease in cost of operating navy yards amounting to $3,166,307.26."

Since it is evident that the indirect charges have been omitted from the total of $22,688,377.28 for 1910, that total should be increased by $3,692,779.59, making a total of $26,381,154.87 as the cost of the maintenance of the navy yards and stations, while the same expense for 1909 amounted to $23,610,887.59, a difference of $2,770,267.28. It will be seen, therefore, that these final figures are far from indicating that improvements in administration methods have resulted in decreased expenditures. The contrary seems to represent the facts, and the cost of the upkeep of the yards and stations was $2,770,267.28 more in 1910 than in 1909.

Paragraphs 7 and 8 of Paymaster General Cowie's statement are as follows:

"7. In the reports of the Paymaster General for the fiscal years 1909 and 1910 there appear for 1909, 196 vessels in commission and for 1910, 212 vessels, an increase of about 8 per cent in the number of vessels in commission during the latter year. When consideration is given to the fact that a number of vessels were not in commission throughout the entire year, the increase of 1910 over 1909 is estimated at 11 per cent. Therefore in comparing the costs of commission of naval vessels it is only fair to consider that the average fleet in being was about 11 per cent greater in 1910 than in 1909.

"8. Exclusive of the costs of repairs effected at navy yards, which costs have been included in comparing the efficiency of shore plants, the total costs of commission for the two years was as follows: 1909, $37,744,126.10; 1910, $37,783,658.27."

This calculation is made by treating every vessel as a unit. The number of months in commission and the class of vessels are ignored. As a matter of fact, eight of the increase of 16 were submarines. There were 23 battleships in commission in 1909 and 28 during 1910, but all of the 1909 battleships were in commission for a year except one, and that for one month only; but in 1910 only 16 battleships were in commission for 12 months, and the remaining 12 were in commission varying from one to six months, the total number of months of commission for the 12 being only 34 months. In 1910, Alabama, one month; Delaware, three months; Illinois, one month; Iowa, two months; Kearsarge, two months; Kentucky, two months; Maine, two months; Massachusetts, two months; Michigan, six months; North Dakota, three months; Ohio, three months; South Carolina, four months.

The calculation ignores the charges for repairs to hull, machinery, and equipage, which are just as much a part of the cost of the fleet as is the coal that is consumed, although the repairs in 1910 were $990,230.34 more than in 1909. This is deducted from the Paymaster General's reports 1909, page 101, and in 1910, page 103.

Cost of repairs to hull, machinery, and equipage.

Excess in 1910	990,230.34

The fact that a comparison shows the cost of commission of the fleet for 1909 and 1910, not including repairs, to be nearly the same leads to incorrect deductions, because an examination of the Paymaster General's reports for these two years shows that reductions have been made in some expenditures and increases in others. The pay of officers and men in 1910 was nearly $900,000 more than in 1909, while the cost of the steam engineering department was about one and one-half millions less, but the fleet steamed a great many more miles in 1909 than in 1910. The pay of marine officers afloat in 1909 was $654,000 and in 1910 $705,000, but the marines were not serving on board ship during the entire year of 1909. Target practice cost very much more in 1910 than in 1909, as the ordnance expenditures were $800,000 less in the latter year. It cost $100,000 more to feed the fleet in 1910 than in 1909 and nearly $1,000,000 more to repair it, and although there were more vessels of all kinds in commission in 1910, they were, in many cases, in commission for shorter periods, as heretofore noted.

The more accurate way to arrive at a comparison would be to take the cost of maintenance of the 12 battleships in the Atlantic Fleet that have been continuously in commission since July 1, 1908—that is, for the two fiscal years 1909 and 1910—using the vessels that performed the same duty during all that period. The costs of the upkeep of the following 12 battleships, including repairs, for 1909 and 1910 are found in the Paymaster General's reports for 1909 and 1910, page 95, as follows:

Connecticut	$988,674.82	$1,101,881.89
Georgia	821,620.22	837,418.88
Idaho	549,160.12	708,241.53
Kansas	804,907.53	838,416.80
Louisiana	845,060.60	920,026.99
Minnesota	813,349.48	880,108.86
Mississippi	567,918.69	741,520.03
Nebraska	826,350.26	864,685.25
New Hampshire	671,555.15	883,287.54
Rhode Island	878,928.59	875,423.21
Vermont	895,210.40	911,925.81
Virginia	846,780.85	854,556.17

A comparison of these two totals, which include repairs (a proper item for consideration in these figures), shows that the maintenance of these ships cost over $900,000 more in 1910 than in 1909, and the same vessels, not including repairs, cost nearly a half million dollars more in 1910 than in 1909.

It has been stated that there were 23 battleships in commission in 1909 and 28 in 1910, but the Paymaster General's report for 1909, page 95, shows that the total number of months of battleship commission was 265 and only 226 months for 1910. If the total months of battleship commission is divided by the cost of upkeep, as shown by the Paymaster General's report, a true comparison of the cost may be arrived at. Such a calculation shows that the average cost per month to maintain one battleship, not including repairs, in 1909 was $49,187.76, and the same, including repairs, was $52,112.43; while in 1910 the cost, not including repairs, was $58,844.97, and, including repairs, was $65,629.98. These figures show that the average cost per month of a battleship was $3,000 a month more in 1910 than in 1909, not including repairs, and $6,800 more per month, including repairs, in 1910.

The same comparison might be made for the 12 armored cruisers under the same conditions, and it will be found that the cost of maintenance for 1910 was within $2,500 of a million more than in 1909.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That, for the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed two first-class battleships, each carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any known vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and the greatest practicable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $6,000,000 each.

Mr. SULZER, Mr. PADGETT, and Mr. FOSS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is a member of the committee. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. PADGETT. I wish to amend, on page 59, line 23, by striking out the word "two" and inserting the word "one," and strike off the letter "s" at the end of "battleships," so that it will read:

To have constructed one first-class battleship.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 23, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one," and also strike out the final "s" in the word "battleships," so that it will read "one first-class battleship."

Mr. PADGETT. Also, in line 24, strike out the word "each."

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 24, strike out the word "each."

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CURRIER). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I simply want to inquire if all this language does not constitute one paragraph, because it is quite evident that the language at the bottom, starting with line 15, and commencing with the words "Secretary of the Navy," is intended to apply to all of the succeeding sections. I wondered if that could not all be considered as one paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey inquire where the paragraph closes?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph closes on line 3 of page 60.

Mr. PADGETT. Strike out the word "each," in line 3, page 60.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, line 3, strike out the word "each."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment now proposed relates to the number of battleships. The amendment which I propose, and of which I gave notice last night, relates to the speed of battleships, and the suggestion I make, whether by point of order or by suggestion to the member of the committee, is that it is advisable first to determine what sort of battleship is wanted before settling their number, just as you would decide what kind of cloth you want before you determine the number of yards. I would like very much, therefore, to offer my own amendment first as a matter of parliamentary order, the amendment being simply to insert, after the word "speed," the words "at least equal to that of any known battleship." I ask that as a matter of parliamentary privilege, though I believe Members who are not on the committee do come last.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are not now in order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to give notice that in due time I shall offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PARKER. Is it in order, Mr. Chairman, for me to offer my amendment now, or should I wait until the amendment offered by the gentleman is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from New Jersey should wait until this amendment is disposed of.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that all amendments relating to the number of battleships be submitted now, and then I will ask unanimous consent that we shall have a debate for a short period of time on the battleship provision, and then take a vote. And I would suggest that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] offer his amendment at this time, if he has one relating to the number of ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama can be read for the information of the House.

Mr. HOBSON. The amendment will be in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] striking out the word "one" in his amendment and inserting the word "three," and restoring the letter "s" where the plural occurs.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute of the gentleman from Alabama can be offered now.

Mr. HOBSON. I offer it now, Mr. Chairman. Strike out the word "one" in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee and insert in lieu thereof the word "three," and restore the letter "s" where the plural occurs.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is a request for unanimous consent now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. This is simply carrying out the purpose that was sought to be attained by unanimous consent. The Chair will state that question of unanimous consent as soon as the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama is reported.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to know whether I shall lose my right to move an amendment by acceding to the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire at the proper time to ask the Chair when it will be in order to strike out all amendments that may be offered to this paragraph, as well as the paragraph itself.

The CHAIRMAN. On a point of order?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. As an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can make that motion later. It can not be acted upon until the paragraph is perfected.

Mr. SULZER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have my amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. In a moment, as soon as the substitute is reported. The Clerk will report the substitute of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 59, line 23, strike out "two" and insert "three."

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] asks unanimous consent that all amendments relating to the number of battleships be now offered and read for the information of the House.

Mr. FOSS. No; not read for information, but to be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. To be considered as pending.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, that does not prejudice the offering of other amendments to the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to make a motion as to closing debate?

Mr. PADGETT. Let us agree on it.

Mr. FOSS. I suggest that we have one hour's debate, 30 minutes on a side, to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] on his side and the chairman of the committee on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour——

Mr. PARKER. Debate on the paragraph and amendments relating to number of battleships. I have another amendment here, of which I gave notice last night, as to speed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman modify his request?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; relating to the number.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate on the paragraph and all amendments relating to the number of battleships be limited to one hour, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, does that agreement relate to all amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments relating to the number of battleships. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Relating to the number of battleships only, without prejudice to the right to offer other amendments.

Mr. FOSS. That is what I mean.

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I wish to know if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] and the gentleman from Tennessee are on different sides of that question.

Mr. PADGETT. We are on very different sides.

Mr. FOSS. We are in open hostility on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] asks unanimous consent that the amendment proposed by him may be read for the information of the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is objection, unless I can have my amendment offered, too.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I reserve the right to object, and I offer my amendment to be read also.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] for information?

Mr. ROBERTS. I reserve points of order on all amendments that are read.

Mr. MANN. They are only read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. They are only to be read for information. If there be no objection, the amendments will be read. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] will first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 3, on page 60, amend as follows:
"Provided always, That one of the battleships herein authorized shall be constructed in one of the navy yards."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, page 60, at the end of the paragraph, insert:
"Provided, The draft of such battleship shall not exceed 30 feet."

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] asks unanimous consent to have his amendment read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in the first line of page 60, after the word "speed," the words "at least equal to that of any known battleship."

Mr. MANN. Has an agreement been reached as to time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been agreed upon.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote, as I have consistently done during the last three or four Congresses, for one new battleship to take the place of the one which, according to naval experts, goes out of commission annually. I shall vote, therefore, for the maintenance of the Navy at its present strength, which, in the judgment of all reasonable American citizens, is amply adequate for purposes of defense.

As was again demonstrated by the speech of the gentleman from Alabama on yesterday, the present system of armaments requires for its maintenance or enlargement the constant precipitation of war scares. The advocates of these unnecessary increases of the war machinery in this and other countries, in other words, are compelled to constantly play upon the fears of the people, that same human weakness from which results this whole unfortunate rivalry of the nations in the exhaustion of their resources for new battleships and armaments.

We have it from the State Department and from the higher authority of the President of the United States that there is absolutely no cause for alarm, and that there is no danger from any quarter, either on the Atlantic or the Pacific side, threatening the peace and tranquillity of the United States. In the light of these assurances, it seems to me, there would be ample justification in characterizing the alarmist as an enemy of the peace of his country, and in providing by law against the precipitators of such needless alarms; but, fortunately, such a measure is unnecessary, because the good common sense of the people usually forms the stone wall against which the efforts of the war monger, the jingo, and the alarmist are vainly spent.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if we fully realize all the conditions to be considered in determining the question of still further enlarging our Navy. Surely these conditions are not what they were 10, or five, or even three years ago. There are some things which all will understand the moment they occur. When, for instance, the war drum is beaten there is immediate excitement, and when victory is proclaimed there is a paroxysm of joy. Events such as these appeal to the senses, not to say the animal instincts, of man. But there are other occurrences the real significance of which is considerably slower in dawning upon the people's minds, for the reason that they can be absorbed only through the intellect. Bearing on the question of peace, which we all wish to see maintained, one side by force and the other by law, a revelation of totally changed conditions has come to the people only within the last few years. [Applause.] The world is only now beginning to realize what has really been accomplished at The Hague, namely, that a court has been established to settle all disputes between nations; not only questions specified in treaties, but all questions which governments see fit to submit. From this the simplest mind will readily infer that a general use of that court will soon result in relegating the battleships to the scrap heap, except such as may be needed to police the oceans. Furthermore, it is only a short time since that the people generally have grasped the full meaning of President Roosevelt's mediation in the Russian-Japanese war, namely, that that war, with all its atrocities and horrors, might have been wholly averted by the same method by which it was ended. The people also perceive, to their great surprise, that the rulers of Europe, though armed to their teeth, are suddenly showing an aversion to hostilities and war, so that controversies which formerly would have fairly bathed that continent in blood have been peaceably adjusted, and that with an eagerness fairly startling to the observer.

Certainly these are new conditions. But that is not all, Mr. Chairman. In place of the former independence of the several nations we find a growing commercial and economic interdependence, and, by the way, this is, more even than the losses by wars, the true sanction of international arbitration. To-day, whatever steps are taken, whatever measures are considered by the cabinets and legislative bodies, our own included, it is done, not with an eye solely to the effect at home, but with anxious regard for the opinion of the world. In other words, we notice the governments to be no longer exclusively controlled in important matters by merely local or national influences, but to be largely swayed by international considerations.

Who will deny that these revelations have wrought a most decided change of public opinion with regard to the necessity of more battleships? Are we to respect that growing sentiment which from these considerations regards all further naval expansion as a waste of money?

Mr. Chairman, I am not dreaming the chimerical dream of the idealist who sees in The Hague court an agency for the immediate attainment of universal peace. But neither will I be driven by or take counsel of fear. The United States has less cause for fear than any other country on earth, and this is due, not to our 33 ironclads, but to our own greatness and to the good sense of other nations. [Applause.] What nation would be willing to commit suicide by attacking us? All need our breadstuffs, our oil, and our cotton; and remember, also, that the will of the rulers is no longer as arbitrary as it once has been, because it is now circumscribed by the public conscience, the same enlightened sentiment which has prevented a European war for more than a generation and compelled the rulers in every more recent case of trouble to seek a peaceable solution.

As I have said before, America now has the opportunity to lead the world to either peace or war. It depends upon our vote to-day. Arrest armaments and the whole civilized world will heave a sigh of relief. It will be the beginning of the end of what has rightfully been called the "folly of nations." If we stop, the others will stop, or will be forced to stop by their suffering people. Sweet words and good resolutions will not do; it is the deed, the actual example of our Nation, which alone can afford the relief the world is longing for. And there is not a nation on God's footstool which is in a better position to set that example than is the United States. Do you realize that we have an interest far beyond our own military burdens in the exhaustion and despair of the millions elsewhere? Are they not our customers, and therefore is not a rise or decline of their purchasing power a matter of vital concern to us? Militarism is now consuming, aye devouring, the natural resources of the earth at the rate of $2,000,000,000 a year; hence is impoverishing the people. America suffers under these burdens with the rest, the same as a relief from them would benefit her with the rest. But there is a higher reason which should impel us to lead in this holy cause. We should do the good for the sake of the good, and remain true to America's mission as the champion of liberty, justice, and peace, and true to the motto, "Above all the nations is humanity." [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT].

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to make any extended speech or to repeat what has been said pro and con on this subject ever since I have been here, but I do wish to state that I am in entire accord with the report of the majority of this committee, and believe that we should have two battleships. No one wishes for universal peace more than I do, but I do not believe that the way to obtain universal peace is for us to delude ourselves with the idea that we are immune against attack.

Some years ago we started to build two battleships every year, and, in spite of what the gentleman from Missouri has said, that is the only way that we can keep up the efficiency of our present Navy, and the present Navy has certainly no more than is needed to protect this great country of ours. Sometimes I have thought that we should have two fleets as large as the one we have now—one on the Atlantic and the other on the Pacific—but in view of the fact that the Panama Canal is soon to be completed I am inclined to think that we can get along with a fleet as efficient as that we now have.

The life of a battleship is not long. Not many years pass after its construction before it becomes inadequate, and we can not safely do with less than the number of ships we have now, and we can not maintain the number of ships we have at their best point of efficiency without building two of these great ships a year.

The gentleman spoke of President Roosevelt's interposition to stop the war between Russia and Japan and spoke of the great example set the entire world, and yet he will remember that notwithstanding that President Roosevelt will probably go down to history with his greatest reputation as a peacemaker, yet he never hesitated to insist that we should maintain the Navy so that its efficiency would be commensurate with the size and dignity of our country.

This question of disarmament is immensely attractive. We hear every year the amount of expenditure that we make for future wars and for past wars, but nevertheless do not let us begin to disarm until our trade competitors go hand in hand with us. The greatest security to peace is to be prepared for war. We might just as well take the locks off our doors and to trust to the honesty that the great majority of people have not to rob us as to say that we will fail to fortify our shores and fail to build battleships, because there is little probability of some of the nations of the world attacking us and will not come and seek to capture any of our possessions. There might at some time be one nation that would seek to imperil our safety and would give us trouble and difficulty unless we are prepared. Therefore let us uphold our Navy and keep it in at least its present state of efficiency. I hope that this House will adopt the report of the naval program. I have not time to talk about the auxiliary vessels. They are of equal importance, and I believe that we have got down to the bedrock of our necessities when we present the entirely modest program that appears in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the edifying remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], who always speaks with great interest when the question of international peace is up. It is true he used words like "war mongers" and "alarmists," and so on; but I do not believe any offense should be taken to such terms. I frequently, on my part, use the words "peace dreamers," and no one should take offense. I know that the gentleman from Missouri, however, is too true a patriot to wish at this juncture to leave the vital interests of his country to hang upon international arbitration, because I know that the gentleman knows that the best arbitration treaty ever yet negotiated between any two nations specifically eliminates all vital questions from those that are to be treated by arbitration.

He also is aware, I dare say, of the fact that, even though America is the greatest peace Nation in the world and the chief exponent of the resort to arbitration, our own country, when the Republic of Colombia asked us to refer the seizure of the Panama strip to arbitration, and agreed to eliminate every question involving honor, we refused to resort to The Hague tribunal or to arbitrate at all.

It is well to do all we can to extend the scope of The Hague tribunal, but no patriot at this juncture, at the present development or lack of development of arbitration, ought to try to develop it at the expense of the vital interests of the country. And, least of all, should America do it. It is the utmost folly to say that if we began to put a limit upon armament the other nations would follow us. The other nations have never followed us. We have always been behind them. They have gone ahead farther and farther, and to-day they are building twice as fast as we are; three times as fast as we are. It is idleness to say that if we slow down they would slow down.

Now, then, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], who offered the original amendment, is a most careful, conscientious, painstaking, and wise Member of this House and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Each year it comes to me as a great surprise that the gentleman can make an amendment providing for only one battleship. It shows that the gentleman has not worked out any policy at all. You take the Democratic platform and it specifically provides substantially as follows:

> We believe that the clause in the Constitution that authorizes Congress to provide and maintain a Navy "means an adequate Navy."

It proceeds to develop what is the simplest form of an adequate navy, namely, one sufficient to protect both our coasts; and they are so far apart that, even with the Panama Canal, a fleet in one ocean can not give protection in the other. That means a two-ocean basis for our Navy. And, further, that platform adds:

> And the interests of our citizens wherever exposed.

That means that if the question of our tranquillity became involved under the Monroe doctrine and its operation in South America, the Navy ought to be adequate to maintain that doctrine. That means on the question of an open-door policy in Manchuria and for the trade of China, a question vital to the interests of our citizens in the future, that our Navy should be adequate to guarantee us our rights there, so that when protests are made, as they have been made from time to time, they would be duly respected.

To show concretely what this means to adopt a one-battleship-a-year program, I will give the members of this committee a statement of what position that will leave us in from year to year. The question of the size of our Navy is largely a relative one. If we did not find great armaments in Europe, we would not have to have many battleships in the Atlantic. If we did not find great armaments in Asia, we would not have to have many battleships in the Pacific. But we do find those great standing armies, those modern engines that must be met either by similar engines or else by controlling the arm of the sea over which they may not pass. That is the condition in which we find ourselves.

What will a one-battleship-a-year program lead us to? I will give you the statement of the Bureau of Naval Intelligence, dated January 19, 1911, a table giving the strength of the fleets in the first line of the United States, Germany, and Japan on July 1 of each year from 1911 to 1920.

First, take the result of a two-battleship program. The program for Japan does not go further than 1914. The program for Germany goes through; and then on the assumption that we have a two-battleships-a-year program, as provided for in this bill, the following will be the status—Dreadnoughts are the backbone of the fleets and I read the number of Dreadnoughts; while we still keep the older battleships in the first line of battle, because the fleets have not sufficient Dreadnoughts and other nations are doing the same, yet the first line of battle is really founded on the Dreadnoughts and will soon comprise only Dreadnoughts: In 1911, on July 1, the United States will have 6 Dreadnoughts, Germany will have 8 Dreadnoughts, Japan will have 4 Dreadnoughts. In the year 1912, on the two-battleships-a-year program, the United States will have 8 Dreadnoughts, Germany will have 13 Dreadnoughts, Japan will have 6 Dreadnoughts. In the year 1913 the United States will have 10 Dreadnoughts, Germany will have 17 Dreadnoughts, and Japan will have 7 Dreadnoughts. In the year 1914 the United States will have 12 Dreadnoughts, Germany will have 21 Dreadnoughts, Japan will have 9 Dreadnoughts. Thus, on a two-ocean basis, we find ourselves, even with the two-battleships-a-year program, in the year 1914, which is not far off, with 12 Dreadnoughts compared with 21 that Germany will have in the Atlantic, and not a single Dreadnought against Japan's 9 Dreadnoughts in the Pacific.

Mr. Chairman, even the two-battleships-a-year program is so inadequate we can not look upon it as establishing any real naval policy adequate for the purposes for which a navy exists. What can we say, then, of a program of one battleship a year, as advocated by the gentleman from Tennessee? Let us see where it will lead us. In 1913 America will have 9, Germany will have 17 and Japan 7 Dreadnoughts. In 1914 America will have 10, less than half the strength of Germany, which will have 21, and scarcely more than Japan, which will have 9, and so it goes down the list. We simply drop out of the class of nations that undertake to maintain a naval policy; and with no standing army in our midst, that is the only policy upon which we can defend our Nation. The truth is we ought not to be satisfied with simply a balance of power in an ocean when there is a standing army on the other side, because if we should lose the battle, that great standing army could strike our mainland; and if they should lose the sea battle we could not strike them. We ought to have a safe margin of superiority.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. KENDALL). Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOBSON. For a question.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. How would the gentleman get the Atlantic Fleet to the Pacific Ocean under the amendment he voted for here within the past hour? I ask that in good faith as a practical question, and I would like to know.

Mr. HOBSON. How would he get it?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; how would the gentleman get the Atlantic Fleet to the Pacific Ocean in case of emergency, under the amendment adopted here this morning, which forbids the Navy Department to pay for coal going from the Atlantic to the Pacific?

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to open up that question when I am discussing in 10 minutes a naval policy of the United States—the question of the shipment of coal across the continent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield, and the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. I am sorry, but I can not yield any longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to grant me a little more time.

Mr. FOSS. I am very sorry, but my time is already promised, I will say to my colleague. Otherwise I would be willing to yield to him.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yield to him for one minute, that I may ask him a question.

Mr. FOSS. I am sorry that I can not do it. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy the time.

Mr. FOSS. Then I yield to the gentleman from Alabama three minutes.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. HOBSON. Was it yielded to me for the purpose of answering a question?

Mr. FOSS. No; the gentleman may use it as he sees fit.

Mr. HOBSON. I am sorry that with so little time I can not answer the gentleman's question. Thus far I have dealt with the question of an adequate naval policy, when considered from a relative standpoint.

Now, from an absolute standpoint, we can not with only two battleships a year maintain one fleet. It will not make up the rot that occurs every year, and even under the two-battleships-a-year program, including all of the older battleships now in the first battle line, our total fleet will go down from 21 in number, where it is to-day, to 17 in number in the year 1916.

The smallest complete fleet you can have now is 21 battleships, one for the flagship and five for each of four squadrons, the fifth vessel being off for repairs while the four are on the battle line. We can not maintain even one fleet on the two-battleships-a-year program, much less with a one-battleship-a-year program. With two a year we get down in the year 1916 to a position where the total number is only 17 ships. In the year 1914, in spite of the program, the number falls three, and in 1915 it falls to 17. It is simply ridiculous to attempt to establish a policy on any such program. I hope gentlemen will undertake to look into the question of what kind of a policy will be the outcome if we should cut down the increase to only one a year. We might as well give up. By 1920 we should have but half of one fleet, less than a third of the strength of the fleets of Europe, with nothing for the fleets of Asia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in view of the unwillingness of the world's greatest naval expert to answer a single question regarding a matter of interest, and one affecting this discussion, I am compelled to direct attention to the fact that in his enthusiasm, but not in his wisdom, he has just voted, under a rule shutting off debate, for a measure that, if it were signed by the President, would hopelessly cripple our Navy and has already put this House in a ridiculous position before the world.

The last item we passed, appropriating $4,000,000 for the purchase, transportation, and storage of coal for the use of our Navy, was amended by a gentleman from the Pacific slope as follows:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for the transportation of any coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Think of such an amendment, fathered by one from the Pacific slope and supported by the naval enthusiast from Alabama, and all in prejudice of Atlantic-coast coal!

In the first place, the coal companies can evade this amendment by shipping by rail direct from the mine to the Pacific without ever touching the Atlantic Ocean. But think of the ridiculous result if war were to break out to-morrow, or for any reason the Navy Department wished to transport the Atlantic fleet to the Pacific! Coal would have to be shipped in colliers and probably in hired vessels to accompany our fleet on its 16,000-mile journey. The moment they landed at Cape Horn they must halt, because the department is forbidden to pay a single dollar to transport that coal into or over Pacific waters. Therefore the fleet must wait until other colliers come from Puget Sound or elsewhere in the Northwest to feed our fleet with fuel on its journey to the Golden Gate.

In the first place, the additional colliers could not be secured, and, in the second place, if they could they would be blown from the seas before they reached the fleet; and, in addition, the Pacific coast would be at the mercy of any enemy, while our great American Navy rested at anchor in the dismal distant district of Cape Horn.

It seems to me more thought and less enthusiasm in these matters would yield profitable fruit to the American people.

Mr. MANN. Under the same amendment the battleships would have to stop there as well as the colliers?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; they will all have to stop under the prohibition.

Mr. MANN. Then, I think it is a good amendment.

Mr. FOSS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COLE] three minutes.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Chairman, I am a man of peace. I am opposed to war. I have listened to the story of conflict and carnage from the lips of men who have endured the baptism of fire, and, furthermore, I am a major in the National Guard of Ohio. [Applause.] If the United States were to engage in a war, I would be compelled to go and fight. I might be killed. You gentlemen would sit here in the Halls of Congress making appropriations to buy bullets and munitions of war with which the rest of us would slay one another. Mr. Chairman, if this Congress wants to adopt a remedy that will effectually prevent war, let it provide that every Member of Congress must enlist as a private and go out first on the firing line. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Some of them are going out all right.

Mr. COLE. But not on the firing line.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. On the bread line. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLE. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the two-battleship policy. Ever since the young gentleman from Alabama came to this Congress he has been electrifying not only this body but the entire Nation with his eloquence. I remember that history records an ancient Roman who every time he rose to address the Roman Senate would exclaim, "Cathago delenda est!" (Carthage must be destroyed). When the young gentleman from Alabama, who so frequently charms this body with his eloquence, tells us with repeated regularity that war is imminent, I am inclined to think he, like the Roman Senator of old, is a sentinel on the mountain top, and has wider vision than we who dwell in the shadows of the valley. His vast experience in naval affairs has qualified him for counsel. He is destined to live in our history as one of the great sea captains of the centuries. [Applause.]

My friends, the cause of war on the Atlantic Ocean has been removed. From time immemorial the great cause of international conflicts has been disputed territory. Every particle of territory on the Atlantic has been removed from the realms of controversy; but yonder in the Pacific, there is where the dispute will arise in the coming century. The light of civilization has encircled the globe until it reillumines the land of its birth, and upon the waters of the Pacific are destined to occur the great international events of the future. The new civilization has met the old; a conflict is inevitable. I trust it may not be a contest of arms, but rivalry in peace. But whatever it may be, let America take her stand, be prepared to meet all comers, and be master of the Pacific. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he use his time.

Mr. PADGETT. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. FOSS. How much have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 16 minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I intended to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Tennessee has 15 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois 11 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, we have heard here the prediction that war is imminent; in other words, it means that a nation of 6,000,000 people, occupying an area scarcely larger than the State of Colorado, from which I come, and having only 12 per cent of its land under cultivation, the soil of the balance having long since gone to the sea, is coming to this country to conquer, subdue, and enslave a people of 90,000,000, representing the highest state of civilization the world has ever known. Yesterday I sought to get the attention of the dean of the House, the reader of the palms of the mailed fists of the great god of war. I wished to call his attention to the fact that but a few weeks ago there was laid upon the Speaker's table a confidential letter from the Secretary of War. I wondered if the gentleman who predicted that without any doubt a war with Japan would occur within 10 months had seen the inside of that document. I wondered if he had listened to the address made by the Major General of the Army on the 1st day of this month before the National Press Club, when he said there was not a speck or a cloud on the horizon in the world to-day that indicated war with any power. I wondered if he remembered what the Secretary of the Navy said in New York but a few days ago, that after the Panama Canal was completed the whole of the Navy of the Atlantic would rest upon the bosom of the Pacific; and I wondered why that could not be done now; for with the expenditure of less than $1,000,000 for dry-docks upon the Pacific, with what dry-docks we have now there, we could make there a base of supplies such as the gentleman from Alabama said this country would need there if we had to go around the Horn. I call his attention to the fact that we would be within three days of our base of supplies by means of our great trans-Atlantic railroads if our fleet was in the Pacific, whereas through the Panama Canal we would be 10 or 12 days away.

Why, Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that a nation that it costs its citizens 57 cents upon every gross dollar they make to pay their war debt, and whose creditor nation is our kinsman, England, that if there is to be a war with Japan it must be that England is its ally, and therefore we must fight on the Atlantic as well as on the Pacific a common enemy.

I say, Mr. Chairman, out upon this nonsense that comes around yearly when we are asking to build two battleships! I recorded myself with 17 others of this Assembly at the last session in voting against either, and I propose at the proper time to ask, however this may be amended, whether it be one, two, or three battleships, to strike out the entire provision, so that there shall be no more of these battleships saddled upon the overburdened taxpaying people of this country. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend when I came on the floor from the committee room to say anything on the question that is now pending before the committee. But the gentleman from Alabama made a very remarkable statement, a statement that should challenge the attention of the House as well as of the entire country, when he said to us that to pursue the policy of two battleships a year will in six years leave us with a less efficient Navy than we now have. If this is true, then I submit that it is time for us to pause and consider where we are going in the expenditure of the people's money in building what he and other militarists claim would be an efficient Navy, or, as I claim, in spending their money only for the purpose of competing with the nations of the world in this mad, international armament race. At the present cost of construction of a single Dreadnought, we will have to spend $40,000,000 a year for new ships alone in order to maintain the policy of building and equipping two battleships each year.

And yet we are told by the high priest of war on the floor of this House, that after spending that sum each year for six years more, we will have then a less efficient Navy than we have at the present time.

Men talk about the necessity of this expenditure out of fear of Japan. Why, $40,000,000 spent a year in this country is as much as Japan proposes to expend in the next six years on her navy. In a recent speech the premier of Japan, Mr. Katsura, outlined the policy of his Government with respect to naval expenditures. From his remarks it will be seen that the annual expenditure which it is proposed to undertake during the coming six years is only sufficient to replace such vessels in her navy as become worthless from usage. This is a conclusive answer to the arguments of the jingoes of this country, who contend that we should greatly increase the size and number of our own battleships in order to keep up the pace being set by Japan and other great nations of the world. Mr. Katsura said:

> In order to meet the national expenditure, which had greatly swollen during and after the late war, the public debts of the country at that time also rapidly increased to an enormous amount, while increase upon increase had to be made in the national taxes.
> The result of this was the growth of a feeling of uncertainty about the financial stability of the country, which condition of things in its turn led to a depreciation of our public bonds both in the markets at home and abroad, affecting domestic economic circles generally.
> This turn of affairs taking place concomitantly with the upheavals then overtaking the economic world at nome and abroad was additionally far-reaching in its effect. It was a time when our economic world was beset with troubles and difficulties.
> For my part, in view of the present condition of the Empire, and that of its late warlike experiences, I feel especially deeply the need of preserving peace, and since my return to office I have given my best attention to the development of all peaceful measures, thereby to promote the general welfare of the nation.
> This country feels no necessity for any sudden increment in its naval strength, the condition of things surrounding being such as it is; but in order to keep up the strength of our navy to such a point as is necessary for the defense of the country, it has been deemed unavoidable to introduce some adequate changes in the building of warships to follow suit in the changes adopted by other powers.
> And we have resolved on spending 80,000,000 yen ($40,000,000) spread over six years; the outlay being met by funds out of the ordinary revenue, within the limit of maintaining harmony between the plans of national defense and those of national finances. The amount will be added to the naval estimates.

Those who are constantly seeking to compel this Government to continue its extravagant expenditures on account of the Navy have endeavored to make it appear that public sentiment in Japan is anti-American and that every citizen of Nippon would welcome the opportunity to try his steel against so formidable an adversary as the United States. They draw their conclusions in this regard from the belligerent utterances of the yellow journals, which unfortunately have their influence in that country as in this. It is therefore interesting to note the opinion of one of the most trustworthy writers on Japanese affairs, the editor of the Japan Mail, who was formerly a captain in the British Army and who has been a resident of Japan for about 40 years. He is also the accredited correspondent of the London Times and the author of one of the most extensive and valuable historical works on Japan that has yet been published. These are his words:

> If one were deliberately to set oneself to the task of finding some evidence of Japanese designs against the Philippines, one would certainly arrive at the conclusion that there is a total absence of any testimony of the kind.

We believe, for our own part, that if the Philippines were offered to Japan as a free gift to-morrow, she would hesitate to accept them, and if they were offered to her at the cost of American friendship she would treat the notion as absolutely ridiculous.

Japan's resources are already sufficiently taxed in developing Saghalien, Chosen, Formosa, and Kwantung, and it is not always remembered that these additions to the Empire or to her sphere of influence necessitate a corresponding dispersal of her forces. This is especially true of the Philippines. Their inclusion in the Japanese Empire would greatly increase the latter's responsibility without any corresponding access of wealth.

The fact is that a more unsubstantial bugbear has never occupied the attention of intelligent people than this Philippine specter and its California audience. But, unhappily, reality can be created out of fiction.

If the anti-Japanese agitators of California din their fears into their own ears with sufficient persistence they will become, in the end, persuaded of their reality and they will also succeed in creating in Japan an exaggerated estimate of the anti-Japanese sentiment in the United States.

In confirmation of this opinion I will quote the words of Count Okuma, the founder and head of the Liberal Party in Japan:

All future expansion must be of a peaceful kind. Seizure of territory belonging to other countries, on whatever pretext it may be done, is condemned by public opinion and is calculated to arouse hostility throughout the civilized world.

In writing on the subject of the "American-Japanese Relations," a writer in The Far Eastern Review says:

The greatest intrigue of the last decade seems to have for its purpose the undermining of the friendship existing between Japan and America. This propaganda is given publicity in the yellow press of the United States and Japan, and is egged on by a few irresponsible European writers. Little by little there has been created the impression that the interests of Japan and America were bound to clash. Now, there is hardly a European writer who takes it upon himself to solve all the troubles that the Far East is heir to who does not declare that it will all end by conflict between Japan and America. While we are reading how France, England, and Russia love Japan and are united together to preserve the world's peace, we find a few public men in each of these peace-loving nations declaring how unfortunate it is that America and Japan must proceed to destroy each other. Japan's pride is hurt by misquotations from speeches of prominent Americans, and America's pride is touched by lying reports from the yellow press of Japan.

Japan must not permit herself to be misled, and if we are not mistaken the leaders of thought of the Empire are not so obtuse. It would be well if the citizens of America would seek the motive behind all this vicious and lying propaganda. It may serve the yellow press of America with a sensation once in a while, but it could not serve so continuously unless there were a purpose behind it. We do not believe that the lying reports of the speeches could have been made unless those who transmitted them were either by nature vicious or of that low order of creatures who so lack principle that they will lend themselves to the services of an organized campaign on the part of interests outside of the United States and Japan to precipitate troubles.

It behooves the intelligent among the citizens of both nations to maintain great reserve in the reception of reports that serve to create a feeling of antagonism between the two peoples. It is certain that neither Tokyo nor Washington desire a conflict, and, so far as we can see, there is no motive for any change in that attitude.

I am informed that the International Press Association, which includes every representative in Tokyo of American and European journals, at a meeting held in that city recently, adopted a resolution declaring that newspaper men in Japan are unable to discover any basis in the circumstances or sentiment in Japan warranting the disquieting speeches now being made in this country in regard to the alleged warlike attitude of Japan. These newspaper men may be regarded as having voiced the feeling of the general Japanese public. Moreover, Count Komura, the Japanese minister of foreign affairs, has expressed the opinion that war with the United States is inconceivable, and that "it would be a crime without excuse or palliation."

In view of the statements which have been made concerning the activity of Japan in building and maintaining a great navy, it is interesting to note the conditions of financial distress which prevail in that country. The recent loss of property through floods has been estimated at from fifty to seventy-five millions, and it will cost many millions to construct embankments which are necessary to prevent a repetition of this disaster. One of Japan's leading statesmen, Mr. Matsuda, recently said:

The people are groaning under the heavy burden of taxation, and the slightest addition will be enough to crush them. The Government's first duty is to lessen the burden.

While one of the Tokyo papers, in commenting recently on the causes of dullness in business, said:

It is the heavy taxation borne by the people during and since the war that is robbing the people of their purchasing power, and producing depression in the commerce and industries of the country.

Mr. Chairman, there are a great many people in this country who have had the fear of war with Japan dinged into their ears year after year for the past 10 years until they rarely ever sleep at night without their slumbers being disturbed by a Japanese nightmare. [Laughter.] It is astounding when we stop to think of the extent to which we have gone in preparing to defend ourselves against imaginary enemies.

I remember, as does the gentleman from Alabama, that it was only five years ago that the world first heard the word Dreadnought. That was in November, 1906, when England launched her first Dreadnought. At that time the estimate of the Navy Department for the increase of the Navy had been submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to Congress. It did not include an estimate for a Dreadnought, but at that session of Congress, in order to compete with Great Britain, an attempt was made in this House to authorize the construction of a Dreadnought. The authorization was not secured, however, until the succeeding Congress. Since then we have been constructing two of these great battleships each year. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, providing that but one Dreadnought be authorized, will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, as my time is very limited and I am, therefore, unable to express myself as fully as the importance of this question would otherwise prompt me to do, I will print with my remarks an address which I delivered in Cooper Union, New York, on the 13th of January last. I will also print an article written by Col. William Hoynes, dean of the law department of the University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind., entitled "War Preparations as Price of Peace," in which he refutes the contentions of the militarists that we are unprepared for war. This article is the more interesting and instructive when it is known that Col. Hoynes served with distinction in a regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers during the Civil War, and that he was under fire many times and was severely wounded in battle.

THE COST OF ARMED PEACE, UNNECESSARY AND PROHIBITIVE.

The Governments of the world are slowly coming to realize the difference between the modern nation and the ancient empire. Owing to the invention of printing and of the telegraph and telephone, far-distant nations have become near and familiar; and they understand each other to-day almost as thoroughly as they understand themselves. The steel rails and connecting steamship lines that gird and unite both hemispheres afford the opportunity for that vast international travel and create that fine cosmopolitanism that to-day characterizes all the great nations of the earth. So that we feel ourselves citizens of many nations and of the whole world as never before in the history of mankind. Different nations realize to-day that their life is one life and that their more important problems are identical; that all must suffer from the ignorance and inefficiency of each and of all, and that all are benefited by that which promotes the material interests and welfare of each nation.

Owing to the vast extension of the activities of modern commerce, industry, and finance, industrial and commercial empires more comprehensive in their scope than any nation have sprung up, as it were, in the night. These newly created world spheres know no international boundaries and are rapidly combining peoples and nations together with chains of gold that render belligerency between governments suicidal. In breaking the peace of the world the modern nation inevitably declares war on herself. She attacks her own economic and social interests. She plunges a knife into the hearts of her own people.

Silently, and in obedience to laws that are more fundamental and far more in keeping with the needs of modern civilization than many parliamentary enactments, these great institutions have followed the railroad and the steamship to the ends of the earth. They have extended their boundaries until, from an industrial and an economic point of view, the world is almost like a single nation.

American reapers harvest the golden grain of India and Australia; American locomotives climb the Andes and thread the mountain passes of Africa and Asia; American machinery launders the clothes of the Chinaman and brews the beer of the German. Our large manufacturing establishments and commercial houses have offices and agents in every great center of trade in the world. You can buy American shoes and meats in the stores of Bombay and Moscow, and I need only remind you of the labels on hundreds of articles of merchandise in our own stores to prove that we prize many things "made in Germany," "made in England," "made in Japan," or "made in Persia." The furniture, the clothing, many of the personal belongings, and even part of the food in the home of almost every well-to-do American prove that not only the great nations, but even the islands of the seven seas contribute to the comfort and well-being of American citizens.

Economically the problems of all nations are the same. Socially we are coming more and more to live a common life, and industrially we are bound by a vast confederation of interests which render war between nations not only wholly improbable, but prohibitive.

There was a time, not more than a century and a half ago, when it was commonly believed that there could be but one great nation in the world at one time, and that a nation could become great only by conquering the wealth and enslaving the peoples of other nations. Then nations went to war for slight cause, and in some cases, without any cause whatever, except for territorial acquisition or the personal aggrandizement of kings and princes. The greatness of nations rested then upon conquered wealth and the bent backs of enslaved peoples; hence no nation could hope to remain in the ascendant or keep its place of supremacy for any great length of time. Foreign foes and internal decay soon threatened it and as a rule its dominance soon came to an end. Think of the long line of ancient thrones that have one after the other ruled the world—Babylon, Nineveh, then Babylon again, Persia, Greece, Macedonia, and Rome.

How all this has changed! At the opening of the twentieth century there is no reason inherent in the relations of nations to each other why any great nation must fall. On the contrary, there is every reason found in the existing relations between the nations of the world why all great nations should endure and grow greater side by side. The world knows now that the greatness of a nation does not depend upon war and conquest, but rather upon the thrift, the industry, the courage, and the culture of its citizens. The real wealth and strength of a nation lies not in fleets and armies, but in the bone and brain of its men, in the resources of its soil, and in the pure red blood of its mothers.

The main reasons for the existence of different nations are geographical, climatic, and ethnical. It is entirely possible that all international disputes as to boundaries, as to trade and commerce, or spheres of influence, can be settled by an arbitral court of justice such as that recommended by The Hague conference, in the creation of which our Government is now endeavoring to secure assistance from other nations, or by utilizing existing international agencies for that purpose. Consequently, my friends, there is but one cause that may provoke war between great nations, and that is irrational impulse or frenzied passion, excited by sudden insult or accident, betraying whole peoples into a mob condition which is not responsive to considerations of prudence or humanity.

It will be well for the advocates of armed peace to consider that the operation of this crowd passion or mob spirit in causing war is wonderfully favored and facilitated by the existence of large armies and navies. The possession of irresponsible power is always a temptation to its irresponsible use. Individual citizens are not permitted in times of peace to go armed among their fellowmen because of the temptation to use arms for slight cause in such moments of passion and excitement as every man is liable to in the course of his daily experience. It is with nations as with individuals; there is always the possibility that if nations know themselves to be dangerously armed and fully equipped, they will be more apt to declare war on slight provocation than they otherwise would be.

Instead of being a guaranty of peace, therefore, great armaments are a continual menace to peace. They tend to hasten the event which it is claimed elaborate preparation for war is intended to prevent. Great and costly armaments should not be relied upon to preserve peace for at least three principal reasons: First, they are a continual temptation to war; second, they are wholly unnecessary in our day, because the great preventive of war is the common life which the nations of the world live together and make possible for each other. The world has shrunk, as it were, into a neighborhood in which each nation is in constant touch with all. The world's annual commerce exceeds $28,000,000,000. All civilized nations are therefore interested in preventing any two nations from disturbing the world's peace. A strong and sane public opinion, the real executive power of all Governments, is against war; and powerful interests all over the world are ready to oppose it whenever it may be necessary to do so. And, third, armaments can not be relied upon to prevent war or maintain international peace, for the reason that their cost is rapidly becoming prohibitive, and would now be prohibitive if the policy of an armed peace was consistently carried out by the principal nations of the world.

At the present time, in our own country, we are confronted with the appalling fact that about 71 per cent of our total national revenue is being expended annually on account of wars past and to prevent future wars, or, to maintain armed peace. It is true that 32 per cent of these revenues is expended on account of past wars, but this is as much a war expenditure as is the 39 per cent expended annually in preparation for war. It should be stated, however, that this is exclusive of our postal receipts, because our postal receipts and expenditures are so nearly equal that they are treated by the Treasury Department as a balanced account.

But when we say that the annual cost of our policy of preparing for war to the end that we may have peace equals 39 per cent of all our Federal revenue it does not convey to the average mind any idea of the magnitude of that expenditure. When stated in dollars and cents we find that, including the current fiscal year, we have appropriated and expended during the last 10 years on account of preparation for war alone $2,192,036,585.20! These figures denote a sum so vast that the average mind can not grasp it. The bonded debt of the United States on August 31, 1865, at the close of the Civil War, was $2,674,815,856.76. Our expenditure in preparation for war the last 10 years was, therefore, only $482,779,271.56 less than the bonded debt incurred by our Government in carrying on our four years' war to preserve the Union.

Some idea of the magnitude of this vast sum expended during the past decade on account of preparation for war may also be obtained by contrasting the aggregate of that expenditure with the aggregate loss of property sustained by the people of the United States and Canada on account of fire between the years 1820 and 1905. According to the official report of the underwriters' association, the losses sustained in consequence of all the great fires, such as the Chicago fire in 1871, Jacksonville in 1901, and Baltimore in 1904, between the years mentioned, or in 85 years, were $539,850,000. This is only a little more than one-fourth of the amount expended from our Federal Treasury in the last 10 years on account of preparation for war, or to maintain the policy of armed peace. This vast sum expended in preparation for war, which, as I have said, is almost equal to the bonded cost of the Civil War, was expended, too, in a time of profound peace.

But lest these comparisons fail to impress our people with the magnitude of our expenditures in preparation for war, let me add that with the two billion dollars spent for this purpose during the past 10 years, we could have built more than five Panama Canals at the highest estimated cost of the completion of that great enterprise—the greatest undertaking any nation in the history of the world has ever embarked upon.

If this expenditure approximately measured the cost of maintaining this policy, or if its expenditure had placed us as a nation in a condition to successfully resist the force of any other nation, then the cost of armed peace might not be prohibitive, for the American people, so long as their present prosperity continues, can maintain their present Military Establishment without jeopardizing their national credit or weakening their financial resources. But according to the judgment of our enthusiastic militarists, this vast expenditure during the past 10 years finds us in a deplorable condition from the standpoint of our national defense.

We are told in official reports that after spending two and a quarter billion dollars in preparation for war in 10 years, almost any European or Oriental power could cross either of the two oceans which separate us from the rest of the world and successfully invade continental United States, destroy our railroads, blow up our mountain passes, paralyze our industry, and reduce to ashes the magnificent cities that sit queen-like on our Atlantic and Pacific coasts. These advocates of armed peace maintain that in order to put our Nation in a state of preparedness for war it is necessary for us to have a standing army of 400,000 men and also to fortify every place on our 7,000 miles of coast line where it would be possible for an enemy to anchor a vessel and land an army. To carry out their theories would necessitate an enormous increase in our war expenditures. This, then, would be the logical end of the policy of maintaining our country on a peace basis by being prepared at all times to meet the most remote contingencies which might arise in the event that we should go to war with the strongest nation.

If the expenditure of two and a quarter billions in 10 years for the purpose of providing for our national defense finds us in the helpless condition the advocates of militarism would have us believe, then what would be the sum total of our expenditures for this purpose, or for the purpose of deterring any nation from declaring war against us or provoking such a declaration from us against any other nation, if we were to adopt and carry out their theories? If, as we are now told, the expenditure of so vast a sum is not even perceptible, can anyone estimate the amount which would be necessary? Can anyone comprehend that sum?

My friends, the total cost of such an undertaking would amount to figures which would baffle the imagination. Think of the vast internal improvements which could be effected with the expenditure of half the amount we expend annually in preparation for war! Think of the vast and varied interests of our 92,000,000 people which could be materially advanced by the expenditure of one-third of our present annual expenditure in preparation for war! In the year 1908 the United States, England, Germany, and France spent upon their armies and navies, or in preparation for war, more than one thousand million dollars! Let anyone try to comprehend this vast sum and then tell me that the cost of armed peace is not prohibitive.

One of the saddest phases of our extravagant war expenditure is the fact that millions of people are indifferent to the effect of the wasteful policy of modern nations in constructing and maintaining expensive armaments. They feel that governmental extravagance in this and other directions, even when it subserves no other good, is a benefit to the industrial world. I wish I might bring home to the hearts of all who hear me, and of this entire country, the fact that such policies exhaust the real wealth of the Nation, dissipate our most precious economic resources, and deprive us of the productive energy of thousands of able-bodied men.

There is another phase of this question that deserves the sober thought of all men throughout the world who are charged with the responsibility of government.

These vast armaments tend to promote a spirit of rivalry among nations to excel each other. This tendency has grown for the last decade so rapidly that it now amounts to an international race for supremacy in war preparation; and that, too, at a time when there is no cloud on the international horizon to threaten the existing peaceful relations between all nations of the world.

I think perhaps our Nation was the last of the great nations to join in this mad international armament race. It was in November, 1906, that England launched her first Dreadnought. The estimates for the increase of our Navy were then in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to Congress. They did not include an estimate for a Dreadnought, or a "scared-at-nothing" battleship, as Congressman Williams, of Mississippi, then said. But when it was heralded all over the world that England had launched a battleship of 18,000 tons displacement, some 3,000 tons in excess of our largest battleships, it was deemed advisable to submit to Congress a supplemental estimate for a 20,000-ton battleship, and as a conclusive argument in support of the authorization of such a ship our Chief Executive at that time said to me, "I want to be able to say, when I go out of this office, that I have authorized the construction of the biggest battleship the world has ever seen."

Although Congress at that session did nothing more than authorize the preparation of plans for a battleship of that size, at its next session, under pressure of a manufactured Japanese war scare, it authorized two 20,000-ton battleships. But before the adjournment of Congress on March 4, 1909, England had laid the keel of two Dreadnoughts of 23,000 tons displacement, and in order to gratify a personal and national ambition to excel England, as well as all other nations of the earth, in the construction of great battleships, Congress authorized the construction of two battleships of 26,000 tons displacement.

Thus we see how the policy of an armed peace leads to unnecessary and extravagant war expenditures. If we can insure international peace only by the comparative size and extent of our armaments, then the same is true of all other nations, and each must ultimately exhaust its resources and those of its people in order to insure itself against successful attack by any other power. For this reason I maintain that the cost of an armed peace is so great and the effect upon national credit so disastrous that international peace can not be maintained, and the cost is therefore prohibitive.

The truth is, my friends, that the social and economic organization of the world has advanced beyond its political organization. Industrially, commercially, and educationally we dwell in a new world—the world of the twentieth century. Politically we cling to the institutions of the eighteenth century. Armies and navies will always be necessary for the discharge of the police functions of government, but elaborate armaments, built at enormous cost for the purpose of insuring international peace, are rapidly becoming, if they have not already become, an anachronism in the world.

In view of the fact that within the last six years at least 80 treaties of obligatory arbitration have been concluded between the nations, our own Nation being a party to 23 of them, the world may confidently hope that ere long the dream of the poet will be realized of a time

When the war drums beat no longer,
And the battle flags are furled
In the parliament of Nations,
The federation of the world.

A SORRY SCARECROW—WAR PREPARATIONS AS PRICE OF PEACE—ASSUMPTIONS OF IGNORANCE REGARDING THE SOLDIERY OF THE CIVIL WAR.

[By Col. William Hoynes, Notre Dame, Ind.]

Some one named Gen. Homer Lea has of late been busier with the pen than he ever was or is likely to be with the sword. His book entitled "The Valor of Ignorance" has been industriously circulated and persistently brought to the notice of the press.

The comments it has elicited betray in some places a sense of alarm and in others a feeling akin to terror at our alleged unpreparedness for war. He maintains with Hobson-like sensationalism and garrulity that any of the great nations could with comparative impunity bombard our seaport cities, land armies, defeat us in battle, and obtain a victory which might place us for years under the domination of a foreign foe. All these evils are predicated on our not having a bigger Navy and larger standing Army.

This lugubrious jeremiad is not, however, an original fancy of Gen. Homer Lea. It is old and stale, although again exploited without reference to its triteness. It has served for ages as a means of adding war vessels to the navies and new levies to the armies of empires and kingdoms. There is hardly any limit to it, except an empty exchequer, to which it inevitably leads.

RUNG ON ALL THE CHANGES.

In our own country this doleful tune has been intermittently piped for more than half a century. It has been rung on all the changes of defenseless coasts, inadequate standing army, unserviceable militia, unfitness for war, and national humiliation in our alleged military and naval inferiority.

The less danger the more ominous appears to be the screeching of the ill-omened owls that see foreign fleets in the clouds and hostile armies in the storms that sweep the sky.

This valiant knight of peace, who seeks fame through his goose quill, is evidently an authority on "ignorance," if not on "valor," and may fittingly appropriate the word in the title of his book. The evident sensationalism and dogmatism characterizing it awaken surprise in some degree and challenge controversy.

Nevertheless, it might pass without comment or mention on my part, at least, were it not for the ignorance it betrays in referring to the citizen soldiery of the Civil War. The statement that there were 200,000 desertions from the Army during that momentous struggle is so unfair and gratuitous that it becomes hardly less than a duty to squelch it as a venomous copperhead in the grass. To avoid digression, however, this phase of the matter may be deferred.

The cry of alarm in regard to the alleged weakness of our Army and Navy is almost an echo of what one hears in England, Germany, France, Russia, Italy, and other nations—nations that by reason of geographical situation, environments, and conflicting interests are keenly vigilant and distrustful of one another, as indicated by their rigorous conscription laws and intensive maintenance on a war footing. The admonitions and appeals in the same line which have recently become so common in our own country seem mainly to originate among the war-seeking and promotion-aspiring elements of the military and naval service.

A FORMAL AND SIGNIFICANT REPORT.

But to show how decrepit and senile is the theme let me quote from an authority at hand. It is the report of Commissioner Richard Delafield, major of engineers, to Jefferson Davis, then Secretary of War, and later president of the Confederate States—the Southern Confederacy.

The commission comprised Maj. Delafield, Maj. A. Mordecai, and Capt. George B. McClellan. It was authorized by the Government to go abroad and study the art of war in the Crimean campaign and Europe generally. Its observations covered the years 1854, 1855, and 1856, the period reminiscently and longingly referred to by ship-subsidy people and others as that in which our argosies of commerce covered all the seas and the ubiquity of our flag bore undeniable evidence to the diffusion of American trade throughout the world. And it may be as well to remark in passing that ship subsidies had not even been suggested at that time, although the navigation laws were more liberal and consonant with common sense. But to quote from the report, which is dated at West Point, May 7, 1858:

"We possess a nucleus of military knowledge in the country, barely sufficient for the wants of our Army in time of peace. * * * The auxiliary branches are not provided for. Our seacoast defenses are not conducted with as much energy as an individual bestows in building a residence for his family.

"It is undeniable that of the number of guns needed for the defense of our seacoast the Nation does not contain, including the whole standing Army, men enough that know how to fire hot and hollow shot to provide a single man for a sixth part of the guns. In this unprecedented state on our part several of the powers of Europe have steam transports and munitions, with fleets superior to our own, ready at any moment to throw on our coasts disciplined armies that could land in six hours after anchoring.

"Yet, with blind indifference, professing at the same time to be all powerful, our people neglect the many calls and statements of those they appoint to study this subject, leaving us at the mercy in the first years of conflict of either of the naval and military powers of the old world."

UNFOUNDED THEORY IN FACE OF FACTS.

In perusing these alarming excerpts from the official report, published over half a century ago, one might abstractedly fancy himself deep in the lucubrations of Gen. Homer Lea or in the familiar and fear-inspiring messages of a former occupant of the White House. Oh, for a greater Army and a bigger Navy and more battleships and new cruisers and improved torpedo boats and generous ship subsidies and additional fortifications on our home and insular coasts to protect our alleged merchant shipping!

Notwithstanding that terrifying report the people did not become frightened. On the contrary, it made no impression, and they continued to move forward in the customary tenor of daily routine. They remained steadfast and unapprehensive until the tocsin was sounded and the War of the Rebellion broke out and became flagrant in the land. This was the most sanguinary and fiercely contested war of modern times, and the participants were composed almost entirely of volunteers. Men and boys from the farm, the workshop, the office, and the schoolroom comprised the rank and file of both armies. And no armies in the world, no matter how carefully trained or skilled in warfare, ever fought with greater courage and fortitude.

According to the report of Maj. Delafield and his associate commissioners, the country was unprepared for war and practically defenseless as against foreign powers, and yet the Union Army courageously met a most formidable foe. It fought valiantly and despaired not in temporary reverses and defeats. With fortitude it stood at bay, and returned to battle with the dash and enthusiasm of victory. At the same time it defied both England and France in their machinations in behalf of the South. It was well known that their pronounced sympathy was with that section and that they had made tentative movements toward active cooperation with it, but the apparent indifference and defiant attitude of "the boys in blue" frightened them into a professed neutrality.

According to the report either of them could have come over alone and made a successful attack on the entire country, undivided as it was before the war. According to the fact both of them were defied and taught the folly of intervention by the North alone while engaged in a desperate struggle with fearless foemen—the valiant armies of the Confederacy.

Moreover, when the bloody contest was closing and troops began to march toward the Rio Grande, France saw fit to withdraw her army from Mexico. And later, when the carnage ceased and the war was ended, a message to England suggested the advisability of her paying the claims arising from the depredations of the Confederate cruiser Alabama, and with many a protest and grimace she handed over through arbitration nearly $15,000,000.

The citizen soldiery of that most sanguinary war returned to the peaceful pursuits of life as quietly as they had flocked to the "colors" when called on by President Lincoln to save the Union. They afforded a patriotic illustration of what freemen can do and what a just sense of duty prompts them to do in defense of their country.

THE WELCOME IN STORE FOR INVADING ARMIES.

An invading army on our shores would invite the fate of the British veterans at New Orleans, where their losses were in the approximate ratio of 150 to each one of the militia and hastily recruited citizen soldiery that Jackson led into the fray.

Even if a hostile army should succeed in landing at any point on our coast it could not move beyond the cannon range of its war vessels. Nor could it long remain even there. In a few weeks it would be pushed back to the water's edge, crushed in the tightening lines around it, compelled to surrender, or forced to reembark under the guns of its fleet.

Moreover, there is no occasion, save in the assumption of ignorance, for apprehending danger of seacoast attacks by hostile navies.

The siege of Vicksburg offers a suggestive and practical object lesson in that respect. The heaviest battering by siege guns and mortars, and all kinds of ordnance and implements of war that ever took place on this continent was at Vicksburg. It lasted from about the middle of May until the 3d of July, 1863, the hour that the battle of Gettysburg was decided by the repulse of Pickett's charge. Vicksburg became ours by surrender that evening, and we entered it on the 4th. Pemberton and his staff, with an army exceeding 30,000 men, met us with friendly salutations. Tons of iron and lead had been thrown into the city during the siege, and the ground was literally covered with the débris of war. Yet Vicksburg stood almost intact. Only four buildings near the landing place on the river appeared to have been irreparably damaged. Even the courthouse cupola and clock, which had been a favorite target for aspiring artillerists throughout the siege, still stood out bold and defiant.

All the hostile fleets of the world could hardly have delivered a fire so terrific, continuous, and well directed. It was maintained almost incessantly for weeks, and yet the physical evidences of the damage appeared to be comparatively unimportant. It seemed to me that the visible damage could be repaired in a month or two by a few hundred carpenters and masons.

Nor was Petersburg much damaged by its memorable siege, which lasted for several months. It must be admitted, however, that there the fire from the siege guns and mortars was directed in the main toward the railroad station and boat-landing on the Appomattox, and was not so searching, constant, and heavy in volume as at Vicksburg.

How insignificant must seem a temporary and sporadic attack of war vessels, with aim as unsteady as that of mounted cavalrymen, in comparison with the steady and concentrated fire of siege guns, mortars, artillery, and rifles! And yet a yellow streak develops and timidity becomes manifest in some quarters on mentioning the alleged danger of attacks by foreign fleets on our pretendedly defenseless, but in reality exceptionally well-fortified, seaport cities.

From this point of view one can afford to make light of the puerile cry of alarm heard now, as well as heretofore, in reference to the inferiority of our military establishment, the weakness of our Navy, the defenselessness of our coasts, the unavailableness of our Militia, the unreliability of a civilian soldiery, our helplessness in apprehended war, and our low martial standing in the estimation of world powers. There is an air about all this that suggests the obsolete "hot shot," referred to in Maj. Delafield's report. The author's shako might serve as a coehorn for its discharge.

VINDICATION OF THE VOLUNTEERS OF THE CIVIL WAR.

But little heed, however, is bestowed upon such vaporing. What I specially resent is the unfair and misleading reference to the Union Army in the Civil War. There is an imputation of cowardice and commercialism, rather than patriotism, in the irrelevant, if not irrational, accusation that there were 200,000 desertions from it during that gloomy period of the Nation's stress and peril. This seems hardly less than a desecration to one who faced the varying phases of the war. It argues stupidity, bumptiousness, crass ignorance, or malicious vindictiveness in the accuser.

It was my own fate at the time to be numbered among the volunteers or civilian soldiers thus inferentially misrepresented and aspersed. I was with them in the days of their youthful vigor, buoyant hopefulness, undaunted courage, and devoted patriotism. With them on the march, in the bivouac, and in battle—with the dead and wounded on the field, in the ambulance, in the hospital—it was my privilege to know thoroughly and intimately the men and the class of men composing the Union Army. I know them to have been the best and bravest in the land. They were the pride of Columbia, the hope of the Nation, the saviors of the Union.

A NEW LIGHT ON DESERTIONS.

As to desertions from the Army, I call to mind but one or two instances of the kind, and these took place toward the close of the war. It is undoubtedly true that when the war closed many left for their homes without waiting to be formally and regularly discharged. They had not seen their homes, nor spoken with relatives, nor been at the interment of their dead, nor attended personally to their business affairs, nor been able to respond to urgent calls affecting their interests at home for three or four years, and it is not so very surprising that some of these hastened back informally and prematurely when the war ended. Of course they were charged with desertion, and technically they did wrong and were deserters. But as they held out to the end and did not leave in the face of the enemy they hardly deserved to be condemned for desertion. In view of the extenuating circumstances a milder term would be more applicable to their offense.

It must be admitted, however, that in the larger cities many lawless adventurers, actuated by pecuniary enticements, made a business of enlisting and deserting. Some of them did so scores and scores of times. Familiar with the disguises of criminals, they passed from place to place, going under false names, and repeatedly enlisting and deserting.

Wretches of that class, needless to state, were hardly ever seen at the front. Never in any proper sense did they become soldiers. What well-informed and fair-minded man could indiscriminately charge the volunteer soldiers of the Union with the craven conduct and criminal deeds of those contemptible scoundrels?

In dealing further with this subject let it be remembered that there was hardly a notable battle during the war that did not have its quota of unidentified dead. This was especially the case where different commands passed under fire successively over the same ground, or where the enemy prevailed and held the field, possibly covered with dead and wounded.

Moreover, in many instances the dead of the victorious army can not be recognized even by their comrades. With features changed in death agonies; faces blanched and shrunken or black and swollen; a strange, wild and unnatural expression substituted for that of life; limbs and forms strained and rigid in unusual poses or bloated and offensive in premature decay, they often pass without identification, unless their names appear on letters or cards found on their persons.

Thousands of these nameless heroes were disinterred from the battlefield trenches and decently buried in the national cemeteries. "Unknown" is chiseled on the little headstones that mark their graves. In some places, as at Fredericksburg, the remains of five or six of them are often interred in the same tomb. It is not unusual to find wording such as this on the grave markers: "John Smith, Co. A, 2d Wis., and five unknown."

There is no doubt that hundreds or thousands of these "unknown" are still carried on the Army rolls as deserters.

And who can tell how many hundreds and thousands of brave fellows died nameless, so far as we know, in southern prisons? Captured in battle, lost suddenly to the view of their comrades, sent to Andersonville or other Confederate prisons and held there until death relieved them from their sufferings, the records of their names, companies, regiments, and when they died often failed to reach us, and sometimes were not preserved or even written out for use by the enemy. We can better imagine how numerous these must have been and how many thousands of them may still be carried on the Army rolls as deserters when we recall the fact that as many as 30,000 prisoners were at one time confined in the stockade at Andersonville.

HOW TO MAINTAIN PEACE.

If Gen. Homer Lee had in fairness taken account of facts such as these, he would hardly have betrayed the ignorance or mental obliquity he exhibits in referring to desertions from the Army during the Civil War, nor would he have ventured to equivocate in respect to the intrepidity and fighting qualities of our citizen soldiery. He seems to think that a militia or volunteer army counts for little in the national defense, and that the safety of the Nation lies in an immense standing army and sea-covering navy.

The truth is that the safety of the Nation consists in minding its own business and not interfering wantonly or braggartly with the affairs of other countries. As a self-respecting nation, adhering to lines of gentlemanly deportment, we might go on till doomsday without a foreign war, and so though our standing army were no greater than that of Switzerland, Luxemburg, or San Marino.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I doubt if there is a Member of this House who is any more solicitous than I am that we should provide for a sufficient and efficient Navy, and while we have war specialists and peace theorists in this House, as well as in the country at large, it has seemed to me in the past that the policy which the department has recommended and the Naval Committee has adopted of building two battleships a year would substantially keep us in the same relative position in regard to other navies of the world that we are in to-day. If we are going to have a Navy at all, we should have a Navy sufficiently powerful to cope with any nation with which we may be brought in contact, and I have believed, and I still believe, that the Navy which we have is sufficient for that purpose and that if we maintain——

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOBSON. Merely whether the gentleman is conversant with the program of Germany that is now a law, under which four Dreadnoughts are built every year and will continue to be built?

Mr. WEEKS. I am familiar with the figures that have been submitted to the public by various naval authorities and by the Secretary of the Navy in his report, and I still think I am right in the conclusion to which I have come. Therefore, if we maintain substantially our present policy as to building battleships, it is my opinion we will retain our relative position among the nations of the earth.

But I should not take the time of the House to say this if I did not wish also to call to the attention of the House the necessity which we have for a homogeneous naval force, and for that I believe we are not providing. We must not only have battleships, but we must have officers and men, and sufficient auxiliaries to make the battleship fleet effective. We have provided by increasing the number of appointments to the Naval Academy for sufficient officers eventually for our present fleet, but we have a limitation of 45,000 men for all purposes, including manning the fleet, while if we engaged in war it would require something like 60,000 men to man the fleet which we actually have in commission or could put in commission at this time—15,000 more men than we have. The only possible place where we can get these men is by picking up such men as have served in the Navy recently and to make available the 6,500 men in the Naval Militia, not enough under any circumstances to provide sufficient men to man our fleet. But in the lack of auxiliaries we are in even a worse plight than in the case of officers and men. We must have additional auxiliaries or it is folly for us to continue to build battleships, and I want to say now that unless Congress in its wisdom provides through the upbuilding of the merchant marine or by naval appropriations for additional auxiliaries for our fleet it is my purpose hereafter to vote against even the modest policy which has obtained in the past for the building of battleships. Let us consider our condition as it is. Assuming we have 32 battleships, 10 armored cruisers, 13 scouts, 4 cruisers of the third class, 20 destroyers, and 28 torpedo boats, it would be necessary in order to furnish auxiliaries for a fleet of that size to provide 19 additional scouts, 4 additional repair ships, 6 additional supply ships, 4 hospital ships, 2 tenders for destroyers, 3 tenders for submarines, 2 transports, and 19 colliers, and that would only supply sufficient colliers to provide coal for our fleet if the fleet were operating 2,000 miles or less from its base.

If the fleet were operating 3,000 miles from its base, instead of requiring 29 colliers it would be necessary to have 41, and if operating 4,000 miles from its base we would have to have 55 colliers instead of 29, and if operating 5,000 miles from its base it would be necessary for us to have 74 colliers to properly supply the fleet from its base, to say nothing of the colliers that would be necessary to supply the base with coal, unless we have previously provided coal at our coaling stations throughout the world.

This is a condition that will make our fleet absolutely helpless in time of need. We all know when the battleship fleet went around the world we had to use foreign bottoms to provide the fleet with coal. We would have to do it to-day; we will have to do it a year from to-day, or two years from to-day, unless we make proper provisions to supply this absolute necessity; and I submit to this House it is futile for us to go ahead and provide additional battleships unless we are going to provide the means for making them effective.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I have been contending all the while that our Navy is top-heavy in battleships and deficient in auxiliaries. It has been my contention and my policy to supply the auxiliaries and to cut down the overheavy battleships.

In 1905 the Secretary of the Navy and President Roosevelt stated in their official reports to Congress that one battleship a year was all that was needed. That recommendation was renewed in 1906. It is hardly necessary for me to say that Mr. Roosevelt was an enthusiast on the Navy. And yet the policy has been changed. And to show how we are drifting, President Taft announced not long since that we should continue the two-battleship-a-year program until 1915, when the Panama Canal should be completed; and yet, in the present year, the Secretary of the Navy says that it is necessary to continue indefinitely with two battleships a year in order to maintain and support the private navy shipbuilding yards of the country. How we are progressing! President Roosevelt and his Secretary said that one a year was sufficient, and President Taft has said two a year.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I can not. I have given the gentleman 50 minutes of my time and have taken 6 myself.

President Taft said when we complete the canal we could end the two-ship-a-year program, and yet the following is solemnly proclaimed to us in this report of the Secretary for the present year:

> In addition to this, however, it is important to lay special emphasis upon the effect of any break in this policy upon the shipyards of the country. The Navy must be to a certain extent dependent for its material and to some extent for its repair facilities in war time on these establishments. Their preservation and continuance in business are necessary to the national safety. It is in this light that the need of the regular system of naval appropriation becomes of additional importance. Two battleships a year, with minor construction, is about as little as will suffice to obtain the result.

Now, that is as strong as it could be printed; and then, further on in his report, he says that even after 1912 we must enlarge the program to more than two battleships a year.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to another thing. We have adopted a policy in the last two years. We never heard of it before two years ago. Now they say we must have a first line and a second line. Heretofore it has always been proclaimed that a battleship was good for not less than 20 years, but in order to stimulate this big process——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. May I have one minute more?

Mr. FOSS. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. PADGETT. In order to stimulate this building they are dividing up and creating this artificial condition of a first line of 10 years and a second line of 20 years.

I want to call attention to this: I have here a statement of the expenditures of the last fiscal year for different nations. Great Britain expended $193,333,982, the United States expended $133,005,552, Germany expended $103,202,537, and Japan expended $36,889,158.

Now, then, we are having every year, alternately, threats of impending war. Last year we had the threat of an impending horror of Germany. This year it is Japan. The year before last it was Japan, and the year before that it was Germany. These are used every year to try to frighten the American people. Let us stand on our manhood and on our honor and refuse to be frightened by any such bugbears, and stand for a sensible policy of one battleship. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Four minutes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the committee briefly for a moment, and in the first place I desire to say that the committee has not been moved by threats of war or by the popular sentiment or agitation of the hour in the recommendation of this program or in the recommendation of previous programs in naval appropriation acts. The policy of the Committee on Naval Affairs, ever since I have had the honor of being chairman, and that has been for 11 years, has been to present to this House a consistent course and plan for increasing the American Navy, and it made no difference whether Executive pressure came swiftly and pressed heavily on us or not, the Naval Committee, through it all, maintained a consistent position and recommended what it believed to be a reasonable program.

I well remember a few years ago when the President of the United States desired four battleships. Notwithstanding the President's desire, the Naval Committee brought in the old program of two battleships, and it was carried through the House.

Now, the general board, consisting of some of our ablest officers, has recommended four battleships this year, but we recommend only two in this bill. We are not engaged in rivalry with any nation on the face of the globe. England is building five great Dreadnoughts this year; Germany, as has been stated, is building four. But these things do not influence us. We come here with the same consistent, reasonable program that we have always maintained for a number of years. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen say we are at peace to-day. We are, thank God! I hope we will always be at peace with every nation on the face of the globe. But you know and I know that there has not been a great nation anywhere that has not been at war with somebody during the last 12 years—Russia, England, France, Japan, China, ourselves even, 12 years ago in the Spanish-American War. Gentlemen may talk peace on this floor, but when war comes you must have a navy. Can you build it then? No; because it takes three years to build your battleships. Where are your men then? It takes three years to train them. Your Navy must be ready, and popular indignation from every part of the country would fall upon the American Navy and upon the Government unless we were prepared when that great emergency came upon us. Let us never forget that.

And, then, Mr. Chairman, there are other considerations. We have great interests to protect, defending the lives of the people and the property of the United States. We are building a great Panama Canal; we are extending the coast line of our country; we are bringing the two great oceans into everlasting fellowship by cutting the narrow Isthmus of Panama, and we will need a navy to defend that canal some day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All the time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of that amendment first.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] will be reported, as will also the amendment to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. PADGETT, as follows:

On page 59, line 23, strike out "two" and insert "one."
Also strike out the letter "s" in the word "battleships."
Also strike out, in line 24, the word "each."
Also strike out, in line 3, page 60, the word "each."

The Clerk read the substitute offered by Mr. HOBSON, as follows:

On page 59, line 23, strike out "two" and insert "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBSON) there were—ayes 9, noes 116.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PADGETT and Mr. BARTHOLDT demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 116.

Mr. PADGETT, Mr. BARTHOLDT, and Mr. MACON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. FOSS and Mr. PADGETT.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 139.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The announcement of the result of the vote was received with applause.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of my amendment, which has already been read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, in line 1, after the word "speed," insert "at least equal to that of any known battleship."

Mr. FOSS. I have no objection to that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, after line 3, add a new paragraph——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Amendments to the paragraph are in order before new paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand. Is the gentleman's amendment a new paragraph?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize amendments to perfect the paragraph.

Mr. SULZER. I now offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 3, page 60, amend as follows:
"Provided always, That one of the battleships herein authorized shall be constructed in one of the navy yards."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that. In the first place, it is not germane to this paragraph. In the second place, it is new legislation.

Mr. SULZER. I take issue with my friend on that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit that the amendment is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not germane to this particular paragraph, at least. The Chair would be glad to hear from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not care to discuss it. The paragraph authorizes the construction of battleships. So far as the germaneness of this amendment is concerned, I can not see any room for doubt.

Mr. FOSS. I hope I have made my point of order clear, that it is not germane, and also that it is new legislation.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I am content to take a ruling now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against this paragraph, and in accordance with the precedent established when this bill was under consideration in the last Congress——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit to the Chair that a decision made on another occasion does not necessarily determine this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will follow the precedent made in recent years, and will sustain the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I call for the reading of the amendment which I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, page 60, at the end of the paragraph, add:
"Provided, That the draft of such battleships shall not exceed 30 feet."

Mr. FOSS. I make a point of order against that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph proposes to construct battleships, and the amendment proposes to limit the draft of the battleships so constructed. It seems to me it is entirely germane to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. This provision simply treats of battleships.

The CHAIRMAN. But it relates to speed and radius of action.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; it says the highest practicable speed. This is a limitation on the discretion of the Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that an amendment which appeals to speed, radius of action, and so forth, might be amended by an amendment that related to draft, and the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, there is involved here a serious question; one that some day must be taken up by other nations as well as our own. It is a question of limiting the depth of the artificial harbors of the world, along with the draft of vessels using them. The country is making a vast expenditure through its river and harbor appropriations for the dredging of channels to accommodate not only naval vessels but great commercial vessels constructed in foreign shipyards, and which some of our rivers and harbors are unable to accommodate. Many of the nations of the Old World that assume to be naval powers are necessarily considering a limitation upon the size of vessels to be constructed.

I have before me a brief list of the drafts which hold with regard to naval vessels constructed by some of the leading maritime powers. We have gone as far as any of them in the construction of our battleships with the single exception of Great Britain, which has now attained to a draft for battleships of 31 feet. Germany is limited in the construction of battleships to a draft of less than 27½ feet because of the Kiel Canal. There is no vessel in the German Navy, so far as I am informed, with a draft of more than 27 feet. Japan, the naval power to which reference has been made this afternoon, has vessels that do not draw in excess of 28 feet. Austro-Hungary and Russia are in exactly the same position. England is said to be reducing the draft of her battleships.

Mr. Chairman, some time ago I introduced into this House, and it is now before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, a joint resolution which proposed that the maritime nations of the world should be invited to an international conference to consider a limitation of the depths of artificial channels. This would be of great importance to this country, and to all others, in the matter of revenue. It would help to standardize the construction of war vessels and merchantmen, so that we could keep them within limits that might be agreed upon, and by a limitation of the depth of channels save expense the different nations now incur in maintaining artificial channels.

It seems to be a matter of much consequence to this Nation that we should be called upon year after year to make increased appropriations for deeper harbors along the seacoast, either on the Pacific or the Atlantic, for the accommodation of one or two great leviathans of the ocean, constructed on the other side of the water. The Cunard Line proposes to build a vessel that draws 30 feet or upward, and then the Congress of the United States is expected to make an expenditure for deepening a harbor or harbors to accommodate that single foreign-built vessel. As as matter of eternal economy we will eventually have to draw the line somewhere.

We have by the Panama Canal limited the depth of international commerce to 45 feet; that is the limit which may be used by vessels that propose to go through that canal, and it is to be hoped we shall never reach that limit. Germany, even in the matter of war vessels, is not so favored, since she is limited by the depth of the Kiel Canal, which is substantially 27½ feet. If gentlemen want to improve the peace relations of the world and extend the commercial relations of the world and save money to their Governments, they will not hesitate to bring about an international agreement that will mean standardization of the draft of vessels throughout the world. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I wish to offer to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Colorado to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 59, beginning with line 21, strike out the remainder of the page, and lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 60.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say that at the last Congress this amendment was offered, and I was one among 17 who voted for it. I propose at the end of the tenth month to ascertain how many Congressmen I can enlist in a company armed with an old double-barrel shotgun to meet the enemy upon the Pacific coast.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RUCKER of Colorado) there were—ayes 10, noes 55.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 60, after line 3, add a new paragraph:

"One first-class armored cruiser of as high speed as any known vessel of its class, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament and having as great a radius of action as practicable, and to cost not to exceed $7,000,000, exclusive of armor and armament."

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is for the purpose of beginning to make our Navy homogeneous. The gentlemen who have spoken before, including the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], have many of them expressed a desire to make the Navy homogeneous. If they will look at the table of vessels of modern construction, they will find that the other nations are building what may be termed Dreadnought cruisers, or battleship cruisers, or plain armored cruisers, of a new type. In the official records and reports they are termed armored cruisers of the Invincible type; that is, an armored cruiser that will carry the same caliber of guns as the battleship, an armored cruiser that will have about 3, 4, and now even 5 and 6 knots superior speed to the battleships, and will carry armor that will give them reasonable protection within moderate and short ranges, and give them good protection beyond the range of the penetrating power of the armor-piercing projectile.

Using high-explosive projectiles, they will then be on an equal fighting basis with the Dreadnoughts themselves, and with their superior speed, as in the olden days, will be able to cap the Dreadnought fleet and rake it, and be subject only to the bow guns of one battleship and not the broadside of the fleet. In the British navy they are going at the rate I should say roughly of a little less than three Dreadnoughts to one of those cruisers. They now are building five such cruisers and have built three, making eight altogether. Germany is building three such cruisers, and one is already in commission. Japan is building three such cruisers. America has none. This means that when our fleet goes out to meet a foreign fleet, even though the battleships proper be equal in number, they would not have what they call the "fast wings." These fast battleships or cruisers, that can go out and scout and even harrass the other fleet, even a battleship fleet, by capping it, and getting it where they could do great damage and receive very little in return. It becomes a very serious practical factor in battle.

Again, until war and disaster open our eyes we are doomed to have no fleet in one ocean, because we have but one fleet for two oceans. The enemy, having the choice of time, will bring on war when the fleet is in the other ocean. There will be nothing there to prevent the opposing power from launching its great army to strike us. But if we have only two such Dreadnought cruisers in the deserted ocean, which could not be captured by the battleships of the enemy, then the enemy would not dare to embark his troops and start over sea with his great standing army. Two such Dreadnought cruisers could well postpone the invasion of our territory, and even gain time enough for our fleet to arrive and change the very issue of the war.

I have pointed out again and again that America is confronted with this situation, that across the Atlantic and across the Pacific there are great standing armies that we must protect ourselves against because we have no standing armies of our own. We ought to put ships between us and those armies; we ought to have great battleship fleets constantly in both oceans. But we do not have them, and the two-battleships-a-year program is going to confine us to one fleet, and a decreasing fleet, relatively, until it will go down from 23 to 17 ships in the first line of battle. The least we can do to give some protection in the other ocean is to be able to turn loose there at least two of these great Dreadnought cruisers. I hope I shall be sustained in this effort, irrespective of the naval policy Members may individually approve. We have established our policy. This amendment is to increase the homogeneity and efficiency of the fleet. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph:
"Two transports of not less than 21 knots trial speed, and to cost not more than $2,000,000 each."

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. MANN. That it is not authorized, and the transports do not come within the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] on the matter.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this is the naval bill, and this is the paragraph in the bill providing for naval vessels, and I am proposing two naval transports. Transports are just as important a part of a navy as a line of battleships. In fact, just at this time we are informed that our Navy is lacking in efficiency, or would be in time of war, because we have not and would not obtain the necessary transports.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I appreciate the anxiety of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to have transports to get troops and supplies sent from Wyoming across the Rocky Mountains, still I think he will have to cross a mountain to get his amendment in.

Mr. MONDELL. I may be different from the gentleman from Illinois in this, that I do not always think of Wyoming as he may think of Illinois when I offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MANN. I always think of Illinois at all times, no matter what I am doing.

Mr. BUTLER. I trust this will not take up much time. I am afraid to go home in the dark. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The rule is well settled. It only relates to the fleet of war vessels.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is looking for a ruling of that character.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair should happen to have at hand the rulings on the last two or three naval bills he will find a number to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] whether the transports are to be used in transporting men of the Army—soldiers?

Mr. MONDELL. They are to be used for transporting supplies in the Navy, as provided in the naval appropriation bill, and are necessarily naval transports.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], in my judgment, is clearly correct. We have used transports in the Navy practically since the Navy was founded. In the time of the Spanish War we had transports carrying the marines from the mainland to insular possessions. We have had transports in the Navy for the service of the marines continually. They have been recommended in programs year after year. I can not understand how the idea could ever enter a Member's mind that the Navy may not have transports as well as the Army, because they must have a transportation of supplies and of men. It is clearly a naval vessel, if it was put in the amendment, and I do not believe the point of order should lie.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Alabama to say that there are naval transports now, so far as the naval establishment is concerned?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. When the naval bill was under consideration in the last Congress an amendment was offered providing for five torpedo-boat destroyers, and so forth. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] made a point of order against that on the ground that the appropriation was not authorized by law. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the Chairman of the committee, held:

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is for the construction of additional vessels of a type now in use in the Navy—war vessels.

As the Chair understands, the pending amendment is in order, and the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama offered an amendment which he believed would increase the efficiency of the Navy. I am rather inclined to agree with him, but I offer an amendment which, in my opinion, would increase the efficiency of our Navy more than anything else that we can do. It is a fact that if war were to be declared to-day or to-morrow, or at any time in the future, without some opportunity for the purchase of ships, it would be utterly impossible for us to supply our Navy, wherever located, with the necessary munitions of war. We have not enough merchant ships flying the American flag, if we could buy them all, to supply munitions of war and furnish supplies for our Navy if it were located in the Pacific, and I doubt if we could do so if the seat of war were in the Atlantic. Certainly not if it were in the western ocean.

We have failed to provide legislation to build up the American merchant marine. So long as we decline to do that we must supply these troopships, these supply ships, these transports. It is utterly useless to go on building these leviathans of war and launching them and sending them abroad when we have not and can not possibly obtain the ships necessary to furnish them with supplies and munitions of war, and can not furnish them with the men necessary to take care of our Navy in time of war. Even if we had a month of preparation before the outbreak of a war, it would be difficult for us to purchase ships carrying the American flag in sufficient numbers to supply the needs of our Navy. But if war were declared without any warning—and that is the way war ordinarily comes upon us—it would be impossible for us to buy ships carrying neutral flags, and we would be compelled to depend upon the few ships which now carry the American flag—clearly not enough to supply the needs of our Navy. And we would have the spectacle of the finest Navy in the world in a condition absolutely helpless, because we could not furnish the necessary supplies.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two fleet colliers, of 14 knots trial speed when carrying not less than 12,500 tons of cargo and bunker coal, to cost not to exceed $1,000,000 each.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

Insert so as to read "five fleet colliers, to have the highest practicable speed when carrying not less than 12,500 tons of cargo and bunker coal, to cost not to exceed $1,000,000 each."

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a word. We are building two battleships a year. What is needed are more colliers. The spectacle presented to the world when the battleship fleet went around the seas was something most deplorable and enough to make every American blush for shame. The fleet had to be convoyed by foreign colliers. In case of a war, during that period, those battleships would have been as helpless and as idle as "painted ships upon a painted ocean." They could not have relied upon those foreign colliers. The whole thing demonstrated the absurdity of our present naval policy. More colliers should be the order of the day. More swift transport steamers should be built, so that we will not have to charter foreign ships to carry the coal, the food, and the supplies for our battleships wherever they go.

Hence, it seems to me, as a matter of common sense, that if we really desire to do something for the efficiency of the Navy we should begin to increase the number of colliers to keep pace with the increase in the number of battleships. To do otherwise is ridiculous in view of past experience. We have very few colliers. It will do no harm and much good, in my judgment, to have at least three more provided for in this bill, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HOBSON. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. SULZER. My amendment will increase the number of colliers herein authorized from two to five. It should be adopted. We should have more colliers, at least two for every battleship and cruiser. Common sense dictates it.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I hope this proposition will be voted down. We have already three colliers authorized by Congress which we are not able to build at the present time by reason of the legislative restrictions which have been placed upon them.

Two years ago we provided that a collier should be built in the Mare Island Navy Yard, and put a limit of cost upon it of $1,000,000. The estimates for the building of that collier were $1,400,000, or $500,000 more than we are paying for the building of a similar collier by the Maryland Steel Co. to-day. This House insisted that we should build this collier in that navy yard, when it would cost 50 per cent more than to build it in a private yard. Not only that, but last year we authorized the building of two fleet colliers, and we put in a provision requiring that they should be built under the eight-hour law, which means an increase of cost in the building of each collier of at least $250,000, and for the two colliers it means $500,000. So if this House would remove the legislative restrictions which have been put upon these three colliers which we are unable to build to-day we would save $1,000,000, which would be the cost of a collier built in a private shipyard. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Four submarine torpedo boats, in an amount not exceeding in the aggregate $2,000,000, and the sum of $800,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, page 60, strike out the word "four" and insert the word "six," so as to read "six submarine torpedo boats."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wanted to have an opportunity to talk on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "purpose," in line 14, strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and add:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any boat by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of the commencement and construction of said vessel established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the construction of the vessels named herein."

Mr. FOSS. I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this is an attempt to limit an appropriation. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the attempt is here made to appropriate this money. My purpose is to limit that appropriation so that no part of it can be paid except to persons, firms, or corporations having certain qualifications. I do not think the Chair will have any difficulty in determining that the amendment is in order.

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS. Is it the purpose of the gentleman's amendment to apply only to the four submarine torpedo boats, or to all the craft that have been authorized in the paragraph?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Just at present to the four submarines.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. I heard the amendment read.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The reason I offer that at this time, and attempt to apply it to this particular item, is because the attempt is made in this item to appropriate the money right at this place. It has been held frequently, and I can cite the Chair to a number of decisions that it is possible in this manner to limit appropriations. I call the Chair's attention to this precedent, volume 4, page 261, of Hinds' Precedents, section 3926:

On March 24, 1904, the post-office appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the Clerk read:

"For compensation to 25 rural agents, at $1,600 each; 15 rural agents, at $1,500 each; 15 rural agents, at $1,400 each; 65 rural agents, at $1,200 each; and 10 rural agents, at $1,000 each, $196,200."

To this Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN of North Carolina, offered the following as an amendment:

"Insert, in line 18, page 24, after the word 'dollars,' 'Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any rural agent, who after the 1st day of July, 1904, shall make a recommendation against the establishment of any route on account of the condition of the road over which said route extends or is proposed to extend.'"

Mr. Overstreet, of Indiana, made a point of order against the amendment.

After debate, the Chairman held:

"The Chair has not been referred to any law prescribing the duties of these agents or to any law directing the Postmaster General to designate the duties of these agents so employed. The Chair can only consider the general law conferring upon the Postmaster General the power to distribute the duties of his department where these duties are not distributed by law, and this amendment * * * although vague in its terms and although it might seem to contain provisions which in the mind of the Chair would be difficult of enforcement, still, as the Chair understands those questions they should be submitted to the discretion of the committee, the Chair can not see that this amendment is anything else but an appropriation for certain agents, omitting others, a discrimination which Congress has of course the right to make, and the Chair, therefore, is constrained to overrule the point of order."

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment goes on the bill the effect it will have will be to so arrange matters that no part of this money can be expended with a person, firm, or corporation which is not doing business in a certain way. The Government spending its own money has a right to say, and we have a right to say, what qualifications the persons or corporations with whom we spend this money shall have.

It would be perfectly legitimate for us to say that this money should not be expended for work to be done in any establishment which had not proper sanitary arrangements, where they were overcrowded, or where it was unsafe or dangerous for them to carry on their employment. As there is quite a distinct line of demarcation existing now between plants as to the number of hours they work, these plants would fall into a natural classification right on the point of the number of hours work. This simply means that the Government shall spend this money with the manufacturers having eight-hour plants.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from New Jersey call the attention of the Chair to the ruling on an amendment identical with this?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. No, sir. There was an erroneous ruling at one time on an amendment which the Chair might think was similar to this.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman tell the Chair when that ruling was made?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I could not do that, as much as I would like to help the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it seems clear that this amendment is in order. I call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 3940, volume 4, where an amendment was held to be a limitation, which read as follows:

No part of any money appropriated by this act for charities or charitable institutions shall be paid to any institution named in this act until the charter or articles of incorporation thereof shall be so amended as to accord to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or to their designated agents, authority to visit and inspect such institutions, and to control and supervise the expenditure therein of all public funds paid out of appropriations made by Congress.

That ruling is clearly analagous to the ruling which should be made here.

Here was a provision withholding appropriations from institutions which did not change their charters so as to confer certain powers upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The proposed amendment is that no money shall be paid to any person, firm, or corporation which has not established an eight-hour day for its employees and mechanics. It imposes certain limitations and obligations upon the parties who are to be the recipients of the money, and the two cases are identical. The Chair, in making that decision, held:

This amendment simply provides that "no part of any money appropriated by this act for charities or charitable institutions shall be paid to any institution named in this act until the charter or articles of incorporation thereof shall be so amended," and so forth. It does not purport to amend any charter, but simply provides that the money here appropriated shall not be paid to any institution until its charter is amended as specified here. The amendment is simply a limitation upon the appropriation. The Chair overrules the point of order.

In paragraph 3941 of volume 4 is contained the well-known limitation regarding so-called sectarian schools:

On February 24, 1896, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was considering a paragraph of the Indian appropriation bill, providing for the support of Indian schools, when Mr. William S. Linton, of Michigan, offered this amendment:

"And it is hereby declared that it is the intention of this act that no money herein appropriated shall be paid for education in sectarian schools; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the duty of so using and administering this appropriation as to carry out said object; and he is hereby authorized and required to make all needful rules and regulations necessary to prevent the use of any of said fund for education in sectarian schools."

The Chair held such an amendment declaring the policy of Congress regarding the expenditure of an appropriation to be clearly a limitation upon the appropriation. What does the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey propose that is different from that proposed by Mr. Linton, of Michigan? It is impossible to differentiate these amendments. Suppose the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey read—

It is hereby declared to be the intention of this act that no money herein appropriated shall be paid for work upon these vessels in establishments where a workday longer than eight hours prevails, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby charged with the duty of so using and administering said appropriation as to carry out that object, and he is hereby authorized and required to make all needful rules and regulations necessary to prevent the use of any part of the said fund for work done in establishments having a workday of more than eight hours.

It would be identical with the decision just cited.

The pending amendment is clearly within the rulings heretofore made in the House as to what constitutes a limitation.

In paragraph 3942, of volume 4, an amendment, as follows, was offered:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be available for the Agricultural College of Utah until the Secretary of Agriculture shall be satisfied and shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that no trustee, officer, instructor, or employee of said college is engaged in the practice of polygamy or polygamous relations.

That amendment was held to be in order, because it was a limitation. It is incredible, Mr. Chairman, that it is possible under the rules of this House to withhold payments of money to persons who do not possess qualifications of the most varying character, unless it should be some qualification which affects the right of men to work, and the opportunities to give them a reasonable workday in their avocations. I have some other decisions, but they are all so much of the same tenor and so clearly control the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey that I shall not read them unless the Chair desires.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think this same point was decided last year and the decision rendered by the Chair at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. When the naval bill was under consideration a year ago, April 18, 1910, this precise question was raised, and under precisely the same circumstances. The amendment is offered to the paragraph relating to the construction of torpedo boats. When that paragraph was read last year this same amendment was then offered to this same paragraph.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Not the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know in what respect it differs.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. It differs quite materially.

The CHAIRMAN. In only two or three words at the end, which in no way controls the meaning, it seems to the Chair. The Chair will cause to be read the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, and the amendment which he offered last year.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "purpose," in line 14, strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and add:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any boat by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of the commencement and construction of said vessels established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the construction of the vessels named herein."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment offered last year.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the money shall be paid to any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the commencement of and during the construction of the work for which this appropriation is made, established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged in doing the work for which this money is appropriated. Nothing herein shall affect any existing contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The occupant of the chair at that time was one of the ablest parliamentarians in public life, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and at that time he sustained the point of order, and the Chair follows that precedent and sustains the point of order now.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I would like to state the reason for so doing.

The CHAIRMAN. After the Chair states the question the Chair will recognize the gentleman. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] is recognized.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, of course I want it definitely understood that I have the highest respect for the ability of the present Chairman, as I have for the gentlemen upon whose decision the Chair is now relying, but I want to carry the Members back to this time last year and have them remember the circumstances under which this ruling was made.

There had been put into the naval bill the eight-hour provision that the proponents of that measure desired, and other legislation which they favored had been written into the measure before any effort was made to apply the provision of the eight-hour law by way of limitation. The hour was late; the House was, if I am any judge, a little bit out of temper. Everybody was anxious to get home, and the gentlemen who were with me and my friend from New York in that fight regarded it as over for that occasion, believing that we had obtained everything that we wanted.

I offered the amendment at that time, because I expected to get a favorable ruling upon it. It was not argued. It was simply offered, and, at that, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] took five or six minutes considering it before he, in what I regarded as a very doubtful manner, decided it was legislation and not a limitation.

Now, Hinds' Precedents are simply alive with limitations of that character. Limitations have been put on appropriation bills of every known and conceivable kind. The House has availed itself of this method of controlling the money that it spends, and there has grown up a line of legislation of this character which has been very effective and very useful to Members of the House. Oftentimes bills are introduced and go to committees; Members have no way of getting them out, no way, sometimes in the press of business, in the turmoil of the closing hours of a session, of even getting a hearing, but sometimes, when the money is being appropriated for the objects with which the legislation in which the Member is interested deals, an opportunity is presented in a sort of a way to test the temper of the House and to see how far it is willing to go along that particular line. This has happened over and over again in the memory of every man in the House now.

As I say, the books are simply full of precedents and of language of this kind which has been held over and over again to be merely a limitation.

Now, after all, what does this amendment propose to do? It simply says that persons, firms, or corporations lacking certain qualifications shall not be considered when this money is to be spent.

There is no direction to the Secretary of the Navy telling him to go to some person, firm, or corporation having certain qualifications; no attempt to control his discretion in any way affirmatively; it simply says what we have said a hundred times upon a hundred other propositions, namely, that this money shall not be spent with any person, firm, or corporation lacking certain qualifications. And in this case we say this money shall not be spent with a corporation, a firm, or person who has not established an eight-hour day at his yard for the purpose of doing this work. There is no attempt to control him any further than that. It is for these reasons, and in the belief that this is a limitation, that it is not legislation, and in the hope that I can prevent this House from taking the stand that they will be liberal in the matter of limitations, so far as the countless subjects with which this House deals is concerned, but shall only narrow their consideration when it comes to dealing with the laboring men of this country who have been denied that which the statute law of this country has been supposed to give them—it is in the hope that I may be able to prevent that that I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. I was in the chair when the ruling was made last year on which the present occupant of the chair relies. I think no one will charge the occupant of the chair at that time with having ruled unfairly upon the proposition submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] relating to eight-hour labor, because the parts of the proposition which he presented which were in order were held to be in order. What is the proposition now? It is so plain that the gentleman from New Jersey himself, when he gets away from the prejudices of the moment, will admit that the ruling last year and the present ruling are correct.

What is the proposition? Here is a provision for the construction of four submarine torpedo boats. If that appropriation be made in the way proposed, the Secretary of the Navy may invite proposals for the construction of those vessels, but under existing law he has no authority to say that no one can bid that has not eight-hour labor in his yard. He has no authority under the existing law to limit the bidders to those yards only which employ eight-hour labor.

What is the proposition that the gentleman from New Jersey proposes? Under the guise of a limitation he proposes that the Secretary of the Navy can not spend this money unless the bids be limited to those yards which have eight-hour labor.

What is the result? Either that the money can not be expended or that the Secretary of the Navy construes this as a change of existing law; and when he finds this provision is in the law he can not say that Congress has written in the law that which means nothing, that they had given an appropriation and forbade its expenditure, and hence he must hold that the so-called limitation is a change of law. And whereas now he can not confine bidders to those employing eight-hour labor, if this provision goes in, the law has been changed by legislation, so that he must confine the bidders to those employing eight-hour labor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman remembers the amendment which was offered to the sundry civil bill providing that no part of the appropriation should be apportioned to any National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers which maintained a canteen. If the reasoning of the gentleman now is correct, the official who administered that law had reason to withhold the appropriation entirely because of the existence of the canteen at all of these homes, or else to construe it as a change of law which permitted at that time the maintenance of the canteen.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How does the gentleman differentiate between the two?

Mr. MANN. The difference is so plain that the gentleman from New York perfectly appreciates it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not. I have never been able to appreciate the peculiar logic of the gentleman from Illinois since he made that ruling, and I have discussed it with him frequently. Let the gentleman show how the ruling referred to in connection with the canteen in the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers differs in character or effect from the present amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MANN. I do not object to arguing on either of those rulings. The canteen proposition was that you might or might not, under the existing law, maintain a canteen. There was no law requiring the maintenance of a canteen. The Secretary could maintain a canteen or not, as he chose, and when we made the limitation we said he must exercise the discretion he had—not to maintain the canteen if he wished to use the money. But here you change the law. He must construe it as a change of law or else he can not expend the money.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I just want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Secretary of the Navy may or may not have this work done in an eight-hour yard under the law now.

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of the Navy may say that Congress has made an appropriation and in the appropriation has forbade him to expend it; but if he does, he will say that Congress is a dunce, and the Secretary of the Navy has no right to say that of Congress.

Mr. JAMES. Why not? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It may be the fact, but he has no right to say it. He must construe the provision in the law as meaning something, and this means nothing unless it means a change of legislation.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, what is the limit of the debate on this question?

The CHAIRMAN. No limit has been fixed.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I think all the membership of this House agree that the present occupant of the Chair is always just and fair in his rulings; but we are confronted here this afternoon by a situation in which we can not be influenced by any consideration except our own conviction of duty. This bill provides for the construction of four submarine torpedo boats. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] undertakes to limit that construction to persons, firms, or corporations who have recognized the principle of the eight-hour day in their operations. Now, we who believe that that is a proper limitation upon this appropriation bill are restricted to one of two alternatives to be pursued. Either we must vote to sustain the Chair, who has bottomed his opinion upon a precedent established last year, or we must vote to overrule the Chair, and thus afford the House the opportunity to record its own opinion upon the policy of an eight-hour day in the construction of Government ships.

I know there is no man on this side of the House who entertains a more sincere affection for the present occupant of the chair than I do, but I am not to be controlled in my vote here by my esteem for him. I read in the message sent to this Congress by President Taft last December these words as respects the eight-hour day:

> Since 1868 it has been the declared purpose of this Government to favor the movement for an eight-hour day by a provision of law that none of the employees employed by or on behalf of the Government should work longer than eight hours in every 24.

Then he discusses somewhat the provisions of that law and says further:

> Thereafter, in 1892, the present eight-hour law was passed, which provides that the services and employment of all laborers and mechanics who are now, or may hereafter be, employed by the Government of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor on any of the public works of the United States and of the said District of Columbia is hereby restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day. This law has been construed to limit the application of the requirement to those who are directly employed by the Government, or to those who are employed upon public works situate upon land owned by the United States. This construction prevented its application to Government battleships and other vessels built in private shipyards, and to heavy guns and armor plate contracted for and made at private establishments.
> The proposed act provides that no laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by a contract with the United States, in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours a day in any one calendar day.

This message relates to an act which is referred to in it. The President continues:

> It seems to me from the past history that the Government has been committed to a policy of encouraging the limitation of the day's work to eight hours in all works of construction initiated by itself, and it seems to me illogical to maintain a difference between Government work done on Government soil and Government work done in a private establishment, when the work is of such large dimensions and involves the expenditure of much labor for a considerable period, so that the private manufacturer may adjust himself and his establishment to the special terms of employment that he must make with his workmen for this particular job.

Then the President disavows any intention of extending this provision to include small contracts, which would be difficult. He says:

> I recommend that instead of enacting the proposed bill, the meaning of which is not clear and definite and might be given a construction embarrassing to the public interest, the present act be enlarged by providing that public works shall be construed to include not only buildings and work upon public grounds, but also ships, armor, and large guns manufactured in private yards or factories.

There we have the authority of the President of the United States earnestly insisting to this Congress in its legislative capacity that the eight-hour day ought to be recognized and enforced in the construction of battleships in private institutions in this country. The recommendations of the Chief Executive are only in harmony with the universal movement which is advancing everywhere for a reduction of the hours of toil for those who are performing the manual labor of the world. The eight-hour day is a fixed principle in our social economy. Private enterprise has largely adopted it, and it ought to be applied by the Government wherever possible. The departure always has justified itself in its results. The shorter workday secures leisure for culture, for enlightenment, for improvement. It makes for a higher standard of living and for a more intelligent citizenship. It has always been accompanied by an increased measure of contentment and happiness. We can not at this moment establish the principle generally, but we can reassert our allegiance to it by supporting the pending amendment. Therefore, much as I regret to disagree with the parliamentary conclusions of the Chair, because of the persuasive reasons I have suggested, I shall vote without hesitation to overrule its decision in this instance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House to some statements made at another time. I asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] whether he could differentiate the amendment offered limiting the expenditure of money in national homes for disabled soldiers from the amendment now under consideration offered by the gentleman from New Jersey. He said the difference was as clear as day, and that I could see it as well as himself.

The canteen amendment was offered February 23, 1907. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] made a point of order against it. The gentleman from Illinois spoke in support of the point of order and practically made a speech identical with the one which he makes in support of the point of order upon this amendment, and apparently he stated everything possible that could be stated in favor of that point of order, because it has been printed in Hinds' Precedents, so that the House might see the reasons urged in support of the point of order and the action taken by the Chair. This is what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said in the course of the debate:

> Here is a situation now proposed where Congress by law is creating soldiers' homes. It has by law provided for the government of soldiers' homes. At soldiers' homes it has vested the government in a board of managers in accordance with the provisions of the statute. It is true that Congress can refuse to appropriate, but, Mr. Chairman, it is also true that the Chair has frequently ruled that Congress can not, against a point of order, by limitation change the organic law. Here is a provision that, although Congress has created these soldiers' homes by an organic law, although it has provided for the government of the soldiers' homes by a board of managers, a proposition through the form of a limitation to take away the control of the board of managers and by affirmative legislation in the guise of a limitation to change the statute upon that subject. While limitations are usually favored by the Chair, properly, still it is true that the Chair might well rule, it seems to me, that a limitation in this guise, changing the law, giving the board of managers the discretion over the management of the homes, is positive, affirmative legislation, as it undoubtedly would be construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and therefore subject to a point of order. It is perfectly manifest that an item of this kind in the bill is construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury as positive legislation, although it be in the form of a limitation.

Now, the amendment under consideration at that time was as follows:

> Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any National Home for Disabled Volunteers that contains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold.

Without quoting the opinion of the Chair at that time—but I will do so, if the gentleman from Illinois thinks I have done him an injustice——

Mr. MANN. No; I think the gentleman has added materially to the value of his speech by quoting thus far.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Chair overruled the point of order. I call the attention of the Chair to another decision.

A provision in the District appropriation bill was under consideration for the repair of the Anacostia Bridge under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $100,000, and authorized the commissioners to enter into a contract or contracts for the repair of the bridge.

With this proviso:

That before any part of this sum shall be used, the Anacostia & Potomac River Railroad Co. shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia the entire cost of the pavement lying between the exterior rails of the tracks and for a distance of 2 feet from the said exterior rails of said tracks on each side thereof and the entire floor system supporting said pavement, and said collector shall deposit one-half of same in the United States Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia and one-half to the credit of the United States, nor shall said appropriation be available until said railroad company shall agree to assume one-half the cost of maintenance and repair of said new bridge, to be collected in the same manner as the cost of laying pavements between the rails and tracks of street railways, as provided for in section 5 of "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," approved June 11, 1878: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be available until the Anacostia & Potomac River Railroad Co. shall agree that any other railroad company now or hereafter authorized by Congress to use said bridge shall have the right to use the tracks of the Anacostia & Potomac River Railroad Co. thereon upon such reciprocal trackage and such compensation as may be mutually agreed upon, and in case of failure to reach such an agreement that the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall, upon petition filed by either party, fix and determine the same.

The point of order was made on the proviso, and the Chair, in delivering his opinion, said:

The amendment provides that the appropriation shall be withheld unless certain conditions are complied with. All the provisos are distinct limitations upon this appropriation. The Chair will overrule the point of order.

It seems to me, in view of the long line of decisions about which there never has been any controversy, that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey clearly comes within the rule. I recall the time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was in the chair in the last session and made the ruling cited by the Chair. It was after a day of very strenuous debate and discussion that the amendment was offered and the decision was made hurriedly and without any discussion. I have never yet agreed that the gentleman from Illinois did not at that time make a mistake, because I am convinced if he had examined the precedents at the time he would not have ruled in the way in which he did.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman from New York tell us what distinction has been made in conversation with the gentleman from Illinois between those two precedents which the gentleman has just cited?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will be very frank. I have discussed the ruling with the gentleman from Illinois on several occasions, and he has made the statement that he made to-day on the floor that there was a clear distinction between the two propositions.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have never been able to see the distinction. The gentleman from Illinois and myself have never been able to reconcile our views on that question, and it seems to me——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no recollection of ever having discussed this with the gentleman, and I do not think it is a very safe thing to undertake to narrate private conversations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not said anything to the discredit of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing anything that the gentleman has said.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not do so. I simply made this statement, that I had discussed this ruling with the gentleman on several occasions, and I have advanced my theories and he has with consistency and a good deal of power argued that the position that he took at that time was correct. He may not recall the discussions——

Mr. MANN. I would not question what the gentleman said.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not said anything in any way to impugn his action in making the ruling, or to indicate that he has ruled in any manner that he did not believe to be correct. Indeed, I believe that he ruled conscientiously and as he believed to be the proper ruling. I have simply stated that I have never been able to see the distinction which the gentleman from Illinois claims to exist. It seems to me that the rulings have been uniformly one way and that we have the power under the rules to withhold expenditures of money to persons or corporations, unless they comply with certain conditions, or unless certain conditions exist surrounding them at the time the money is to be paid.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the precedent made to-day by the present occupant of the chair which, it seems to me, is directly in point. When the appropriation of $500,000 to purchase coal for the Navy was proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] by an amendment which forbade the Secretary of the Navy from carrying coal for that purpose from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast, the point of order was made against that amendment, and after a careful consideration the present distinguished occupant of the chair overruled the point of order. I submit to the Chair that there is no possible distinction in principle between that parliamentary question and the one which is now before the committee. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs called attention to another precedent a few moments ago in regard to colliers, when a limitation was placed by way of amendment regarding one of the colliers for which appropriations were made last year, to be constructed in the Mare Island Navy Yard in California.

That was a limitation upon the so-called discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, exactly similar to the limitation which is proposed here. Also the limitation was adopted by the House at the last session of Congress in regard to battleships, requiring that one of the battleships should be constructed in a Government navy yard, and is a precedent which is directly applicable in principle to the one which is now before the committee.

Now, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the proposition upon which this point of order is made and urged is that it limits the authority of the Secretary of the Navy.

Now, I submit to the committee that the Secretary of the Navy has no authority to limit in regard to the construction of these torpedo boats, except such authority as is given to him in this bill. If the situation were such that under the general law the Secretary of the Navy had authority to construct a certain number of battleships each year, a certain number of torpedo boats each year, and it was entirely in his discretion as to the terms upon which he should secure their construction, then there would be some logic in the statement that this limitation would be on the authority of the Secretary of the Navy. But he has no such power, no authority to construct any one of these torpedo boats, unless it is given to him by this act.

Now, I submit that when the House is creating this authority and is conferring it upon some official of the Government, it is within the power of Congress not only to limit the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy but to refuse to give him any discretion in the matter. The Congress, if it sees fit, could put the supervision of the construction of these torpedo boats in the hands of a commission entirely separate and distinct from the Secretary of the Navy, like putting it in the hands of a board of admirals or putting it in the hands of a special commission created for that purpose. That would be, according to the argument that is made against this amendment, a limitation upon the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. Yet I apprehend no one would dispute when Congress is appropriating money, as this section is appropriating money, to construct torpedo boats, that Congress has the power to specify under whose direction and whose authority they shall be constructed. So I say the Secretary has no discretion, and not having any discretion it can not be limited. When an appropriation is made it is perfectly germane and proper and not unfair to say how many torpedo boats shall be constructed, at what price they shall be constructed, in what navy yard they shall be constructed, and under what conditions the work shall be pursued in those navy yards.

Now, a precedent is presented here that was made last year. I apprehend that when the question was before the House that the House was actuated, in part at least, in its ruling upon the point of order, by its opinion on the merits of the question. It is always so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair wishes to state that the Chair has no pride of opinion about this matter, and does not care to take part in the discussion further than to say that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is mistaken when he says that the ruling of the Chair in the early part of the afternoon in reference to the coal proposition was similar to this. That limitation was purely negative in its character. The present proposition is an affirmative direction to executive officers.

The gentleman is mistaken further in suggesting that the ruling last year with reference to building colliers or battleships in navy yards presents this precise question. Those amendments were offered to a very different sort of a paragraph, and they are not precedents at all on this particular question.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] is recognized.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] moves that all debate be now closed on the point of order.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. Foss and Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 96, noes 111.

So the decision of the Chair was overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy may build any or all of the vessels authorized in this act in such navy yards as he may designate, and shall build any of the vessels herein authorized in such navy yards as he may designate, should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels, have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding, the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. My point of order is that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:

"And the contract for the construction of such vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest and best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and the most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all said vessels the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the Naval Establishment,' as to the materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same; the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the methods of executing such contracts shall be observed and followed and subject to the provisions of this act; all said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, and in all their parts shall be of domestic manufacture; and the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy, provided contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties."

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, against the amendment that it is legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman allow me to explain what it is? This is offered in good faith.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. By the act of August 3, 1886, the first two vessels of the new Navy were authorized. That act contained the only law upon the question of the control of the Secretary of the Navy in the letting of contracts for naval vessels. It requires certain provisions for plans and specifications and provisions for the materials and the character of materials and the limitations upon the power of the Secretary of the Navy to make the contracts for the vessels. Ever since 1886 the provision which I submit as an amendment has been carried in every appropriation bill whenever a new ship has been authorized. At the time this act of 1886 was prepared with the utmost care, in order that there might be adopted fitting regulations to control the action of the Secretary of the Navy in the letting of the contracts. If this amendment be not adopted there is nothing to control the action of the Secretary.

The act of 1886 contained a paragraph requiring certain of the vessels to be built in navy yards. This amendment does not contain that provision. It follows the act of 1886 only in so far as it applies to the materials to be used in the construction of the vessel and the other requirements heretofore deemed imperative. Without this provision the Secretary of the Navy, if he invites bids for armor and armor plate, or for the construction of these vessels, has no authority to reject bids which may be submitted by foreign bidders. The act of 1886 is the only one which has ever limited the power of the Secretary of the Navy to domestic materials or materials of domestic manufacture. It seems to me that, in the absence of other provisions or regulations, this bill should carry the provision which has been carried since 1886 regulating the making of the contracts for materials to enter into these ships.

No explanation has been given by the Naval Committee for its failure to incorporate this provision or for its failure to insert some other provision in the place of it. It seems to me the committee should have these facts, so that they may act intelligently upon them.

The provision is clearly subject to the point of order, but because of the peculiar condition affecting the naval appropriation bill and the necessity for some legislation with each batch of ships authorized the point of order has never been made against this provision in the 25 years in which it has been carried in the naval appropriation act.

Mr. KENDALL. It is difficult for us here to gather the full significance of the amendment, but I want to inquire of the gentleman if it is substantially the provision that appeared in the bill last year, on page 26 of that bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not the same as appeared in the bill of last year. It is the same as appeared in the bill every year up to last year.

Mr. KENDALL. I mean the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offered the amendment without the provision that I thought, perhaps, might be held to be an obnoxious one.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SULZER. To be inserted as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:

"The Secretary of the Navy shall build one of the first-class battleships authorized in this act in such navy yard as he may designate, and may build any of the vessels herein authorized in such navy yards as he shall designate, should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding, the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels."

Mr. FOSS. I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SULZER. Just a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois reserve the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, of course I realize that this new paragraph offered by me is subject to a point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not hear the gentleman further, then. The point of order is made, and the merits can not be discussed.

Mr. SULZER. But I want to say that, in my judgment, if this is allowed to go into the bill it will materially help the gentleman to pass the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph:

"That no battleship shall hereafter be constructed in any navy yard until at least two navy yards are fully equipped to enter upon and complete such construction."

Mr. SULZER. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. FOSS. I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I say a word on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore and herein authorized, $13,531,785.79: Provided, That no part of the above appropriation shall be used for the payment of the construction of any collier the total cost of which shall exceed $1,000,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make that motion simply to reply to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] and other gentlemen who have deprecated the idea that there may be a war. Admiral Hobson predicts war. My friend from Missouri and others belittle the prediction. Let them beware. Admiral Noah some years ago made a prediction in reference to certain things, and I want to call the attention of the House to some lines in reference to that prediction:

"Dar's gwine to be a'oberflow," said Noah, lookin' solemn—
Fur Noah tuk the Herald, an' he read de ribber column;
An' so he sot his hands to wuk a-cl'arin' timber patches,
An' 'lowed he's gwine to build a boat to beat the steamah Natchez.
Ol' Noah kep' a-nailin' an' a-chippin' an' a-sawin',
An' all de wicked neighbors kep' a-laughin' an' a-pshawin';
But Noah didn't min' 'em, knowin' whut wuz gwine to happen,
An' 40 days an' 40 nights de rain it kep' a-drappin'.

[Laughter.]

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 61, line 7, by striking out all after the word "which" and add the following: "exclusive of indirect labor, shall exceed $1,000,000."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the amendment I have just offered will state that it does not increase the million-dollar limitation but adds to the proviso the words "exclusive of indirect labor," so that, as amended, it reads:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be used for the payment of the construction of any collier the total cost of which, exclusive of indirect labor, shall exceed $1,000,000.

In connection with this amendment I want to call the attention of the House to certain facts relating to the collier which Congress authorized to be built at the Mare Island Navy Yard. These facts are important to the House and should be fully and frankly stated. The naval appropriation bill of 1908 provided for the construction of two fleet colliers with a speed of 14 knots and with a carrying capacity of 12,500 tons of cargo and bunker coal, and the limit of cost on each was $1,800,000. In other words, when it was thought that these colliers were to be constructed in private yards the limit of cost on each was fixed at $1,800,000. No voice was raised on this floor in protest against the cost; no member of the Naval Committee was heard in opposition to the price of $1,800,000 for each of these colliers. But an amendment was offered on the floor of the House providing that one of these colliers should be constructed in a navy yard on the Pacific coast. The Secretary of the Navy refused to carry out the will of Congress. Immediately after Congress adjourned the private ship firms evidently got together and submitted bids, and the lowest was $822,500. These bids were nearly all alike, and while I do not charge that there was collusion between the bidders the fact remains that the bids were practically identical, and I have them on my desk at the present moment. In view of the low private bids the Secretary of the Navy did not begin at Mare Island Navy Yard the construction of the collier authorized. One of the colliers was let to a private firm. It was evidently taken at a loss and the loss shared by others.

Bear this fact in mind, that prior to this contract the price fixed for colliers to be constructed at private yards was $1,800,000 apiece. In the naval appropriation bill the next year an amendment was inserted providing that the Secretary of the Navy could take the collier from the navy yard and give it to a private shipbuilding firm. I made a point of order against that paragraph and it went out. Then what do we find? The next limitation placed in the bill for colliers was $900,000. Private contractors, after they thought they had deprived the navy yard of the work, raised their bids. The next year it was increased to $1,000,000, and this year the limitation is again $1,000,000. The Navy Department received but a single bid from private contractors last year for these colliers, and that bid was for $1,596,500, $128,900 more than the price at which the collier can be constructed at the Mare Island Navy Yard. I have before me a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in which he states that to build a collier at the Mare Island Navy Yard will cost a little over $1,400,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that he may be permitted to continue for three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy he states that of the $800,000 charged for labor, 50 per cent of that is for indirect labor, that is, labor expenses that would go on just the same, regardless of whether the collier was constructed at the Mare Island Navy Yard or not, and eliminating that 50 per cent for indirect labor it would bring the price of the collier down to practically $1,000,000. My amendment provides that in estimating these charges that indirect labor shall not be charged against the collier.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this amendment, it provides that there shall be no indirect charge made against this collier in the course of its construction. That is to say, the light, heat, and power plants of the navy yard may be used for the construction of this collier without one penny being charged up against the collier. That was true of the old system of organization in the navy yards, and the estimate which the navy yard made some years ago for building this collier was $1,400,000, and that excluded all indirect charges of every kind. Now, the gentleman proposes in this amendment to exclude those indirect charges. I do not see how he can build his collier for $1,000,000, even though the indirect charges be excluded.

Mr. KNOWLAND. According to the Secretary's letter and the estimate, it could be done.

Mr. FOSS. I doubt very much whether it can be done.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have the blueprint estimate here.

Mr. FOSS. In any event it seems to me proper, if we are ever going to get these navy yards upon a basis where we can compare Government work with work outside in commercial concerns, that we should not adopt this amendment which provides that indirect charges, which are properly charged against the work constructed in the navy yards, shall not be charged against this, and that is all that means. It simply means to upset any method of cost accounting in our navy yards to-day.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. The effect of it is to increase the limit of cost from $1,000,000 as provided to $1,400,000 for all these colliers, and there being five of them that means $2,000,000 increase.

Mr. KNOWLAND. But only one is to be constructed in the navy yard.

Mr. FOSS. When the gentleman says that this labor will be employed there if we did not construct the collier, that is not true, and when the gentleman goes further, as gentlemen sometimes do, and says that we have the labor there and we can just as well build the battleship and therefore we ought to employ that labor, that is not true. Whenever we build a collier we add a large number of laborers to the yards, and whenever we build a battleship we add a larger number to the employed force of the yard, and these indirect charges would be a great deal less if we did not build this collier, and the maintenance of the yard would be a great deal less if we did not build the collier or a battleship.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If we continue the navy yards and construct battleships and colliers, it may be true that we would hire some additional help occasionally when the ship was under construction; but is it not nevertheless true that we would constantly retain in the navy yard the great body of skilled mechanics? Is not that the only way the Government can maintain in its employ skilled mechanics in the navy yards to do some of this construction?

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say to the gentleman at that point that it developed in the hearings that it necessitated the keeping of these high-skilled mechanics all of the time to do job work that in private yards was given to unskilled labor and cheap labor, and the cost of the navy yard was thereby increased 58 per cent over outside contract work.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have no doubt that the illustration given by the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] furnishes the most potent argument for building some of these vessels in the navy yards that can possibly be given. He said there never was a less sum suggested than about a million seven or eight hundred thousand dollars for a collier, and then the Secretary of the Navy asked that they be built by private contract.

And then he says a lot of private contractors submitted substantially the same bid. He did not want to charge collusion, but it is most remarkable that they should have run down the price several hundred thousand dollars and put in substantially the same bid.

Mr. FOSS. That was on a different basis. That was on the basis of the eight-hour provision which was put in the bill last year——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FOSS (continuing). Which had been built by the Maryland Steel Co. and by Cramps, and were less than $800,000. Those were built without any restriction whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FOSS. I would like a couple of minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be recognized for two minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. All that this does is simply to add to the cost of this collier. If you took out the indirect charges you would simply add to the cost of it. The collier will cost just as much. We insist that when we are spending so much money here upon the Navy that we should appropriate it in a way where every dollar will go the furthest, and if gentlemen insist upon building ships in the navy yards it means in the case of a collier 50 per cent more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there any navy yard in this country, save one, equipped to build a battleship?

Mr. FOSS. Only one, and that is New York.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The only one in which this work must concentrate.

Mr. FOSS. Now, it is not necessary for us to build ships to keep the working force in our yards. We have enough work from the repairs of ships to keep up the working force in the yards, and when you build a ship in a navy yard and draw hundreds of men into that yard to build that ship, and when you are through the ship they go out, because we do not need them, you are doing an injustice, by building ships in a navy yard, to the laboring people of the country, unless you propose to continue the policy of building ships right along in the navy yards of the country. The repairs upon our ships are sufficient to keep our laboring men employed in all these yards, and it is not necessary to build even a little ship, a gunboat, or torpedo boat in order to do it.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment ought to be clearly understood. If the amendment is defeated, the collier is taken away from Mare Island, where a certain amount of expense has already been incurred. If the amendment prevails, Mare Island will try to build the collier at what will be a very reduced price for a navy yard.

I believe that the amendment ought to prevail. For the Mare Island Navy Yard a collier is as large a piece of work as the battleship is for the navy yard at New York. I am strongly in favor of maintaining our navy yards on a substantial basis, where they could meet the requirements of expansion when war comes. If we simply carry them on on the basis of repairs in time of peace, neither the equipment nor the personnel will be prepared or trained to meet the expanded requirements for ships damaged in time of war. Of course, the question of the cost should be taken into careful account. Mare Island ought not to be allowed to build a collier at $1,800,000, but I do believe that at this juncture, when the question of overhead charges is not settled, when the question of cost accounting is still in the air and unfixed, that we ought not to permit the heavy overhead charges to be put on this particular collier and cut out the building of it at Mare Island.

The Navy Department, I am informed by the gentleman from California, approves the proposition. Leaving off the overhead charges will simply be following the custom that has prevailed heretofore. It is but a fair and reasonable proposition. It is to be regretted that this collier has been held up all these years. Mare Island ought to be allowed to go on and build it. From time to time we ought to authorize the navy yard at Norfolk, the one at Mare Island, and all the navy yards that are to be given serious work in time of war to build a collier or other auxiliary, provided they can do it within a reasonable increase of cost.

The chairman of the Naval Committee has been maintaining that the cost of work in navy yards is greater than in private yards, and so it is. He ought not, therefore, to find objection when they are willing to try to build it at Mare Island with only the difference of the overhead charges.

The adoption of this amendment will fulfill the requirements of economy and promote the general efficiency of the navy yard at Mare Island, and is in line with sound policy for the Navy. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Foss) there were—ayes 79, noes 37.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 8, page 61, insert the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any boat by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of the commencement and during the construction of said vessels established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged, or to be engaged, in the construction of the vessels named herein."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the amendment which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has sent up has already been agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. It is in the next paragraph.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I want that to go in after line 5, after the word "cents," on page 61.

Mr. FOSS. We have passed that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] now offers his amendment in line 5 instead of line 8. It is the same amendment?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. It is the same amendment with an addition, which makes it structurally the same as the last amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this in lieu of the first amendment or in addition to it?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. It is in addition to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read the amendment, modified, as follows:

After the word "cents," in line 5, page 61, insert the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any boat by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of the commencement and during the construction of said vessels established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged, or to be engaged, in the construction of the vessels named herein.
"Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to payments to be made under contracts made prior to the approval of this act."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that. It is a change of law.

The CHAIRMAN. This seems to be to the Chair very similar to the amendment that the House has just voted on, to which a point of order was made and upon which the decision of the Chair was overruled; and in accordance with that decision of the House, the Chair overrules the point of order against this amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] has kept me so perturbed and nervous with his annual direful prognostications of invasion and destruction by Japan that I have been unable to compose my mind and feelings sufficiently to prepare a speech on this bill. It is my opinion, however, entertained constantly during the 11 months each year when he does not try to keep us scared to death, that Japan can not whip the United States, that she knows she can not, and that she will never try. If that island empire should ever be misled by the hysterical statements of the gentleman from Alabama into making war upon us under the delusion that she stood any chance of success, it would be hard on the gentleman from Alabama, after we had thrashed her to a finish. Her frazzled and dismembered remains would reproach the gentleman from Alabama all his days for deceiving and deluding her into the belief that she could stand any show in a war against us. It is generally recognized by everybody except the gentleman from Alabama that when the Southern Confederacy, after having put up the most stubborn war the world ever saw, with more actual fighting than the world had seen in a thousand years or will see in the next thousand years, had failed to vanquish the United States, there was no use for any other nation to try conclusions with her. That contest, unexampled in history, leaving the United States the victor, also established her as preeminent and invincible among all the nations, and all the nations know it.

No nation will levy war against her unless driven into it by our own misconduct and unfair treatment, and then only in the last resort. We ought to follow the advice of our forefathers—behave ourselves, treat other nations fairly, cultivate peace and commerce with all countries, not failing to devote all periods of peace and prosperity to developing greater strength and prestige, which we can easily and rapidly mobilize and utilize when necessity arises. I shall not consent to the demands of the gentleman from Alabama as to the rapid increase of our Navy. If I believed what he claims, I would admit that we need 300 battleships instead of 3, but if devastating war is to come in nine months we could not possibly finish any of them in time for our defense, for the keels of three will hardly be laid in nine months. If red-handed war does come, we will have to trust under Providence in our devices, ingenuity, courage, and patriotism, which have never yet failed and which will put to ruin any nation which dares arouse us to resentment. The ancient tale of Archimedes sustaining the prolonged defense of Syracuse against the Roman legions for so long a time is not more wonderful than the genius and inventive and creative power displayed by the Americans on both sides during the Civil War, which presented instances and spectacles not only of invention and development, but also of skill, daring, generalship, and statesmanship unequaled in the annals of history and not likely to be surpassed until time shall be no more.

I am opposed to building battleships fast enough to take the entire output of the Steel Trust. I would rather leave some margin for competition to play on in the hope of some slight reduction in cost. In fact, I religiously believe that the Steel Trust is a much more powerful and a much more dangerous enemy to the American people than is Japan.

Reverting again to my suggestion about trade and friendship with all mankind, I am reminded that of late a great deal has been said here and elsewhere, wise and otherwise, about a tariff commission and a reciprocity treaty with Canada. As the subjects are kindred and the latitude of general debate liberal, I wish to submit a few observations about them.

I voted against the tariff commission. The Republican Party for 50 years has robbed the people of the United States, set a bad example to the balance of the world, and restricted the general circulation of trade currents by what they call the protective tariff. The terms of the treaty with Panama permitting the Government to bring in free of duty materials for construction afforded an object lesson of the difference in cost to the consumer made by the duty upon imports. The Democrats had argued the facts to the people ever since the Republicans had come into power, but the people of the Middle West and the North and East were deluded by the contention that Democratic sources were not reliable, and they had continued to believe and support the Republican Party, but the Panama object lesson could not be disregarded.

It opened their eyes. It was unfolded by a Republican President and Secretary of War. Its effects upon the debates pending the Payne-Aldrich-Smoot tariff bill were far-reaching. When the truth was told by Dolliver and CUMMINS and LA FOLLETTE and many other lifelong Republicans it was accepted by long-time Republican communities, the revolution of 1910 followed, the Republican Party was discredited and overturned. That party had never admitted any lack of information on the tariff question. They had professed omniscience, and had passed protective bill after protective bill, never seeking any information except to call in the representatives of the favored interests to state on so-called hearings whether they had sufficient protection, and whether any changes in their business or new inventions or devices demanded protection. After their defeat, however, when the people had instructed Congress, by unmistakable orders, to revise the tariff downward the standpatters, who had never before desired a tariff commission, at once concluded to prolong their control of the subject, if possible, by securing during the life of the present Republican Congress a Republican tariff board which would project their doctrines into future legislation. That was contrary to the wishes of the people, a palpable effort to defeat the results of the election; in my judgment an insult to the intelligence of the American people. Having been conceived for that purpose, of course it was so planned as to suggest nothing but information to support a protective tariff. No provision nor word in it looks to securing information bearing upon the only kind of a tariff which Congress has the right to levy.

The people have now instructed Congress to revise the tariff downward in the direction of a tariff for revenue only—the only one countenanced and recognized by the Constitution. I believe the Democrats are now prepared to frame legislation on that line. If they needed information, the inquiries should be only two, neither of which is in the act providing for a tariff commission, to wit:

First. What is the best or approximately best revenue-raising rate on any article of import?

Second. Will the expenditures of the Government render it necessary to impose on each item the full rate that would raise the most revenue?

The inquiry in making a Democratic constitutional tariff for revenue is limited in range from that rate which would raise the most revenue down to nothing. The doctrine of the Democrats is the constitutional doctrine, that any rate above the best revenue-raising rate would curtail imports while reducing the revenue, lessen competition, increase domestic prices, and enable domestic manufacturers and producers to rob their neighbors. The doctrine is plain that within the range defined we should begin by taxing luxuries at the highest rate imposed, making the rates lower for necessaries, and if the state of the revenues will permit remit the tax entirely and place upon the free list articles of general use and prime necessity. Having made provision to collect sufficient revenue from articles of luxury and other articles not of such general use and prime necessity, the Treasury could spare the revenue on the last-named articles. For the reason just stated, I am proud to say that I voted against the creation of a tariff board, and I hope it will yet be defeated. There is no danger of that defeat verifying the bluff and bugaboo of an extra session, for an extra session of the next Congress would certainly not consent to that sort of a tariff board.

The other matter, Canadian reciprocity, I did vote for, not because it was ideal, nor what Democrats would have drafted. It was a Republican trick, worked up by a Republican President, I confess, in the hope of forestalling and discounting Democratic action by the next Congress and with the hope of claiming for the dying Republican Party some credit for effort in a direction which this country has long desired to travel. In my judgment, our relations with Canada ought to be considered on a different basis and entirely apart from general tariff legislation. Canada is our neighbor, as compactly associated and joined with us geographically as the States are joined one to another. Our States and Territories, enjoying free intercourse and liberal trade relations, have developed the prosperity, education, and happiness of our people beyond all the balance of the world, giving us more educated citizens than any other country ever had, making us the richest country the world ever saw, and making our domestic trade many times greater than the commerce of all the balance of the world, and all this in spite of the wall of protection erected all around us to exclude the balance of the world from competition and enabling favored classes to ravage the fields and levy tribute on the earnings of the masses. The extension of those conditions to embrace Canada would enlarge our sphere of trade and usefulness, to the mutual benefit of both countries, and in time cultivate, cement, and perfect indissoluble friendship between the two countries. It is not necessary to have annexation.

We need not have both countries under the same government. That is simply a theory and a dream, cultivated by some and dreaded by others. It ought not to have any effect on the question. It is not necessary for so many people and such large stretches of territory to enjoy one single government. It is hoped that government is improving throughout the world and that some glad day many good countries throughout the earth will enjoy good government in separate and independent autonomy. We should have a treaty arrangement with Canada by which a common system of tariff rates applicable to the balance of the world should be adopted by both countries, and then remove all duties on products of either country entering the other. The exceptional situation of the two countries would justify that and remove all difficulty about the favored-nation doctrine. There is some similarity in the condition of the countries to the south of us as related to the United States, but not in all particulars, and they may not yet be ripe for the consummation of such a relationship. But there is a way to treat them so fairly in our tariff laws as to invite their trade and friendship and bring them gradually to a relationship more or less like that existing between us and Canada.

The treaty recently adopted by the House was drawn by protectionists and intended to benefit the protected interests of this country, which, true to their doctrine, want to buy cheaply what they need and sell under high protection what they produce. The free trade provided for in that bill is in accordance with the free-trade device of the protectionist, who always uses the free list to help build up protection. The same remark is true about reciprocity. Reciprocity in its general signification means mutual fair treatment, but reciprocity in the technical sense held by the protectionist means that reservation of mind and law which permits a variation to be made wherever lowering particular duties on particular articles from particular countries will inure to the benefit of the protected industries in this country. Neither of these statements can be denied. Every instance in which protective tariff legislation has resorted to or provided for either reciprocity or a free list proves the truth of these statements. But I voted for that treaty because it was a step in the direction of an understanding with Canada, and can be improved by subsequent negotiations and legislation. I also voted for it because the Republican Party has for 40 years deceived the farmers of the country, falsely pretending to be their friends and insisting that they were benefited by protection. When the President submitted that treaty to Congress he either admitted the sham and falsity of that pretense or ruthlessly betrayed the interest of the farmer by negotiating away the only protective duties that it was ever pretended operated in favor of the farmer.

The fact that all the high priests of protection so bitterly fought that treaty was also a pretty good argument in its favor. If it had not possessed some good they would not have fought it so bitterly. In their dying throes they pretended to desire to place, by amendment, on the free list articles which they themselves had protected in the last and all tariff bills, knowing that if amended the treaty could not become a law at this session. They could at any time have introduced bills putting all those articles on the free list and secured every Democratic vote in this House. Their trick was too transparent to deceive the people. Whether the reciprocity treaty will finally be adopted or not I do not know, but the bluff of the President that he will call an extra session of Congress unless it is done is too silly to fool anybody. We Democrats were willing to vote for that treaty at this session, because it came up at this session. We did not feel called upon to press it nor champion it, but it was the best we could do at this session—to take advantage of the opportunity to make a starter by voting for that—but the President certainly has intelligence enough to know that a Democratic House would not fritter away time trifling with that production. When the Sixty-second Congress meets it will be prepared to go ahead on proper lines, and if during the next two years it can not induce a Republican President to negotiate a better and more desirable treaty with Canada we can at least proceed to reduce the tariff duties on products coming in from Canada, and no man need doubt that Canada would sooner or later reciprocate most heartily in response to such friendly legislation.

There is one observation, however, that I feel constrained to make. Neither our press nor our statesmen have called the attention of the public to the fact that the Democrats have not yet secured full control of the Government. The Republicans will have the Senate and the President for two more years. The people should not be led to expect immediate and full relief. Yet the subject has been discussed as though we were expected to repeal at once all the iniquitous legislation of the Republican Party, and restore the people to the paths of peace, equality, and prosperity. That will be impossible. The Democratic House of Representatives may pass an ideal revenue tariff bill, but it would be defeated or mutilated in the other House, and if it passed in any form and contained any good at all, a Republican President would be liable to veto it. Of course, it would operate to our political advantage in the next campaign by showing that we did our part but were blocked and our purposes defeated by Republicans elsewhere. It may be possible to accomplish some practical good in one way only. There are two bands of Republicans in the other body, who, while all professing to believe in the iniquity of protection, yet differ in detail as the interest of themselves and their sections seem to differ.

If we can discover what articles of consumption among the people can command for a reduction of duties on them the support of a sufficient number of Republicans in the other House to afford sufficient help to enable the Democrats to pass those bills we could draw and pass in this House bills for that purpose, and we might pass some which the President would approve, but we would as well look the truth in the face and let the people know it now, that our only hope of securing any relief by tariff legislation in the Sixty-second Congress is to find patriots enough in the other House professing allegiance to the Republican Party to help the Democrats there pass such measures of relief as may go through the House with the further condition that the President signs the bills.

In closing, I wish to call attention to the figures given to the House a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], showing that our Government is now buying steel plate cheaper than any other government. If those figures prove anything, it is that the Steel Trust needs no further protection. The day will come with greater enlightenment and greater distance in point of time from the passions and prejudices of the cruel war, which alone enabled the Republican Party to foist the protective system on us, when all our people will denounce the protective system as unnecessary and dishonest, and all will recognize that the incidental protection afforded to domestic industries by a tariff for revenue only affords as much advantage over his neighbor as any honest man could ask.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized to discuss the proposition.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition similar to the one advanced on the last paragraph. This is intended to apply the provisions of the eight-hour law to the work appropriated for in this paragraph. It proposes to do what everybody supposed the eight-hour law of 1892 would compel to be done. It is the same proposition to which this House agreed last year, and the same proposition to which this House has agreed every time it has had an opportunity since I have been here and at many times before I had the good fortune to arrive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

At the end of the paragraph strike out the period and insert a semicolon—that is, in the paragraph just finished—that is, after the word "dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment:

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 61, line 8, after the word "dollars," strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and then insert the following:

"And the limit of cost, exclusive of armor and armament, of the battleship authorized and directed by the naval appropriation act, approved June 24, 1910, to be constructed in one of the navy yards, is hereby increased to $6,310,000, on the basis of the actual cost of labor and materials."

Mr. PADGETT. I make a point of order against that. It is legislation, and changes the provision in the bill of last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a point of order against the amendment, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of the Navy; torpedo boats: On account of submarine torpedo boats and subsurface destroyers, heretofore authorized, $890,833.88.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the unexpended balance of the sum of $445,000 appropriated on account of torpedo boats whose vitals are located below the normal load water line by the naval appropriation act approved June 24, 1910, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the construction of five torpedo boats of said type, about 65 feet in length, to have a speed exceeding 24 knots, for which the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to contract in the usual way.

Mr. ROBERTS. A point of order against that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. A point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOBSON. The Chairman will notice that this is merely a question of reappropriation.

Mr. ROBERTS. It is purely legislation.

Mr. HOBSON. It is a reappropriation of an appropriation already made under existing law. The subsurface boats have been authorized, and last year Congress in the appropriation bill authorized a reappropriation of the money in order to permit the utilization of the money for vessels which will have improvements. This amendment makes the same money, already appropriated, available to improve the type still further, and this is merely a reappropriation of the same amount, to run through the coming year, permitting an additional improvement of type. So that it is not a question of new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. I do not wish to discuss this at length. I believe we are prepared to vote on it.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes appear to have it, that the ayes have it, and that the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Division, Mr. Chairman, division.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. A division was demanded on that last vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear any gentleman call for a division.

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman from Tennessee was on his feet demanding recognition.

Mr. HOBSON. I insist that it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Was any gentleman on his feet demanding recognition?

Mr. PADGETT. I was not only on my feet, but I was shouting as loudly as I could.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee rose to his feet to demand a division, the Chair will have a division taken. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], on which a division is called for.

Mr. HOBSON. It is the same amount that we appropriated before.

Mr. ROBERTS. A point of order. It is not in order to debate while a vote is being taken.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 70.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "cents," in line 12, page 61, strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any boat by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of the commencement and during the construction of said vessels established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged in doing the work for which this appropriation is made: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to payments to be made upon contracts made prior to the approval of this act."

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. If the Chair will pardon me, this is entirely different. The paragraph that this relates to is for vessels heretofore authorized, not herein authorized. It is a violation of the contracts already made and clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It excludes contracts already made.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then it has no relation to the paragraph under the language of the paragraph.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Well, it can not do any hurt.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then it is not germane.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it depends upon whether contracts have been made for these vessels.

Mr. MANN. And then the contracts might be broken and new contracts made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; some of these shipbuilding firms may bust up on these contracts, as they have in the past when they have not been sufficiently remunerated.

The CHAIRMAN. The simple authorization has no reference whatever to contract, and the Chair, in view of the recent decision by the committee on a similar question, overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago an amendment was adopted prohibiting the transportation of coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, a very wise provision. There is now on the Union Calendar a bill (H. R. 32080) providing for the leasing of coal lands in Alaska, which, if it becomes a law, will, it is hoped and believed, provide for the early opening of mines in Alaska and the production of a very high grade of coal, which can be used for naval purposes, and in that bill is the following very important provision from the standpoint of the Navy:

Said leases shall also be upon the condition that the United States shall at all times have a preference right to take, wherever found, so much of the product of any mine or mines opened upon the leased land as may be necessary for the use of the Army or Navy or Revenue-Cutter Service, and pay such reasonable and remunerative price therefor as may be fixed by the President, but the owner of any coal so taken who may be dissatisfied with the price thus fixed shall have the right to prosecute suits against the United States in the United States district court for division No. 1, District of Alaska, for the recovery of any additional sum or sums claimed to be justly due upon the coal so taken.

Mr. Chairman, some of the coal of southwestern Alaska is a very high grade coal, as fine as any bituminous coal found in the country, and suitable for naval purposes. This provision will make it possible for the Government to obtain the coal from the mines opened on these lands at a price to be fixed by the President, at a reasonable price, and will prevent any combination in coal in that region. I hope this bill will be enacted into law, and, together with the amendment already adopted, it will give us cheap naval coal on the Pacific.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armor and armament: Toward the armor and armament of domestic manufacture for vessels authorized, $10,532,928: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for armor for vessels except upon contracts for such armor when awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest responsible bidders, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, after line 20, insert the following:

"Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of armor or armament from any persons, firms, or corporations that have entered into any combination, agreement, conspiracy, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of a fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the furnishing of any of said armor and armament, and no purchase of armor or armament shall be made at a price in excess of 100 per cent above the actual cost of manufacture."

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that this Government has been for 20 years and is now fostering and maintaining a hungry lawless monopoly in the manufacture of its armor plate and armament. It is absolutely absurd that we should drag one trust into the courts of justice and then build and maintain and support another whose guilt is universally admitted. In 1896 a resolution was offered in the House and the Senate to investigate this very question as to whether or not a combination in restraint of trade, a trust and monopoly, existed in the furnishing of armor plate to the United States. In that investigation it was shown both by the findings of the committee and by the report of Secretary Herbert that armor for which we were paying $600 a ton could be manufactured for half that sum. I will insert in the RECORD the statements of armor experts and other experts, who, having no interest in the matter, investigated and filed different reports, all of them agreeing that this armor could be made for less than $300 a ton.

The Secretary sets forth at great length the methods and results of his investigation, which was conducted by himself personally, with Capt. W. T. Sampson, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, and Chief Constructor Philip Hichborn, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, as advisers. Immediately after the passage of the act the Secretary called on the two contracting companies, the Bethlehem Iron Co., of South Bethlehem, Pa., and the Carnegie Steel Co. (Ltd.), of Pittsburg, Pa., requesting them to aid him with the necessary information to enable him to perform the duties imposed upon him by the Congress. The two companies declined to give information upon the ground that it was very unusual for Congress to inquire into the business of private corporations. They, however, in October, made statements as to the cost of their plants, and furnished suggestions to the Secretary as to the methods which should be adopted by him in estimating the cost of armor and of their investments in the armor plants.

The Secretary called together a board composed of Lieuts. Karl Rohrer, Kossuth Niles, and A. A. Ackerman, two of whom had been inspectors of armor at the Bethlehem Co.'s iron works. The other, Lieut. Ackerman, had been connected with the manufacture and use of steel in its different forms for a number of years, and had been on duty in the Bureau of Ordnance, during which time he had spent several months at both the Bethlehem and Carnegie works. These gentlemen made an exhaustive report upon the cost of labor and material entering into a ton of armor, showing in detail every little item, beginning with the cost of the several ingredients charged into the furnace for casting the ingot preparatory to the forging process and ending with the work on the finished plate. The result of their calculations was that the cost of the labor and material in a ton of single-forged harveyized nickle-steel armor, the Government supplying the nickel, was $167.30.

Lieut. Commander Rodgers, who had been an inspector at the Bethlehem Iron Works, was also called upon to make an estimate of the cost of manufacturing armor, and his report, based upon observations in the manufacture of armor, makes the cost of labor and material in a ton of single-forged harveyized nickel-steel armor $178.59.

The inspector of ordnance at the Carnegie Steel Co., Ensign C. B. McVay, was also called upon for an estimate, and his report, though made separately without consultation with the other officers, is that the labor and material in a ton of single-forged harveyized nickel armor is $161.54.

Adding 10 per cent to each of these estimates for loss due to rejection makes the estimate of the board $184, the estimate of Lieut. Commander Rodgers $196.45, and of Ensign McVay $177.69. For reforged nickel-steel harveyized armor the estimate of Lieut. Commander Rodgers is $208.85, and of Ensign McVay $190.09.

The Secretary, in making his calculations, says, in order "to be just to both the manufacturers and the Government," he took an average of the estimates, which is $185.38 for single forged and $197.78 for reforged armor, in making the calculations contained in the report.

As a result of that investigation these various concerns immediately dropped the price on a ton of armor plate in the United States about $200.

Prior to the congressional and departmental investigation of the Armor Trust in 1896 and 1897 the price of armor plate ranged from the lowest price, $547.96, to $671 per ton. After the investigation the price of armor plate has ranged from $345 to $453 per ton. The Carnegie Co. has since sold 49,516 tons to the United States Government, which, at an average of $200 per ton less than the price paid prior to this congressional and departmental investigation, amounts to $9,903,200; the Bethlehem Co. has since sold 53,326 tons, amounting to $10,663,200; the Midvale Co. has since sold 20,055 tons, amounting to $4,011,000; total saved since previous investigation, $24,579,400. (S. Doc. No. 666, Navy Yearbook, pp. 729, 730, 731.)

At the very time, in 1895, that the Bethlehem Steel Co. and the Carnegie Steel Co. were selling armor to the United States at between $500 and $600 a ton they were selling that same armor to the Russian Government for $249 a ton, according to the report of Secretary Herbert. (Report Secretary Herbert, Jan. 5, 1897, H. Doc. No. 48, p. 21.)

In 1895 Russia was in the market for harveyized nickel armor. The Bethlehem and Carnegie companies, in the United States, were then both well established, and neither had sufficient orders from this Government to employ its plant continuously. There was sharp competition for the order from Russia, and the Bethlehem Co. secured the contract for manufacturing armor for one ship at the very low price of $249 per ton, this armor to be both nickeled and harveyized and to be delivered in Russia, the company agreeing at the same time to manufacture the armor for two other ships, if required, at the same price. The Russian Government afterwards did require for the other two ships, and taken altogether the armor for the three amounted to about 1,400 tons.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, 11 years afterwards, on the floor of this House, the chairman of this committee [Mr. Foss] admitted that they were still buying armor plate from manufacturers in a known combination, and that they were still receiving "fixed" bids. On March 2, 1905, Mr. Vandiver, in discussing this very combination which, notwithstanding its exposure in 1896, was still fleecing the Government in the same old way, said:

I say that we ought to know the truth about it. Every Secretary of the Navy for the last 10 years, who has been questioned about it, has conceded that there was an evident combination. Secretary Herbert, in his last report, said the combination was not denied; Secretary Long admitted it; Secretary Moody openly asserted that it appeared to be so, and now Secretary Morton has conceded it.

Secretary Morton, in his hearings before our committee, on the 26th of January (I read from page 564 of the hearings), stated if the Bethlehem bids for the bolts and nuts should be added to the Carnegie bids the two bids would be identical.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had the same experience for years: One company will underbid the other on one-half of the contract and the other on the other half, and so we have the combination here which seeks to control the price of armor plate to the Government, and has done so for years.

* * * * * * *

Mr. VANDIVER. Can the gentleman explain it in any other way than by the fact that there is a combination?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know. So far as that is concerned, I do not know whether there is a combination at all, but all the indications point that way. I will say to the gentleman. (Ex. "C," vol. 39, part 4, pp. 3880–3881.)

It is here established by every Secretary of the Navy for 20 years, by Secretaries Herbert and Long, Moody and Morton, that this illicit, illegal combination existed.

Is there any evidence that this trust is not doing business at the same old stand? Has there been anything in the conduct of the United States Steel Corporation or of the various combinations that sell armor and armament to the United States to indicate that they are more obedient to the law or more patriotic than they were at the time of Secretary Herbert's investigation, or at the time of the admission of the chairman of this committee that we were purchasing armor or armament from a combination and a trust? Since these investigations competition has not only ceased between makers of armor plate, builders of guns, and other munitions of war, but it has ceased altogether. We not only have one trust selling armor, another trust selling beams and bolts and girders, but we have one huge combination throttling competition, not only between the makers of similar materials, but among all manufacturers of iron in every shape, form, and fashion in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, we have improved the methods of the manufacture of armor plate. We have cheapened the processes. These royalties about which they talk so much, many of them have expired. There is no reason to-day why armor plate should not be purchased at from $280 to $300 a ton, and yet the price of armor plate to-day to the Government is four hundred and twenty-odd dollars a ton, according to the last report of the Navy Yearbook.

The greatest danger to this Government, Mr. Chairman, is not from foreign foes. It is from internal combinations, and it is absurd, it is a travesty on justice to have this Government drag the Oil Trust and the Tobacco Trust into one end of the Capitol while we feed another trust out of our hands in the other end, and it is time this Government, who can make its own armor plate and who should make it, if necessary, shall say that it will not become not only the principal purchaser, but the maintainer of an illicit, illegal, and lawless combination in restraint of trade. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PRINCE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 19756. An act for the relief of Michael B. Ryan, son and administrator de bonis non of John S. Ryan, deceased; and

H. R. 9221. An act for the relief of James Jones.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Senate resolution 300.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. SAMUEL DOUGLAS MCENERY, late a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of Mr. MCENERY and Mr. DANIEL the Senate do now adjourn.

Senate resolution 359.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JOHN WARWICK DANIEL, late a Senator from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of Mr. DANIEL and Mr. MCENERY the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 10476. An act for the relief of Passed Asst. Paymaster Edwin M. Hacker.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 288) for the creation of the police and firemen's relief fund, to provide for the retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such retirement, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 14, page 61, strike out the words "of domestic manufacture."

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment to strike out of this paragraph the words "of domestic manufacture." The effect of this paragraph, if the amendment I make is adopted, will be this: The Secretary will be required to submit for competitive bidding all propositions for armor and armament. My amendment will take down the bars, and armor and armament can be purchased in the cheapest market in the world, either at home or abroad. We will get better armor and armament, I believe; at any rate we will get cheaper armor and armament; and I desire now to discuss at some length the amendment I propose.

WORLD-WIDE PREPARATION FOR WAR.

In all the nations of the world earnest men and women are at work preaching the doctrine of peace—trying to put an end to the awful arbitrament of the sword. But the preparations for war go on here and throughout the world with unprecedented vigor. The burdens of navies and great standing armies weigh heavier now upon the real wealth producers of the great nations of the world than ever before in all the centuries of recorded history. England, Germany, and Japan all are engaged in a bitter contest to see which nation can squander the most money in the shortest time on armies and navies. Great armadas are being created this year which in less than five years will be out of date and useless. Great warships, costing millions of dollars, have been built in recent years which were out of date and useless before they were launched.

OUR ISOLATED POSITION OUR BEST DEFENSE.

In this country the strange, inexplicable fever of preparation for war prevails to the same degree as in the great nations of the Old World. The position we take on this question, in the light of the experience of history, is almost inexplicable. We occupy an isolated territory, separated by great oceans from any possible enemy. The territory of continental United States lies within the grandest, the most perfect natural boundaries any nation ever had in all the history of the world. No nation was ever able to send armies and navies across 2,000 miles of ocean and to carry on a successful war for conquest, even against an inferior enemy. No nation ever fought successfully for any considerable period of time 2,000 miles from its base of supplies.

England has been compelled repeatedly to withdraw splendidly equipped armies from the interior of Africa where they were engaged in fighting native tribes armed principally with spears and bows and arrows; but England was fighting 1,000 miles from her base of supplies. Our splendid isolation is our best defense. Our extensive preparations for war are as absurd, as foolish, and as criminal as was the children's crusade for the recovery of the Holy Land.

OUR EVER-INCREASING WAR EXPENDITURES.

This bill carries $125,000,000. Last year it carried $130,000,000. Our war expenditures of the past fade into insignificance when compared with the enormous sums we expend now. During the eight years of Washington's administration we expended on our Army and Navy $11,000,000. We expend that much now for a single battleship. Three hundred and fifty-nine thousand men were killed or died from diseases in the Northern Armies alone during the Civil War, but when the war was over the Gray Armies and the Blue Armies marched home and were disbanded and we retained only a skeleton Army of less than 25,000 men. During the 10 years which preceded the Spanish-American War the expenses of our Army and Navy together amounted to $507,000,000. During that war the number killed in action amounted to only 218, but as the result of this insignificant struggle, in some inexplicable way, a war spirit was developed in this country, and for the 10 years immediately following the Spanish War, in a time of profound peace, the expense of maintaining the Army and Navy was $1,626,000,000, over a thousand million dollars more than in the previous 10 years, an amount sufficient to have paid the entire public debt and to have contributed something to the building of the Panama Canal. Our program for the future contemplates still larger expenditures of money.

On this side of the sea those men who are loudest in proclaiming an intense desire for peace are also beating the war drums and sending broadcast wild alarms. In this country a great steel magnate professes a willingness to contribute millions for the purpose of ending wars, and at the same time, louder than anyone else, he proclaims his desire that millions of dollars be expended for guns to be mounted on the Isthmus of Panama. Weird stories of Japanese spies here and in our island possessions, and discoveries of secret Japanese wireless stations in the Philippines, are industriously circulated about the time each year when the Army and Navy bills are being prepared. After both these bills safely pass and the burden is fixed for that year at two hundred or two hundred and fifty million dollars, the war scares subside and people are permitted to pay some attention to peaceful avocations. But when the time for the preparation and passage of these bills comes around again a new batch of war stories finds its way into the news columns of our metropolitan papers.

BUSINESS OF PREPARATION FOR WAR PROFITABLE TO STEEL COMPANIES.

As a matter of fact the business of preparation for war is immensely profitable to the steel companies of the country, and if it were possible to trace these war alarms to their real source we would find the steel companies and their agents and advertisers responsible for most of them. They promote the business of preparation for war in order that they may, at their own price, furnish the implements of war. Inasmuch as Andrew Carnegie is at the present time the world's most prominent advocate of international peace and is also at the present time the most prominent supporter of the scheme to expend millions for guns to be mounted on the Isthmus of Panama in preparation for war, he is entitled to some consideration here to-day.

ANDREW CARNEGIE'S IDEA OF DUTY.

On the 7th day of last month Andrew Carnegie addressed the Republican Club in New York City. Whenever this distinguished philanthropist addresses any political organization it is sure to be an organization which exists for the purpose of perpetuating Republican theories. The Republican Party has been a source of tremendous profit to Andrew Carnegie and to all those gentlemen who have accumulated millions out of steel. In this particular address Mr. Carnegie expounded his idea of civic duty in connection with the manufacture of steel.

I was coaching in Scotland—

He said—

when I got a cablegram from Secretary Tracy, saying in effect, "the President says he understands it to be your duty to enter into the manufacture of armor and save the ships from waiting on the stocks for want of it."

Mr. Carnegie proceeded then to say:

That telegram settled it, for whenever the public calls on me for anything I can do, unless I fall dead, it is my glory to respond.

He then proceeded to relate a story of tremendous activity in assembling tools and creating an armor plant, and concluded the discussion by saying:

That is what I did, because the President asked me to do it, and if the President thinks it is my duty to do anything or to go anywhere for my country, I consider it the voice of God.

Newspaper reporters writing up this part of Mr. Carnegie's speech described vividly his pathos of voice and the intensity of his feeling when he uttered this splendid sentiment. At a later date, on the 10th day of the present month, Andrew Carnegie addressed some working girls in New York City, and with considerable pride, according to the newspapers, advised them that in his steel operations he had succeeded in creating 42 or 43 millionaires as a sort of by-product. Not long ago Mr. Carnegie admitted that his profits from his steel investments alone exceeded each year the sum of $16,000,000.

We are driven to the conclusion from the evidence Mr. Carnegie himself has furnished that his operations in steel have been profitable; in fact, his success in accumulating money has never been equaled by any other man in the field of industry. In his address to the members of the Republican Club in New York last month he told a story of wonderful activity on his part. In response to the request of the President of the United States he assembled tools in Europe, employed skilled workmen, created at his plant in Pennsylvania the greatest and most powerful factory for the manufacture of armor plate the world had ever seen. He told the same story years ago before the investigating committee of the House of Representatives.

DID MR. CARNEGIE RESPOND TO THE "VOICE OF GOD?"

In order to determine whether Mr. Carnegie's conclusion that he responded to the "voice of God" on that occasion is correct or not, I want to examine briefly the history of armor-plate making in this country. In 1887 the Bethlehem Iron Co. was awarded a contract for armor plate at from $510 to $600 per ton. On November 30, 1890, after Mr. Carnegie heard the "voice of God" in such a startling manner, his firm, the firm of Carnegie, Phipps & Co. (now the Carnegie Steel Co.) entered into a contract for furnishing 6,000 tons of armor at exactly the same prices made by the Bethlehem Co. Mr. Carnegie's contention always has been that the manufacture of armor plate was not particularly profitable. An investigation made by a committee of the House of Representatives showed conclusively that in 1894, when both the Carnegie Co. and the Bethlehem Co. were making the various grades of armor plate for this Government, and were being paid from $517 to $725 per ton for making the same, the Bethlehem Co. made a contract with the Russian Government to furnish to that Government at least 1,500 tons of armor plate of the same character as the plate then being made by them for the United States Government for $249 per ton.

We may assume that the Bethlehem Co. did not lose anything on their contract with the Russian Government. In this country very recently a board of competent engineers reached the conclusion that class A armor plate could be manufactured by this Government at $295.89 per ton and that class B armor plate could be manufactured by the Government at $273.38 per ton. The available evidence therefore shows that upon the first contract made by Mr. Carnegie with this Government for 6,000 tons immediately after he responded to the "voice of God," in addition to what ought to have been a reasonable profit, he made for his company considerably more than $2,000,000. His contracts with this Government immediately afterwards were for still larger amounts per ton. As a result of the publicity given the Russian contract, and also on account of charges affecting the honesty with which Mr. Carnegie executed his contracts with the Government, there was an investigation into the price of armor plate in this country and there was also an investigation into the charges of fraud made in connection with the operations of Mr. Carnegie's company. The Carnegie Co., as well as the Bethlehem and the Midvale companies, all engaged at that time in making armor plate for this Government, refused to furnish the board making the investigation with the slightest information as to the cost of armor production. The board, however, reached the conclusion that a Government factory for the manufacture of armor plate would cost $3,747,972. This report was made by the armor factory board appointed by the Secretary for the purpose of making this investigation. We can not help wondering whether Mr. Carnegie was still listening to the "voice of God" when he declined to permit his company to give out any information as to the cost of making armor plate.

COLLUSION IN BIDDING.

In 1906, by a remarkable coincidence, the Carnegie, Bethlehem, and Midvale companies submitted competitive bids for the manufacture of armor plate. The Bethlehem Co. bid 6 cents per ton more than the Midvale Co. and the Carnegie Co. bid 11 cents per ton more than the Bethlehem Co. I would not care to insinuate that the distinguished patriots controlling the affairs of these companies were in collusion when these bids were submitted. It is, however, remarkable that competitive bids involving millions of dollars should be submitted and they should differ only by a few cents. This remarkable difference is perhaps due to the fact that Andrew Carnegie was still listening, when these bids were made, to what he now believes to have been the "voice of God."

In 1897, in response to a limitation fixed in the appropriation bill for that year, the department was compelled to issue a circular calling for bids for the delivery of 8,000 tons of nickel steel face-hardened armor at not more than $300 per ton. At that time the Carnegie and the Bethlehem companies, who were alone equipped to manufacture armor plate, declined to submit any bid. The Illinois Steel Co., however, submitted to the department a proposition—not in the form of a bid—to supply the 8,000 tons called for at $300 per ton. Their proposition, however, was conditioned upon Congress awarding to that company a contract for the wants of the Government for 20 years for all armor plate at an average price of $240 per ton, the Government to guarantee that the average tonnage every year of armor plate would not be less than 6,000 nor more than 12,000 tons. The department, however, did not consider itself authorized to consider this proposition, but referred it to Congress. This was in 1897, after the real supremacy of the Republican Party commenced, and no action has ever been taken by this body. At that time the Illinois Steel Co. was not connected with the other steel companies, but was believed to be a competing company.

The price they made may be considered to be at that time a fair price for armor plate in this country. It has never been intimated, however, that in making this price of $240 per ton the Illinois Steel Co. listened to the "voice of God." They simply figured up in a practical way the price they could make to the Government for armor plate, and the price they made at that time probably left them with an ample profit.

By a singular coincidence in August, 1900, the Carnegie Co. and the Bethlehem Co. submitted bids for the various classes of armor, and the bids were identical. The contract was divided between them, and in 1906, at the prices I have mentioned, the contract was divided between the three companies equipped for the manufacture of armor plate. In 1894 we had an investigation into the frauds perpetrated upon this Government by Mr. Carnegie's company while Mr. Carnegie was operating under his high ideals of duty to this Government. I do not propose to go into a discussion of the evidence produced on that occasion. I think, however, I might with propriety call attention to the admissions made by Mr. Carnegie's superintendents. I can not be charged with unfairness if I simply call attention to those frauds perpetrated by Mr. Carnegie's company, which were admitted by his representatives, some of whom are now among the 43 Carnegie-made millionaires. The document which contains all this evidence is easily accessible. It is House of Representatives Report No. 1468, Fifty-third Congress, second session.

FRAUDS PERPETRATED BY MR. CARNEGIE'S COMPANY.

The investigation was commenced in 1894. At the same time a similar investigation was made by a Senate committee. C. M. Schwab, who was at that time a stockholder in the Carnegie Co., and who was the superintendent of the company, and who is now the president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., admitted that armor plates manufactured by the Carnegie Co. did not receive the "uniform" treatment required by the contract of the company with the Government.

Another one of Mr. Carnegie's superintendents, Mr. W. A. Cline, admitted that almost invariably after the day's work was over he changed the figures so that false reports of the treatment of the plates were systematically made to the Government inspectors. This superintendent also admitted that he discharged workmen in the Carnegie factory for the reason that they told the truth about the fraudulent work done in this plant. Supt. Corey, of the Carnegie Co., also admitted that specimens which were taken from the plates to ascertain the tensile strength of the plates were stretched so as to increase their apparent tensile strength without the knowledge of the Government inspectors. Upon the stand Mr. Schwab admitted that he knew of this fraudulent method of stretching the specimens. Mr. Corey admitted that he knew that false specimens taken from good plates were substituted for specimens selected by the Government inspectors from plates of doubtful character, so that in reality the inspectors were not testing the plates they thought they were testing. Mr. Corey, however, testified that he considered this to be a matter of small importance. The evidence disclosed that specimens taken for physical tests were re-treated without the knowledge of the Government inspectors and before the Government inspectors made the tests required by the contracts. Supt. Corey admitted that plates selected by the Government inspector for the ballistic tests were re-treated before the tests were made by the company without the knowledge of the inspector. Supts. Corey and Schwab both admitted that large blowholes or shrinking cavities were plugged by the contractors in order that these defects might be concealed from the Government inspectors.

I have so far called attention to the admissions of Mr. Carnegie's executive officers. The testimony, however, of employees was particularly damaging. T. F. Farley testified that he had seen blowholes large enough for a person to run three fingers in plugged by taking cuttings from the same plate, which were driven into the blowholes with hammers; he also testified that he himself had run flexible wires into blowholes to the depth of 18 inches. These blowholes were afterwards plugged up on the surface. The blowholes might, according to his testimony, have extended into the plates a much greater distance than this. These blowholes, it appears from the testimony, follow a sinuous course so as to make it difficult to ascertain the extent of them, even by inserting flexible wires. J. W. Kountz, another employee, testified that he had known holes from 4 to 6 inches in diameter plugged in order to deceive Government inspectors. Samuel Sheriff, another employee, testified that the plugging and doctoring of plates was done at night when no inspectors were about, but he testified that he had seen one fixed up at noon. T. F. Farley also testified that the plates were frequently imperfect, full of blowholes and defects. He also testified that they were frequently taken off the planer and hidden until night so that they could not be seen by the inspectors. They were then worked upon at night when the inspectors were gone.

In discussing this matter I have kept well within the record and have been conservative. I have principally called attention only to the admissions of fraud brazenly made by Mr. Carnegie's executive officers. It is only fair to them to say, however, that the admissions were made in the face of overpowering evidence as to the truth of all these charges. Many things were proven by the evidence more damaging than I have called attention to, which, however, were not admitted by Mr. Carnegie's superintendents.

The wonderful executive ability and attention to details on the part of Mr. Carnegie, which he himself with great pride described the other night in New York and on other occasions, and which enabled him in such a remarkably short space of time to equip the greatest armor-plate factory in the world, absolutely compels us to believe that Mr. Carnegie knew of these frauds committed by his company. In all the years which have passed since then he has never on any occasion denied that he himself had full knowledge of the frauds perpetrated upon the Government by his company. Under the admitted facts I think therefore we may safely conclude that Mr. Carnegie was mistaken in 1890 when he thought he heard the "voice of God" commanding him to manufacture armor plate for his Government. I am inclined to the opinion that any fair-minded man who cares to resurrect the evidence taken in the nineties will be compelled to believe that Mr. Carnegie did not respond at that time to the demands of patriotism but rather responded to those inclinations, prompted by avarice and greed, which enabled him out of these contracts to accumulate a part of his millions. He does not seem to have been prompted at that time to any considerable degree by the desire to honestly serve his Government.

WHY WAS THE MATTER PERMITTED TO DROP OUT OF SIGHT?

If any Member of this House or if any patriotic citizen should now read again the evidence in these investigations, the query will at once present itself to him, Why was the matter permitted to drop by Congress? Is it possible that these fraudulent methods still prevail at these factories? The explanation is easy. These investigations were concluded about the time the new issues of 1896 were presented to the country; about the time when great questions affecting our circulating medium occupied the attention of the public mind. These investigations were hardly completed when the interests in this country commenced to contribute to a campaign fund which astounded the world.

Sugar trust thieves, steel magnates, and dishonest life insurance officials who robbed policy holders, all united in contributing to a Republican campaign fund of $20,000,000 with which the electorate was corrupted, with which the real supremacy of the Republican Party was purchased. From sea to sea men were intimidated and bribed. The result was the stifling for a time of the public conscience of the country; the result was that supremacy of the Republican Party in national affairs, which continued until the elections last November. During all that period of Republican supremacy, through all the years that have passed since 1896 until now, no action has been taken on account of the disclosures in the steel investigations conducted by both Houses of the Congress. Since that time, under the fostering care of the party in power, the steel companies have been permitted to consolidate and to grow stronger and stronger. By Executive usurpation unparalleled in the history of this Government the civil and the criminal laws of the country were suspended, and competing steel corporations were permitted to merge, until now in absolute harmony these great companies proceed under one control. The evidence is indisputable that they are still perpetrating the old frauds with absolute impunity on perhaps a larger scale than ever.

THESE FRAUDS CONTINUED TO PRESENT TIME.

The fact of the continuance of these frauds is evidenced by the frequency with which guns explode on our battleships and on land killing and maiming men, by the frequency with which boilers on our ships blow up with such awful results to human life.

Guns, while being tested by other great nations of the world, do not explode with disastrous results. We do not read in the papers that boilers frequently explode on the war vessels of England or Germany or any other nation. The very large number of these accidents in our own Navy and in tests made by our Army officers leads to the irresistible conclusion that there are defects in the castings of the guns, and in the castings for the steel tubes and boilers furnished by our steel companies. Castings for guns are not made by the Government. They are made at Bethlehem, at Midvale, at the plant of the Carnegie Co., and some of the smaller castings are made by companies not so large as the companies I have mentioned. In our Government arsenals here at Washington and up at Watervliet we simply assemble these castings. I desire to insert here in my speech a chronological record of the more important accidents of this character as recorded in the news items of our metropolitan papers.

DISASTERS CAUSED BY EXPLOSIONS, BURSTING GUNS, FAULTY BREECH-BLOCKS, ETC.

1902, February 2. Battleship Kearsarge, West Indian waters; gun burst, killing 5.

1903, January 17. Battleship Massachusetts; gun explosion off Culebra Island; 6 killed.

1903, April 9. Battleship Iowa; explosion of gun; 3 killed, 5 wounded.

1904, April 13. Battleship Missouri, off Pensacola, Fla.; explosion; 32 killed.

1904, December 14. Battleship Massachusetts, at Philadelphia; explosion in firerooms; 3 killed, 4 scalded.

1905, July 21. Gunboat Bennington, San Diego, Cal.; boiler explosion; 34 killed, 66 injured.

1906, January 10. Battleship Massachusetts; gun explosion; 9 killed.

1906, April 13. Battleship Kearsarge, in Caribbean Sea; explosion; 6 killed.

1907, July 15. Battleship Georgia, Massachusetts Bay; explosion; 6 killed, 15 injured.

1908, June 5. In California waters, cruiser Tennessee; bursting of boiler tube; 6 killed.

——— ———. Torpedo-boat destroyer Hopkins, California waters; exploding boiler; 1 killed, 5 wounded.

1910, March 28. Cruiser Charleston, in Philippine waters; gun explosion, alleged faulty breech block; 8 killed, 7 or 8 wounded.

1910, July 21. Explosion of gun, Fort Monroe; 12 killed.

1910, September 9. Battleship North Dakota; explosion, Hampton Roads; 3 killed.

1910, November 19. Explosion of gun, Indianhead; 4 killed.

1911, January 13. Cruiser Washington; cylinder head blown out. Also about this time 3 similar accidents to vessels in Admiral Schroeder's fleet; no one killed.

1911, January 17. Battleship Delaware; boilers exploded; 9 killed; just outside Hampton Roads.

Total killed in nine years, 147.

Total maimed in nine years, 102.

As a result of the accidents I have enumerated, and there have been others, in nine years 147 men have been killed and 162 maimed for life. In other words, by these accidents, in nine years of profound peace, we have killed or maimed for life more of our men than were killed in action in the Spanish-American War.

Recently a great ocean liner made a record-breaking trip across the Atlantic, and without allowing any time for repairs or for even oiling up the machinery returned again across the Atlantic in record-breaking time. There were no explosions of boiler tubes, no cylinder heads were blown out, the machinery did not break, and yet the machinery of this great ship was subjected to a more severe test than the machinery of any of our battleships or cruisers has been subjected to since the Spanish-American War. This record-breaking trip across the Atlantic and back again, with all its accompanying terrific strain on machinery, did not result in this great ship being laid up a day for repairs.

THE VOYAGE OF THE BATTLESHIP FLEET INDICATES DEFECTIVE MATERIAL FURNISHED BY STEEL COMPANIES.

In December, 1907, by Executive order, 16 of our great battleships were ordered to make a useless voyage around the world. They proceeded leisurely. It was not a trip around the world in 80 days. It took 14 months to make it; and finally, on February 22, 1909, when these vessels reached again our ports, according to the figures issued by the department, this trip around the world had cost $13,460,512. This was not the entire cost to the Government connected with this useless voyage. Since the return of the ships, on account of failing machinery, due to this leisurely journey around the world, Congress has appropriated for repairs on the—

New Jersey	$810,000.00
Rhode Island	810,000.00
Ohio	125,426.00
Illinois	592,391.00
Kearsarge	602,812.46
Kentucky	598,718.00
Ajax, one of the four auxiliary vessels which made the entire trip	66,476.00
Total	3,605,823.46

The bill we are now considering authorizes the following repairs on the—

Georgia	$500,000
Virginia	500,000
Arethusa	125,000
Total	1,125,000

The Arethusa was also one of the four auxiliary vessels which made the entire trip around the world. The situation, therefore, is this: When this bill has passed both Houses of Congress, as it will pass, we will have authorized repairs on eight of these battleships, just one-half of the battleship fleet which went around the world, to the amount of $4,539,347.46. We will have authorized repairs on two of the four auxiliary vessels which made the entire trip around the world to the amount of $191,476, making in all a grand total of $4,730,823.46 to be expended upon half the fleet which went around the world in order to repair the damages occasioned by this particularly leisurely tour. If a leisurely sea voyage, with no strain on machinery, brings with it such appalling results, there are many of us who wonder what effect actual warfare and rapid steaming would have upon the machinery and equipment furnished by the steel companies to this Government.

The naval bill last year, in addition to these provisions, carried an item for the completion and repair of boilers to the amount of $4,250,000. How much of this sum went for the purpose of repairing boilers on the vessels which went around the world on this excursion it is not possible for me to say.

A year ago we had 349 vessels in our Navy and 80 of them at that time were out of commission, tied up at our wharves, and on them we were making repairs to the amount of nearly $7,000,000. The enormous repair bills for the vessels which went around the world and the other war vessels can be accounted for only upon the theory that defective work, criminally defective work, is still being done by these steel companies for this Government on a larger scale than ever.

We are absolutely helpless in matters of this kind so long as the officials of our Government authorized to place contracts for armor and for armament of various kinds and for castings for guns are in partnership with the steel companies doing work for the Government.

OUR OFFICIALS IN PARTNERSHIP WITH STEEL COMPANIES.

Commander Folger, while Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, negotiated a contract in his official capacity with Mr. Harvey, of the Harvey Steel Co., by which Harvey was paid by this Government for the use of his process in hardening steel a royalty of $50 per ton, and after negotiating a contract contemplating the payment of tremendous sums of money to Mr. Harvey by this Government, Commander Folger became an employee of the Harvey Steel Co.

Millions of dollars were expended by the Government on the Buffington-Crozier disappearing gun carriage while Buffington was Chief of Ordnance and while Crozier was a member of the Board of Ordnance. These officers, as a result of experimenting with Government money, were finally enabled to take out a patent on the disappearing gun carriage now in use in this country. The patent was taken out at the suggestion of the Bethlehem Iron Co., as Mr. Crozier admitted. These two officers sold all the rights to the Bethlehem Iron Co., as Mr. Crozier also admitted, for $10,000, and the Bethlehem Iron Co. agreed to pay to Gen. Buffington and to Gen. Crozier, in addition to that amount, royalties on each carriage built for Governments other than the United States until on this account there had been paid to these officers in royalties the sum of $50,000.

A MAN CAN NOT SERVE TWO MASTERS.

These officers, therefore, charged with protecting the contracts, made by this Government with the steel companies, against fraud on the part of the steel companies, charged also with placing orders for armor plate and for castings for guns with steel companies, entered into this partnership with the Bethlehem Steel Co. "A man can not serve two masters," and the inferior character of work done for the Government by these companies, as evidenced by accidents to machinery and explosions of guns, followed as a matter of course.

While an officer of the department, Gen. Crozier invented, as a result of his experiments with money contributed by the Government, a wire-wound gun and took out a patent on it. This was invented at a time when the nations of the world were adopting wire-wound guns. Evidently having in mind the invention of Gen. Crozier while occupying this official position, Gen. Buffington, interested with him in the Crozier-Buffington disappearing gun carriage, recommended, while Chief of Ordnance, in the estimates of the War Department for the fiscal year 1903, an expenditure of a sum of money less than $998,000 for the purchase of material for steel-wire seacoast guns. The act of March 1, 1901, as a result of the efforts of these officers, provided that a sum of money less than $76,000 could be used in the discretion of the Secretary of War—which meant, of course, in the discretion of these officers—for this purpose.

Prior to that time there was but one gun in this country competing with the Crozier steel wire-wound gun, to wit, the Brown segmental wire-tube gun. In 1894 this gun was turned over to a board, of which Capt. William Crozier was a member. It was tested by that board and found to be deficient by the board, and Capt. Crozier was one of the two members of the board who signed the report of the test of the Brown segmental wire-tube gun, and who in their report killed the only competitor the Crozier gun had.

A few months later the same board, Capt. Crozier still being one of its members, tested his own invention, and a favorable report was made. The report of the Chief of Ordnance, made in 1896, on page 321 of that report, contains the following note:

By authority of the Chief of Ordnance Capt. Crozier was, at his own request, relieved from duty in joining in the above report.

He was not, however, relieved from duty in testing his own gun, but was relieved from duty in signing the report which followed. I might call attention also to other officials charged with the duty of protecting the interests of this country, who were interested in inventions made by them as the result of information gathered while experimenting with Government money and while accepting salaries from the Government, and who have been financially interested in the inventions they themselves have compelled this Government to purchase. The answer may be made that the patent taken out on the Buffington-Crozier disappearing gun carriage provides that no royalties are to be paid for carriages of this character made for the United States Government. However, the principle remains the same; the royalties are to be paid to these inventors by the Bethlehem Steel Co. on the carriages made for other governments, and the Bethlehem Steel Co. has taken out patents on this carriage in England and perhaps in other places. These officers were instrumental in bringing about the sale of disappearing gun carriages of this type to this Government, and I understand each one of them costs about $150,000; and this Government has already officially recommended to the world this particular carriage, and Gen. Crozier, on account of the official position he now holds, can in this way promote the sale of his invention abroad and reap thereby large financial gains. Up to the present time, however, no sales of this gun carriage have been made by the Bethlehem company to foreign governments. But attempts are being made to sell it abroad, and when sales are made Gen. Crozier's connection with the Bethlehem company will become profitable. Gen. Crozier is now Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of the Army, and under the rules his duties are as follows:

The Chief of Ordnance commands the Ordnance Department, the duties of which consist in providing, preserving, distributing, and accounting for every description of artillery, small arms, and all the munitions of war which may be required for the fortresses of the country, the armies in the field, and for the whole body of the militia of the Union. In these duties are comprised that of determining the general principles of construction and of prescribing in detail the models and forms of all military weapons employed in war. They comprise also the duty of prescribing the regulations for the proof and inspection of all these weapons, for maintaining uniformity and economy in their fabrication, for insuring their good quality, and for their preservation and distribution.

Under these conditions—and I might continue the discussion along these lines at much greater length—is it any wonder that inferior work is being done in the factories furnishing these castings for the use of the Government? In this connection I desire now to read some affidavits made by employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co. as to the methods employed in doing work at the present time for the Government by that company.

There is no longer any competition in this country, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] has so well stated, in the manufacture of armor or armament for vessels.

In the old investigation practically only the superintendents of the Carnegie Co. were called upon to testify. In order to show that the frauds continue to this day, I have original affidavits, made within the last few months up here at Bethlehem, and I send them to the Clerk's desk and ask that they be read now in my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] yield to a question?

Mr. RAINEY. After they get through reading I will, if possible.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the affidavits.

During the reading of the affidavits the following colloquy occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more in which to read the affidavits.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no gentleman arose from his seat and objected. Some gentleman sat back and did so. Let him rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman saw one gentleman rise in his place and object.

Mr. RAINEY. Who made the objection, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; I did not make the objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk resumed the reading of the affidavits.

During the reading,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. FOSS. I object.

Mr. RAINEY. We are practically through with this bill, Mr. Chairman. I hope my colleague will not object to this.

Mr. FOSS. I have no objection to having the affidavits printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Regular order!

Mr. RAINEY. We are practically through with the bill now, and it will not take two minutes to read the balance of the affidavits.

Mr. FOSS. There are practically two pages left.

Mr. RAINEY. There is not over a page and a half left. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may finish the reading of the affidavits.

Mr. FOSS. How long will it take to finish the reading?

Mr. RAINEY. Not over two minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] There is no objection. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The following are the affidavits referred to:

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., April 26, 1910.

I, the undersigned, do hereby certify that the following information is an absolute fact, as I have been an employee of the Bethlehem Steel Co. in the treatment department for a period of one and one-half years.

After official tests on 12-inch liners, tubes, and long propeller shafts for U. S. S. Florida there was a heat treatment given above forgings while the inspectors were at home at night; for instance, if a tube, liner, or shaft passes test to-day, instead of shipping same forging into the machine shop for machining, they put forging into a wood furnace and heat it at 860°, which is equal to 1,000° or more in oil furnace, thereby softening the forging, and the following morning have same piece ready for machine shop after straightening (which should have been done before official test bars were taken). This was not, of course, done with all tubes, liners, and shafts, but it was done in cases where the company needed any individual forging to complete a set of gun forgings in order to get out a certain amount of work to reach their tonnage basis, so as to make their annual bonus. One of the most prominent features of the superintendents and overseers of the company is to produce as much tonnage as possible, regardless of whether or not work is accomplished in a manner which gave the Government an inferior product.

The United States Government specifications require all treatment reports to be forwarded to the Army and Navy office at works were work is being done, but this rule was not lived up to on the part of the company, as I myself was instructed by the superintendent to withhold the report of tubes, liners, and shafts from the Army and Navy office; therefore the inspectors never knew about the treatment that was given after the official test.

I also wish to state that during the month of December, 1909, there was more of this defective work done than any month previous, to the best of my knowledge.

The records that were supposed to be open for public inspection were always so fixed that they would not show the fraudulent treatments that were given forgings, and the reports that I got about treatments on tubes, liners, and shafts were withheld from the public records that were supposed to be open for scrutiny of Army and Navy inspectors.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., April 29, 1910.

This is to certify that I know there was work done in No. 2 machine shop for the United States Government that was not up to specifications. I myself have deceived the inspector many a time.

On the last lot of 5-inch mounts that were made here a number of patches were placed on the brackets, to cover up a mistake in machining. These were put on in such a way so that under ordinary inspection they could not be detected.

I know of a slide for a 12-inch gun that was being machined when a blowhole was discovered. The yoke was taken off the machine and at night the hole was filled up with metal and the yoke put back on the machine, the inspector not discovering the trick. I know of a track for a 12-inch turret which, while being machined, was found to be cracked.

I closed the crack by hammering the crack shut and finished machining it.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, April 29, 1910.

In a brief submitted to President Taft on April 6 by the committee of striking employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co. we charged that during the night, when Government inspectors were not present, workmen were compelled to treat, patch, and weld inferior work so that work could be forced to be accepted by the Government.

In a letter from Mr. G. v. L. Meyer, Secretary of the Navy, to the President, under date of April 21, 1910, of which I have a copy, he states that our charge has been investigated. In his letter he states that "it appears that no evidence in support of this can be obtained, and the inspectors claim that should defective work be treated in this manner it would subsequently be detected on inspection and test, and reports indicate that the Government is fully safeguarded by the daily routine inspection."

He also states: "In general, it is believed that the character of the work accepted upon inspection by the Government fully meets the requirements of the Government, and through the system of inspection now in vogue the interests of the Government are well protected."

Regardless of this report, work was treated at night, and men were not allowed to tell the inspector, and after the work was treated if there was any chance of the inspector being deceived into accepting the work as being up to specifications, it was submitted to him. I know that on an order of 5-inch sights for the Navy, about three years ago, that some of these sights were found out of alignment during the company shop test, and that the steel castings were hammered with a sledge to bend them so they would line up. The recoil of the guns, when these sights were used, must have sprung these castings back to their old shape, and thereby made it impossible for our sailors to shoot straight. I offer as witnesses Horace Klinesmith and Robert Johnson, former employees of No. 4 machine shop.

During the building of the 12-inch ammunition hoists for the battleships North Dakota and Delaware a number of buffers, to be used as cushions to take the weight off the lower cars, were found to be not strong enough. The inspector (J. C. Farrall) refused to accept them on the ground that the springs were not firm enough. The foreman (Harry Lynn) promised to put new springs in. The real trouble was that the bore was out of round in the bottom of the castings, and when inspector was home to dinner these buffers were taken apart and filled with thick vaseline, which stopped up the leak and made it appear as though new springs had been put in, and were accepted by the inspector.

I was working as assistant to the inspector, and know this to be a fact. On the same job there were several levers welded by electricity to fill up dirt holes, and were in bad shape, and I put the inspector next to it, and was asked by Foreman George Meyer, of the second floor: "Who the hell told him that?" These levers were thrown out by Inspector Farrall. At the present time there are under construction twenty-four 6-inch howitzer gun carriages and twenty-four 6-inch howitzer limbers upon which much inferior work was done, and up to the time of strike was hid from the inspector. Parts have been broken in flanging, and welded with acetylene gas; axles have been machined wrong, and patched; other parts machined wrong, and doctored up to make it pass inspection. In fact, the idea in the shop is to make the work "appear" as though it is up to specifications, or, in other words, get it past the inspector by fair or foul means. I offer as witnesses Horace Klinesmith, George Stegmair, George Miller, Robert Johnson, Ralph Otto, John Wendling, Henry Doyle, and William Everett. Also, on shells for the Navy, if the center has been drilled too deep, leaving a hole in the nose of the shell instead of a point, the hole is drilled deeper and a pointed plug put in. As this was done when inspector was home, I am sure it was not allowed by inspector. This shell job was kept very secret in shop, and should be thoroughly investigated, as there was a large bonus paid for getting these shells out in a certain time, which acted as an incentive for the men to deceive the inspector. In fact, in No. 4 machine shop the practice of treating inferior workmanship was so common that nothing was thought of it. An investigation where men could be placed on oath would bring to light a great many things which I haven't mentioned. I do not blame the inspectors for this, as it would be impossible for an inspector to detect some of these operations. When it is known that Mr. Everett, a skilled jeweler, is used on some of this work, the impossibility of detecting these things by ordinary inspection is apparent.

DAVID WILLIAMS.

COUNTY OF NORTHAMPTON, State of Pennsylvania, ss:

Personally appeared before me, a justice of the peace in and for the aforesaid county, David Williams, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the foregoing statements are true and correct, as he verily believes.

Sworn to before me this 29th day of April, A. D. 1910.
[SEAL.] JOSEPH H. McGEE.
Justice of the Peace.

My commission expires first Monday in May, 1912.

Mr. RAINEY. I do not desire to comment on these affidavits at this time. They speak for themselves. The Bethlehem Co. has been specially favored with Government contracts, receiving in recent years more than its share of these contracts. I think, however, I might mention that George R. Sheldon, treasurer of the national Republican central committee, is a director in this company, and an investigation may show among the stockholders other names more prominent at the present time in national affairs than that of Mr. Sheldon.

I understand that the resolution presented by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] for the investigation of the Steel Trust in this country will not be pressed by him during the present sesssion. Only a few more days remain of Republican supremacy in this House. Attempts to investigate frauds against this Government perpetrated by Sugar Trust thieves and by steel companies have not met with enthusiastic support on the other side of this House, but when the Sixty-second Congress convenes it will convene with a Democratic majority of 64, with a Democratic Speaker presiding over it, with the majority of all the committees composed of Democrats, and I promise at that time to ask my friend from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to make his resolution for the investigation of the Steel Trust broad enough to include a searching investigation into the question of frauds perpetrated by the steel companies upon this Government. I have every reason to believe that under a Democratic House there will be other investigations which will lead two years from now to a more complete and thorough and overwhelming repudiation of the Republican Party at the polls than the repudiation of November last. [Applause.]

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY) there were—ayes 90, noes 69.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, the impression has been given that the United States Government is paying an exorbitant price for its armor, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], who has just taken his seat, holds out the hope that by throwing open the doors we may get cheaper armor from abroad.

Mr. RAINEY. And better armor.

Mr. ROBERTS. And now, as an answer to both of those statements, I want to give to the committee the prices that foreign Governments are paying for armor as compared with the prices we pay. The first figures I shall read are for the average of all armor and the second figures the price paid for Krupp armor in each of the countries named.

These are the latest prices paid by naval powers, as given in the Navy Year Book of 1910. Japan pays $400 per ton on an average for all armor and $400 for Krupp armor, Austria pays $440 for all and $557 for Krupp, Italy pays $521 for all and $550 for Krupp, Germany pays $450 for all and $450 for Krupp, France pays $569 for all and $572 for Krupp, England pays $525 for all and $525 for Krupp.

Now, gentlemen will note the extravagant price paid by the United States for its armor! The average of all armor purchased by the United States is $430 a ton. The lowest price paid by any nation for Krupp armor is $400 a ton, and that nation is Japan. Only one nation, only one maritime power, is getting armor cheaper than the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. THOMAS of Ohio). The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make just one or two observations with reference to this amendment. What I wish to say is simply this: If the gentleman who last addressed the House is correct, and our steel manufacturers give us the cheapest steel armor in the world, then it can do no harm to give the United States the right to get cheaper armor if it is possible. In fact, if this argument shows that it can not be gotten cheaper elsewhere, why do gentlemen desire to put in a restriction there that would prevent us from getting it cheaper in case it could be gotten cheaper abroad? It may be that the Steel Trust has the exclusive privilege of making that profit out of the United States Government. If we can get the armor cheaper elsewhere it will do no harm to let us try. If we can get it cheaper elsewhere, the friends of the Government ought to insist that we should get it.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is one of the most important amendments offered during the consideration of this bill. The question is whether we shall be left bound in the meshes of the United States Steel Trust in such a position that it can say, "Here is the victim; take what you will," or whether we shall be allowed to buy more cheaply our needed supplies of armor. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY) there were—ayes 90, noes 69.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The limit of cost, exclusive of armor and armament, of the battleship Florida, authorized by the naval appropriation act approved May 13, 1908, to be built in a Government navy yard, is hereby increased from $6,000,000 to $6,400,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order on the paragraph, so that an amendment is not now in order.

Mr. MANN. The Chair will notice that there is a limit of cost fixed upon this, and this paragraph proposes to increase the limit, which is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The limit of cost was fixed in the last appropriation bill at $6,000,000?

Mr. FOSS. It was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That part of the naval appropriation act approved June 24, 1910, under "Increase of the Navy," which reads as follows: "and the contract for the construction of said vessels shall contain a provision requiring said vessels to be built in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled 'An act relating to the limitation of hours for daily service of laborers and mechanics employed on public works for the United States and the District of Columbia, approved August 1, 1892,'" is hereby repealed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That part of the naval appropriation act of June 24, 1910, under "Increase of the Navy," which reads as follows: "Provided always, That one of the battleships herein authorized shall be constructed in one of the navy yards," is hereby repealed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was on his feet to make the point of order before the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] rose, so the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FOSS. I admit the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will report the next paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That part of the naval appropriation act of June 24, 1910, under "Increase of the Navy," which reads as follows: "Provided, That not more than one of the battleships provided for in this act shall be built by the same contracting party," is hereby repealed.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to cause to be constructed by private contract at a cost not to exceed $1,000,000 the one fleet collier authorized by the naval appropriation act approved May 13, 1908, designated to be built in such Government yard on the Pacific coast as the Secretary of the Navy shall direct.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move——

Mr. HOBSON. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HOBSON. To come in at the end as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 63, after line 19, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"No part of any sum appropriated by this act shall be used for the purchase of projectiles until $350,000 of the amount available for the purchase of projectiles is used for the purchase or manufacture of shell of such proven design as will carry under tested gun pressures of not less than 30,000 pounds per square inch explosive charges of not less than 150 pounds weight, of either the explosives now in use, in the naval service, or of explosive gelatin."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment seems to direct the Secretary of the Navy to make a specific expenditure of money for a certain purpose. The Chair thinks it is legislation and sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 63, after line 19, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"High-explosive shell, capable of carrying explosive gelatin under usual gun pressure, in charges of not less than 150 pounds, $350,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. I wish to discuss that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order that the gentleman makes?

Mr. STAFFORD. The point of order is that it is not germane to this part of the bill. There is a provision of the bill that has already been passed relating to projectiles, and it is out of order in this portion of the bill. If any member of the committee has the privilege of offering additional amendments at the close of the bill to that which has been covered in prior parts of the bill, there will be no limit at all to the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will look at the bill he will see that at various places in it there are provisions relating to the question of armor and ammunition, and there are various appropriations at various places for the same bureau. This simply, at the end of the bill, makes an appropriation for high-explosive projectiles, that is all; just like smokeless powder, or anything of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the attention of the Chair to page 15, to the provision for ordnance and ordnance stores.

Mr. MANN. Under the head of Bureau of Ordnance.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will look at page 17 he will find another provision there. He will find further on, in various parts of the bill, appropriations for various materials and works under each particular bureau.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair will see by an examination of the bill that from line 5, page 15, down to line 6 on page 19 are the provisions under the Bureau of Ordnance which cover all the ordnance material, and the only place where this amendment would have been in order is under the head of Bureau of Ordnance covering various provisions in relation to the ordnance experiments with ordnance and the equipment of the naval militia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the gentleman from Illinois if he thinks this amendment could have been offered to paragraph on page 61, armor and armament.

Mr. MANN. I think not; this is ordnance.

Mr. HOBSON. So is armor and armament. The armor must meet certain ordnance tests.

Mr. MANN. So must a battleship; but it does not make a battleship ordnance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MANN. The funnel of a battleship has to meet certain requirements, but it is not ordnance.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, we are now authorizing for new construction in the Navy ships of various types. In the building of these ships we require various material—armor and armament, equipment, ammunition, and other things. We have appropriations for armor and armament, and it is perfectly germane to make appropriation there for the high-explosive projectiles comprised in the ammunition. I do not say that it is usual. I intended and, in fact, I did introduce the amendment in another form on page 15. I recognize that. But it was ruled out on a point of order.

Now, then, I have offered it where I do not think it would be subject to a point of order, and I put it in in connection with the new construction, because it will be used with the new construction. It will be part of the ammunition that goes on the ships which are provided for in the increase of the Navy. I do not maintain that it is usual to put it on at this time, but I maintain that it is germane. There is no reason under the practice or the rules of the House why it may not be put on at this place, because it will be used just as much as the armor and armament here provided will be used on these new ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is familiar with the rule that an amendment inserted as an additional clause or paragraph must be germane to the portion of the bill where it is offered.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the Chair hear me? I do not think the Chairman heard the last part of my discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment which has been offered to the provision, beginning on page 15, is not germane, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to follow line 15.

The CHAIRMAN. Line 15, page 63, has been passed, and unless the gentleman obtains unanimous consent the amendment can not be offered.

Mr. STANLEY. I understood that that paragraph had just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The last paragraph has been read.

Mr. STANLEY. Then I will offer the amendment after line 19.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 19, page 63, insert:

"Provided, That no part of any sum herein appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of structural steel, ship plates, armor, armament, or machinery from any persons, firms, or corporations who have combined or conspired to monopolize the interstate or foreign commerce of the United States, or the commerce between the States and any Territory, or the District of Columbia, in any of the articles aforesaid, and no purchase of structural steel, ship plates, or machinery shall be made at a price in excess of a reasonable profit above the actual cost of manufacture; and no purchase of armor or armament shall be made at a price in excess of 100 per cent above the actual cost of manufacture."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point or order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky on the point of order.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is plainly a limitation upon the sum provided to be expended in this bill, and is germane to the paragraph beginning on line 16—

That no part of any sum appropriated by this act shall be used for any expense of the Navy Department at Washington unless specific authority is given by law for such expenditure.

This matter has been repeatedly ruled on before. Will the Chair kindly indicate what part of that amendment he thinks is not germane, and I shall direct my remarks to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say that it seems to the Chair that this affects existing contracts and everything of that kind as drawn.

Mr. STANLEY. Then I will ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment so as to provide against that. I will amend the amendment, if I may be permitted to do so, in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to amend his amendment in the manner indicated, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment: "But the limitation shall in no case apply to any existing contract," so that it will read:

"After line 19, page 63, insert:

"'Provided, That no part of any sum herein appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of structural steel, ship plates, armor, armament, or machinery from any persons, firms, or corporations who have combined or conspired to monopolize the interstate or foreign commerce of the United States, or the commerce between the States and any Territory or the District of Columbia, in any of the articles aforesaid, and no purchase of structural steel, ship plates, or machinery shall be made at a price in excess of a reasonable profit above the actual cost of manufacture. And no purchase of armor or armament shall be made at a price in excess of 100 per cent above the actual cost of manufacture. But this limitation shall in no case apply to any existing contract.'"

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to go in at the end of the bill, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. MANN (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment. It has been read far enough to indicate what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment printed in the RECORD and to extend my remarks upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

After the last paragraph, on page 63, add the following:

"That a joint committee is hereby created, to be called the 'Committee on Iron and Steel Combinations and Monopolies,' to be composed of nine Members of the House of Representatives and nine Members of the Senate of the United States, five members from the majority and four members from the minority of each House, and to be elected by ballot of each House.

"That it shall be the duty of said committee, and it is hereby directed, to make an investigation and inquiry of the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the Attorney General, and any other persons for the purpose of ascertaining whether, since the year of 1897, there have occurred violations of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890, the various interstate-commerce acts, by individuals or corporations engaged in the iron and steel business, which violations have not been prosecuted, dealt with, or lawfully disposed of by the executive officers of the Government; and if any such violations are disclosed, said committee is directed to report the facts and circumstances to the House, with bills requiring appropriate action to be taken by such executive officers; and said committee shall also report any further legislation which it may consider advisable for reenforcing the acts of Congress aforesaid and more effectually punishing future violations thereof. Said committee is hereby specially directed to investigate the United States Steel Corporation, its organization and operations, and if in connection therewith violations of law as aforesaid are disclosed, to report the same and a bill requiring action to be taken thereon.

"Said committee shall inquire whether said Steel Corporation has had any relations or affiliations tending toward violations of law with the Pennsylvania Steel Co., the Cambria Steel Co., the Lackawanna Steel Co., or any other iron or steel company nominally independent, and whether through any such agencies said Steel Corporation is engaged under contract in furnishing to the Government armor for vessels of the Navy, and if so, to what extent, and whether the prices paid have been fixed under any competition, and whether the prices are fair and reasonable or are exorbitant.

"The committee is authorized to sit during the sessions or recess of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem desirable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summons and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ a disbursing officer and such secretaries, experts, stenographers, messengers, and other assistants as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes for which said committee was created. The committee shall have the power, through subcommittee or otherwise, to examine witnesses and to make such investigations and examinations, in this or other countries, of the subjects committed to their charge as they shall deem necessary, and shall report to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress at the earliest date practicable.

"That a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this amendment and to pay the necessary expenses of the committee and its members is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said appropriation shall be immediately available and shall be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said committee, which audit and order shall be conclusive and binding upon all departments as to the correctness of the accounts of such committee."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire now, if I may be permitted, to express the thought that by reason of the action taken this afternoon on the various amendments it is my opinion that the effect will be to cause an additional appropriation next year of between eight and nine millions of dollars to carry out the program of the past year and of this present bill. I want simply to make that statement, in order that additional appropriations shall not be charged up to the next Congress.

Mr. MANN. Why not? It is charged up to the Members of the next Congress on the Democratic side.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add to the statement which has just been made by the gentleman from Tennessee by saying that in my judgment the Committee of the Whole House, in perfecting the legislation recommended to this committee by the Naval Committee has added between eight and ten millions of dollars to the construction of ships, authorized in this bill and heretofore authorized.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 32212, the naval appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote asked on any amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no request.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman withhold his motion.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] and myself desire that we should not take a vote upon the bill this evening.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. FOSS. I will.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., AS SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted a privileged report (No. 2211) from the Committee on Ways and Means on the bill (H. R. 29708) to constitute Birmingham, in the State of Alabama, a subport of entry, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SMALL, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for an indefinite period on account of sickness in family.

DAM ACROSS NAMAKAN LAKE AT KETTLE FALLS, MINN.

The bill (H. R. 32340) to authorize the Rainy River Improvement Co. to construct a dam across the outlet of Namakan Lake at Kettle Falls, St. Louis County, Minn., by unanimous consent was ordered laid on the table.

REQUEST FROM THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following request from the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 288) for the creation of police and firemen's relief fund, to provide for the retirement of members of the police and fire department, to establish a method of procedure for such retirement, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is granted.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL REPORT ON THE DISEASES OF THE HORSE.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I report back House joint resolution 286, from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution (H. Rept. No. 2212).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed and bound in cloth 100,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse, the same to be first revised and brought to date under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture; 70,000 copies for use of the House of Representatives, 30,000 copies for use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 10476. An act for the relief of Passed Asst. Paymaster Edwin M. Hacker; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SPECIAL REPORT ON DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I also report back House joint resolution 287 from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution (H. Rept. No. 2213).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed and bound in cloth 100,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, the same to be first revised and brought to date, under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, 70,000 copies for use of the House of Representatives and 30,000 copies for use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until 11 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, February 22, 1911.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 22, 1911.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the God of our fathers, we rejoice in the return of this day, sacred to the memory of him who, in Thy providence, was the father of our country. Through the labors and the pains, through the hopes and the fears of the elder days, Thou hast brought us to this year of grace, bestowing upon us on the way blessings unnumbered and undeserved. Other men have labored, and we have entered into their labors. The little one has become a thousand and the small one a strong Nation, even an exceeding excellence and a joy of many generations. And for this great good whom shall we thank, in Thy name, but him who has become to us a model of public virtue and an example of private character? As again his words speak to us through the centuries, grant unto us attentive ears and obedient hearts.

We pray Thee, our Father, to bless our country. May peace be within her walls and prosperity within her palaces. For brethren and for companions' sakes, we now say, Peace be within thee, O blessed land! May they prosper who love thee!

Defend us, we pray Thee, against all violence from without and from all discord within. Write Thy commandments upon the hearts of this people, and teach us to love Thy law. So may we go from strength to strength, and ever be that happy Nation whose God is the Lord.

And as Thou wast with our sires, so be Thou with their sons and with our children, now and forever more. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. BROWN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with a resolution adopted by the Senate many years ago, Washington's Farewell Address will now be read to the Senate. It will be read by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. YOUNG], whom the Chair has heretofore designated for that purpose.

Mr. YOUNG read the address, as follows:

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise and as an instructive example in our annals that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead; amidst appearances sometimes dubious; vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging; in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution which is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively, though often covertly and insidiously, directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affection. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discrimination. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvements of interior communications by land and water will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one Nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interuption of their peace by foreign nations, and what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same governments, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—northern and southern, Atlantic and western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerts. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the Nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common councils and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which may impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the State, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

The spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the Government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into the different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace; but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burthen which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence frequent collisions; obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation a commendable deference of public opinion or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorites are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not legally hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interests, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world, so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But, in my opinion, it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice and by that of your Representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take and was bound in duty and interest to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerant powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanely speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after 45 years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GO: WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, September 17, 1796.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 32767. An act for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker Acts, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, with amendments, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 8457. An act to restore to the public domain certain lands withdrawn for reservoir purposes in Millard County Utah;

S. 9443. An act providing for the naturalization of the wife and minor children of insane aliens making homestead entries under the land laws of the United States;

S. 9903. An act to authorize the Sheridan Railway & Light Co. to construct and operate railway, telegraph, telephone, electric power, and trolley lines through the Fort Mackenzie Military Reservation, and for other purposes;

S. 9904. An act granting certain rights of way on the Fort D. A. Russell Military Reservation at Cheyenne, Wyo., for railroad and county road purposes;

S. 10011. An act for establishing a light and fog-signal station on the San Pedro Breakwater, Cal.;

S. 10015. An act for rebuilding and improving the present light and fog signal at Lincoln Rock, Alaska, or for building another light and fog-signal station upon a different site near by;

S. 10177. An act to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Establishment, and for other purposes;

S. 10318. An act authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant further extensions of time within which to make proof on desert-land entries;

S. 10596. An act to authorize the Rainy River Improvement Co. to construct a dam across the outlet of Namakan Lake at Kettle Falls, in St. Louis County, Minn.; and

S. J. Res. 132. Joint resolution authorizing the delivering to the commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans of one or two dismounted bronze cannon.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 24212. An act to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes to provide a compensation of $100 per month, with fuel and quarters, for the superintendent of the Arlington (Va.) National Cemetery;

H. R. 27298. An act relating to homestead entries in the former Siletz Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon;

H. R. 31806. An act to amend section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, being an act to amend an act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon United States commissioners over offenses committed on a portion of the permanent Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, Ark.;"

H. R. 32213. An act to authorize the city of Portsmouth, N. H., to construct a bridge across the Piscataqua River;

H. J. Res. 287. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of 100,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

The message further returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 288) for the creation of the police and firemen's relief fund, to provide for the retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such retirement, and for other purposes.

SENATOR FROM OHIO.

Mr. DICK presented the credentials of ATLEE POMERENE, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Ohio a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1911, which were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 5.

A memorial to Congress for adoption by the House of Representatives and Senate, now in session, pertaining to protection of manufacturing industries in States in which the interstate-commerce laws at this time render ineffective protection to said manufacturing industries.

Whereas the manufacturers of Oregon and the home industries of this State are made to suffer through the lack of protection afforded on account of the rulings of the courts in reference to the interstate-commerce laws; and

Whereas the State of Oregon is being flooded with goods and with merchandise which, being made in any penitentiary, prison, reformatory, or other like institutions, are proving to be to the detriment of the home industries of this State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the State senate and the house of representatives now assembled do present this, a memorial, to Congress, requesting that Congress do protect the various States' industries by providing a law that all such penitentiary and penal made goods be stamped, labeled, or marked by the institution making such goods with the name of the institution, the date of manufacture, and that such goods or merchandise be so stamped, labeled, or marked before leaving such institution for interstate shipment; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Oregon's United States Senators and Representatives.

Adopted by the house February 6, 1911.

JOHN P. RUSK, Speaker of the House.

Concurred in by the senate February 14, 1911.

BEN SELLING, President of the Senate.

STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, F. W. Benson, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 5 with the original thereof, which was adopted by the house February 6, 1911, and concurred in by the senate February 14, 1911, and that it is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol, at Salem, Oreg., this 16th day of February, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 8.

To the Congress of the United States, greeting:

Whereas numerous volunteer regiments who enlisted for the War with Spain in 1898 that were sent to the Philippine Islands and did valiant service there in suppressing the Philippine insurrection after the treaty of peace with Spain was signed were returned to the United States and mustered out without being paid the customary travel pay allowed soldiers under similar conditions;

Therefore we, your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, earnestly pray your honorable body to enact into law a bill for the purpose of giving travel pay to all volunteer soldiers who remained in the Philippine Islands doing service after the treaty of peace with Spain was signed and who have not heretofore obtained the same.

Adopted by the house February 6, 1911.

JOHN P. RUSK, Speaker of the House.

Concurred in by the senate February 14, 1911.

BEN SELLING, President of the Senate.

STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, F. W. Benson, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify: That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 8 with the original thereof, which was adopted by the house February 6, 1911, and concurred in by the senate February 14, 1911, and that it is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 16th day of February, A. D. 1911.

[SEAL.] F. W. BENSON, Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 13.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives, Congress of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, would respectfully and earnestly represent to your honorable body that the pensions now granted under existing laws to the veterans of the Civil War are, by reason of advancing age and increasing infirmities, inadequate to the deserts and needs of these old soldiers who are so rapidly passing away.

We therefore urge upon your honorable body the passage of House bill 29346 (the Sulloway bill) granting increased pensions to the survivors of the Civil War commensurate with their increasing age and infirmities.

The number of survivors of the Civil War is rapidly growing smaller and their ranks are fast becoming depleted, and we feel that their services to the Nation have been sufficient to warrant the payment to them of the pension provided for in this bill.

It is hereby directed that a copy of this memorial, duly signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, and attested by the chief clerks of the two houses, be immediately forwarded to each of the Oregon Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted by the house February 13, 1911.

JOHN P. RUSK, Speaker of the House.

Attest:

W. F. DRAGER, Chief Clerk of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 14, 1911.

BEN SELLING, President of the Senate.

Attest:

E. H. FLAGG, Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. DEPEW submitted an amendment relative to the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers of the Navy, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the limit of cost, exclusive of armor and armament, of the battleship Florida from $6,000,000 to $6,400,000, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PILES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the purchase of a site for the Pacific coast torpedo station, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 for the construction of a walk on Burwell Avenue, navy yard, Puget Sound, State of Washington, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,565,000 for the construction of an armory building for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 for the purchase of a site for a public park in northeast Washington, D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NOTICE OF MEMORIAL ADDRESSES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday, the 25th, at 5 o'clock, I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions commemorative of the life and character of Hon. WILLIAM S. LOVERING and Hon. CHARLES Q. TIRRELL, late Members of the House of Representatives from Massachusetts.

I will also take this occasion, Mr. President, to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of executive business at the earliest moment possible before adjournment to-day.

LAND IN PENSACOLA, FLA.

Mr. FLETCHER. On yesterday the Senate passed House bill 31987, providing for the releasing of the claim of the United States Government to arpent lot No. 44 in the old city of Pensacola, Fla. The House having passed a similar Senate bill, I move that the votes by which the House bill was read the third time and passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the House bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN MILLARD COUNTY, UTAH.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 8457) to restore to the public domain certain lands withdrawn for reservoir purposes in Millard County, Utah, which was to strike out line 3 down to and including the word "to," in line 4, and to insert "That the President may, in his discretion."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES RIVER DAM, MISSOURI.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 574) to authorize J. W. Vance, L. L. Allen, C. F Helwig, and H. V. Worley, of Pierce City, Mo.; A. B. Durnil, D. H. Kemp, Sig Soloman, J. J. Davis, S. A. Chappell, and W. M. West, of Monett, Mo.; M. L. Coleman, M. T. Davis, Jared R. Woodfill, jr., J. H. Jarrett, and William H. Standish, of Aurora, Lawrence County, Mo.; and L. S. Meyer, F. S. Heffernan, Robert A. Moore, William H. Johnson, J. P. McCammon, M. W. Colbaugh, and W. H. Schreiber, of Springfield, Greene County, Mo., to construct a dam across the James River, in Stone County, Mo., and to divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the said river again to create electric power, which was, on page 2, line 20, to strike out "twenty-second" and insert "twenty-third."

Mr. STONE. The only change made in the bill as it passed the Senate was to strike out the date, a wrong date, of the passage of the act referred to in the bill. As it appeared in the bill, the act was passed on the 22d day of the month. In fact, it was the 23d day of the month, and the House so amended it. That is the only change. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF DISMOUNTED BRONZE CANNON.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) authorizing the delivering to the commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans one or two dismounted bronze cannon, which was in line 6, after the word "Spain," to strike out down to and including the word "insurrection," in line 7.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10318) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant further extensions of time within which to make proof on desert-land entries, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, grant to the entryman under the desert-land laws in the counties of Benton, Yakima, and Klickitat, in the State of Washington, a further extension of the time within which they are required to make final proof, provided such entryman shall, by his corroborated affidavit filed in the land office of the district where such land is located, show to the satisfaction of the Secretary that because of unavoidable delay in the construction of irrigation works intended to convey water to the land embraced in his entry he is, without fault on his part, unable to make proof of the reclamation and cultivation of said lands as provided by law within the time limited therefor; but such extension shall not be granted for a period of more than three years, and this act shall not affect contests initiated for a valid existing reason.

And to amend the title so as to read:

"An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant further extensions of time within which to make proof on desert-land entries in the counties of Benton, Yakima, and Klickitat."

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment with an amendment in line 2, page 1, before the word "entryman," to strike out "the" and insert "any."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington moves to concur in the amendment with the amendment which he has stated.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington what change that makes. Does it convert it from an act of limited application to one of general application?

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator mean the amendment I propose?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. The House amendment read: "That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, grant to the entryman under," and so forth. I have moved to strike out the word "the" and to insert "any."

Mr. HEYBURN. Are the words "the entryman" applied to enumerated entrymen previously stated in the bill?

Mr. JONES. No; there are no other entrymen mentioned in the bill, but it limits it apparently to one single entryman when the intention of the bill was to grant to certain desert-land entrymen in three counties in the State the right to have a further extension.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington to concur in the House amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT STATION ON SAN PEDRO BREAKWATER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10011) for establishing a light and fog-signal station on San Pedro Breakwater, Cal., which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a light and fog-signal station on the San Pedro Breakwater, Cal., at a cost not to exceed $36,000.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL AT LINCOLN ROCK, ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10015) for rebuilding and improving the present light and fog signal at Lincoln Rock, Alaska, or for building another light and fog-signal station upon a different site near by, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to rebuild and improve the present light and fog signal at Lincoln Rock, Alaska, or establish a light and fog-signal station upon a different site near by, at a cost not to exceed $25,000.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10177) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Establishment, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. DEPEW, and Mr. SIMMONS conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAMAKAN LAKE DAM, MINNESOTA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10396) to authorize the Rainy River Improvement Co. to construct a dam across the outlet of Namakan Lake at Kettle Falls, in St. Louis County, Minn., which was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "Minnesota," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 9443) providing for the naturalization of the wife and minor children of insane aliens making homestead entries under the land laws of the United States, which was, in line 7, after the word "the," to insert "other."

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bill and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and refered to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 24212. An act to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes to provide a compensation of $100 per month, with fuel and quarters, for the superintendent of the Arlington (Va.) National Cemetery; and

H. J. Res. 276. Joint resolution modifying certain laws relating to the military records of certain soldiers and sailors.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 32213. An act to authorize the city of Portsmouth, N. H., to construct a bridge across the Piscataqua River;

H. R. 32341. An act to authorize the St. Paul Railway Promotion Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near Nininger, Minn.;

H. R. 32400. An act to authorize the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Boundbrook Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Delaware River from Lower Makefield Township, Bucks County, Pa., to Ewing Township, Mercer County, N. J.; and

H. R. 32440. An act authorizing the Moline, East Moline & Watertown Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the South Branch of the Mississippi River, from a point in the village of Watertown, Rock Island County, Ill., to the island known as Campbells Island.

H. R. 27298. An act relating to homestead entries in the former Siletz Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 31806. An act to amend section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, being an act to amend an act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon United States commissioners over offenses committed on a portion of the permanent Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, Ark.," was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The following joint resolutions were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Printing:

H. J. Res. 286. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of 100,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse; and

H. J. Res. 287. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of 100,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

KANSAS NATIONAL FOREST LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 32571) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Kansas National Forest, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. STONE. An exactly similar bill has been favorably reported from the Senate Committee on Public Lands and is now on the calendar. The bill covers only one page. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of consolidating the forest lands belonging to the United States within the Kansas National Forest, be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, to exchange lands belonging to the United States which are part of the Kansas National Forest for privately owned lands lying within the exterior limits of the said national forest: Provided, That the lands so exchanged shall be equal in area and substantially equal in value: And provided further, That upon the consummation of such exchange the land deeded to the United States thereunder shall become a part of the Kansas National Forest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if this bill has not eliminated the limitations upon the place where those lands might be selected. I reported the similar bill from the Committee on Public Lands to the Senate. There seems to be no limitation as to the area within which the lieu lands may be selected.

Mr. STONE. The bill states that they are entirely land within the exterior limits of this particular reserve.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but as to where the lieu lands may be selected. I think from listening to the bill that that provision is not in it. We have not been in the habit for several years of passing any bill authorizing the exchange of lands and permitting the selection of the lieu lands outside of the State in which the lands were for which the lieu lands were taken.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER], who is waiting to address the Senate, be permitted now to go on with his remarks.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to that, but I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be retained on the Vice President's table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hold the bill on the table. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further business of the morning hour. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the request, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not put the request just as the Senator from Maine made it. The Senator from Maine asked unanimous consent that the Senator from Illinois be now permitted to proceed. It seemed to the Chair that that might be a modification of the present unanimous-consent agreement, so the Chair put the request that the morning business be considered closed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have a resolution which I very much desire to offer this morning if the Senator from Maine will wait until I have offered it.

Mr. HALE. I will yield to the Senator for that purpose. After that I shall ask that my request be put.

BATTLESHIPS FOR ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 364), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate a report on the following matters:

(1) Copies of any and all orders which may have been issued by the Secretary of the Navy or his subordinates and of all communications received or sent by the Navy Department pertaining to the construction in private shipyards of two battleships for the account of the Argentine Republic.

(2) What, if any, plans of guns, gun mounts, and other appliances pertaining to the armament of battleships the property of the Government of the United States in the custody of the Navy Department have been loaned, transmitted, or communicated to either the representative of the Argentine Republic or to representatives of any shipbuilding company?

(3) What, if any, of such plans cover devices which hitherto through patents or secrecy have been the exclusive property of the United States Government?

(4) What, if any, work has been done in the navy yard at Washington or elsewhere by any officials or employees of the Navy Department, civilians or otherwise, to aid in the construction and armament of the two battleships being built in this country for the Argentine Republic?

(5) If any such plans have been so divulged or if such work has been performed by employees of the Navy Department, by whose authority has such action been taken and such work performed?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit another resolution upon the same subject, which I ask may be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 365), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of any written communications and report upon any verbal communications which may have passed between the State Department and any other department of the Government of the United States, or between the State Department and any department or representative of the Argentine Republic, and any other communications, written or verbal, which may have been issued or received by the State Department pertaining to the construction and armament in this country of two battleships for the Argentine Republic.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that both resolutions go over until to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolutions will lie on the table.

Mr. KEAN. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that he change the phraseology in the last resolution, in regard to the Secretary of State, to "requested" instead of "directed." It is not a usual thing to direct the Secretary of State.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, considering the nature of the resolution, I can not consent to make the change, much as I should like to do so.

Mr. HALE. The resolution is right as it is.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think so.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I now renew my request that the Senator from Illinois be allowed to proceed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none. Morning business is closed.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to certain charges relating to the election of WILLIAM LORIMER, a Senator from the State of Illinois, by the legislature of that State, made in obedience to Senate resolution 264.

Mr. LORIMER and Mr. HALE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. LORIMER. I do.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois will permit me to suggest that, if he desires a place to address the Senate to better advantage than the far corner of the Chamber where his seat is located he come to some seat here in the center of the Senate.

Mr. LORIMER. If a Senator occupying a seat near the center aisle will grant me the privilege of occupying his place I shall be very glad to comply with the suggestion.

Mr. HALE. It is very difficult to hear the Senator from Illinois from where he now stands.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The Senator from Illinois may have my seat.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida offers the Senator from Illinois his seat.

Mr. LORIMER advanced to Mr. TALIAFERRO's seat.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. President, I understand that the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] was discusing the Illinois election yesterday and failed to conclude his remarks. I prefer to go on with my remarks at this time, but if the Senator from Indiana desires to conclude his remarks before I proceed I shall be very glad to yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator can proceed. Besides, he does so under a unanimous consent agreement, and it would not be possible for me to change it.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. President, many questions have been suggested by the statements of Senators in the debate on this case. Those suggestions concern mostly the actual condition of my election to this body.

Did I organize the Illinois Legislature against Hopkins?

Did I make Shurtleff speaker in order to be elected Senator?

Did I make Lee O'Neil Browne my agent—my corrupt agent?

Why did I stay in Springfield during the contest?

For what purpose did I talk to Shephard in the speaker's room?

Why did the Democrats vote for me?

These are some of the questions suggested by the statements of Senators in opposition to the committee report or openly put by them in the course of debate. To these questions many sorts of answers have been given by my opponents. Some of those answers have been fanciful theories, some mere guesses and surmises. There is only one kind of answer that should stand or that should count in this case; that is the plain matter-of-fact simple truth. It is this matter of fact, this truth, that I propose to lay before the Senate to-day.

I rise to-day simply to tell, as one who lived through it all, exactly how my election at Springfield was brought about, to answer the foregoing questions with the facts that alone can answer them correctly.

There has been an effort made to cover this whole case with a cloud of suspicion; to make it appear that some man with a powerful intellect, a powerful ability to organize men, by some well-laid scheme prepared a plan to organize the legislature for the purpose of defeating Senator Hopkins and to elect a United States Senator. Some Senators have intimated that that man with the powerful mind and wonderful genius of organization was no other person than myself. I propose to address myself to the statements made by those Senators and on which they expect to build the structure that will create in the minds of Senators in this body the impression that I was not only, as they say, elected by corrupt practices, but that I am the man that was responsible for them.

To begin with, Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] in his statement said:

> It is also clear from the record that Mr. LORIMER was determined to organize the legislature against Hopkins and Gov. Deneen.

Anybody who knows aught of the organization of that legislature would not make that statement. The facts are that I was not determined to organize the legislature against Gov. Deneen, and, if I had been so determined, under the conditions existing at that time, it would have been impossible for me to do so. To organize a legislature with the aid of Democrats and Republicans is a matter that can not be done just by a wish or a thought. It requires constant effort to bring about a condition of that sort, which Senators would have us understand was a well-defined plan in the head of just one man.

It happened that on the 15th of September I was stricken with illness, and from that day until November I was unable to leave my home. My physicians would not even permit friends to call upon me. I did not leave home until just a few days before the general November election, when I went to my office where I might be seen for an hour during each day in order that the public might know that there was hope of my recovery, as it had been stated in the congressional district in which I was a candidate for reelection that LORIMER was about to die, and "they had better elect somebody who would be alive when the governor issues the certificate of election."

Immediately after the election I took the train for the Pacific coast to go into the mountains for my health, and I traveled along the Pacific coast, and finally landed in the city of Portland. I remember well speaking for a few moments during my presence there to the Commercial Association of that city about waterway improvements, and the senior Senator from that State [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] was present at that meeting. A day or two after that I was again stricken, with blood poisoning; was operated upon, and lived in the Portland Hotel, until I was taken back to Chicago, accompanied almost the whole distance to my city by my surgeon. From there I returned to Washington, as will be shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the proceedings of the House of Representatives. There it can be found that I voted during the early part of that session. After the holidays, on the very day on which Mr. Shurtleff was elected speaker, I was in the House of Representatives, and the RECORD shows that I made a motion on the 7th day of January, the day following his election.

Edward Shurtleff was elected speaker of the house of representatives because of a condition that arose there, and if the same condition arose anywhere else in the country the result would have been the same. The governor of our State was very much opposed to the reelection of Mr. Shurtleff and he called in a few of the men, members of the State house of representatives, over whom he had much influence, and told them that they must organize that body by the election of some person speaker other than Edward Shurtleff. He told them that he did not care who was elected speaker, but that under no circumstances must any Republican vote for Edward Shurtleff, and if they did vote for him, he served notice on them that not one of them could expect to receive patronage at the hands of his administration; and he went even further than that.

He called in Representative Brady, who had pledged his support to Shurtleff for speaker, and told him unless he joined with the men who were trying to organize that body under his dictatorship, every man who was in the employ of the State on Brady's recommendation would be forthwith dismissed. In other words, the governor of our State undertook to dictate to the general assembly who should be its speaker.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LORIMER. I shall be very glad to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If that statement is a statement of the fact, I would like to ask why it was not put in the record, and why Gov. Deneen was not summoned as a witness, so that he could confront a statement of that kind and have the same opportunity to make reply to it that the Senator has opportunity to make the charge on this floor after the evidence is all closed.

Mr. LORIMER. I am quite unable to answer the question as the Senator would desire to have me do it, for the reason that, first, I was not a member of the committee that investigated the charges.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LORIMER. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think it only fair as a member of the committee to suggest that the Senator from Illinois is replying to statements made upon the floor of the Chamber, and not to statements made in Chicago at the hearings. Consequently he could not have anticipated the questions raised by Members here.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois further yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LORIMER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to have this understood now. If questions asked of the sitting Member are embarrassing because they are being asked now at this critical point in the case, and we are to refrain on that account from asking them, I want to know it, and I will try to observe the rule in that respect.

Mr. LORIMER. May I not say at the outset that I have no objection to any Senator asking any question that suggests itself to him at any time during the discussion of this question.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LORIMER. Yes.

Mr. BURROWS. May I suggest that the Senator from Illinois be permitted to make his statement in order, and then at the close if any Senator desires to ask questions it will be of course agreeable to him. But I think it is no more than fair to the Senator that he be permitted to make his statement without interruption.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just one word further——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois further yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LORIMER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On account of the importance of this matter I want to understand the situation. If the Senator from Illinois is simply making a statement in the form of an argument and not as a witness in the case, I want to know it. If he is making a statement which he desires to submit as evidence in this case, then it seems to me we should have the opportunity to cross-examine him if we desire.

Mr. LORIMER. Again I wish to state that while I appreciate the courtesy which the Senator from Michigan desires to have extended to me, that I may proceed with my remarks without interruption, I shall have no hesitancy at any point during the time I have the floor in answering any question that any Senator may see fit to ask.

I stated that I was in no way connected with the committee which investigated these charges and had no right to summon Mr. Deneen. During the whole investigation, from the day that I submitted the resolution last May to make this inquiry, no Senator, whether he be a member of the subcommittee, the whole committee, or any Senator in this body will say that I have ever suggested anything to him or made any appeal to him or in any way at any time tried to influence his judgment as to how he should vote in my case. And so I made no suggestions to the committee about who should be called. If the Senator from South Dakota is dissatisfied because the governor of our State was not called to refute these statements, I am not to blame for it. But it would have been impossible to refute this statement, because the cause for making it was not suggested to me until the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] made his speech upon this floor just a short time ago.

Mr. President, the Senator in his statement said that it was clear from the evidence that I was determined to organize the legislature for the purpose of defeating Senator Hopkins. I have in my hand a list of the Republican members of the house—24 in all—who voted for Mr. Shurtleff for speaker, and of the 24 Republicans who voted for Shurtleff for speaker 17 voted for Senator Hopkins for United States Senator—some of them one day, some of them a week, some a month, some for two months, and some of them voted for him on every ballot on which the roll was called, including the ballot on which I was elected.

If the theory be correct that I had been conjuring schemes to organize the legislature for dark-lantern purposes, as the Senator suggested, how can it be proven by the statement that I was trying to defeat Hopkins by making Shurtleff speaker when the journal of the house shows that 17 of the 24 Republicans who voted for Shurtleff also voted for Hopkins for United States Senator?

Mr. President, in order that there may be no trouble in verifying this statement, I ask permission to have the names printed in the RECORD in order that Senators may very easily consult the journal of the house and find from it whether or not this statement is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HOW REPUBLICANS WHO VOTED FOR SHURTLEFF FOR SPEAKER VOTED LATER ON FOR SENATOR.

Behrens	Hopkins.	Lane	Hopkins.
Bush	Hopkins.	Lederer	Mason.
Chiperfield	Hopkins.	McNichols	Hopkins.
Crawford	Hopkins.	Nelson	Hopkins.
Curran	Shurtleff.	Parker	Hopkins.
Dodgeon	Hopkins.	Schumacher	Hopkins.
Erby	Hopkins.	Shanahan	Shurtleff.
Gillespie	Hopkins.	Smejkal	Shurtleff.
Glade	Hopkins.	Stearns	Foss.
Hope	Hopkins.	Zaabel (died Jan. 13, 1909).
Ireland	Hopkins.	Zinger	Hopkins.
Kittleman	Hopkins.	Zipf	Foss.

Hopkins's vote, 17.

Mr. LORIMER. Suppose that the President of the United States—a President of the United States, I care not who he be—should call in the Senators of his party, tell them who he wanted for President pro tempore of the Senate, tell them how he wanted the Senate committees organized, tell them that unless they did his bidding they could get no patronage under his administration, and tell them that if they failed to do his bidding every last man employed by the Government on their recommendation should be driven from public employment. Suppose a President could fall so low as to undertake such a feat as that, and that he succeeded in getting into an organization a majority of the members of this body of his own party to carry out his orders to the exclusion of one man and those who were favorable to him; what do you suppose the Senators would do? What do you suppose party lines would accomplish? It would not take the Senators of this body one moment to make up their minds to cross the party lines and organize the Senate with men who they thought were fit to hold the different offices in the control of this body.

The men in our State did what any set of sensible, courageous men would do. They organized the body regardless of the wishes of the executive branch of the government. If the governor of our State had attended to his own business, said nothing to the members of the house, permitted them without coercion to go on and organize that body, Mr. Shurtleff would have been the choice of 90 per cent of its members, and he would have been elected in the Republican caucus by a unanimous vote. I call for the journal of the Illinois Assembly to justify that statement.

Edward Shurtleff was serving his fourth term in that body. He had twice been its speaker, elected twice before the time we are now discussing by the unanimous vote of his party in the Republican caucus and in the lower house. So, Mr. President, Edward Shurtleff, whom the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] would have you believe to be a vile and corrupt man, had twice before presided over the house; and, may I say, he was elected both times without help from me, even without my knowledge until I saw the reports in the paper.

He is not a speaker of my making. He was not a man of power because I gave it to him. I scarcely knew him when he was elected speaker of that body the first and the second time. He owes me nothing, not even support, for promotion to that great office in our State. I was not on more than speaking terms with him until I went to Springfield to secure legislation on the waterway. I could say no more to him than "How do you do, sir," until that time; and the idea that a man could work himself up through the world and become speaker of the house of representatives of that great State, without my aid, and at the same time be known as my political henchman, is the most absurd thing that I have ever known to be stated in this body or any other body in which I have ever served.

That I elected a bitter enemy of Hopkins and my henchman speaker is what the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] stated. The contrary is just the truth. Mr. Shurtleff would not have been a member of that general assembly but for the urgent request of Mr. Hopkins and his friends.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will kindly suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho? The Chair hears none. The unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. LORIMER. Mr. President, Mr. Shurtleff was a candidate for reelection at the earnest request of Senator Hopkins and the friends of Senator Hopkins. They have a rule in his senatorial district that is lived up to religiously, and always has been during the time that candidates were nominated by delegate conventions. A senator's term is for four years, and every time a senator's term expires it goes around to another county. So it was due to go to McHenry County, in which Mr. Shurtleff lived. A friend of Shurtleff was a candidate for senator. Mr. Shurtleff had pledged him his support, and because Mr. Hopkins and his friends knew that there would be a contest over the election of Senator and because they wanted well-informed and influential men in the State legislature when the senatorial election was to come up they pleaded with Mr. Shurtleff to become a candidate. He told them in response that he had given his word to support his friend for senator. They immediately went to this friend and pleaded with him to go to Shurtleff and ask him to become a candidate, which he did. It was on that request and on that release that he became a candidate again for the house.

As the campaign went on much talk was heard everywhere as to whether candidates would pay any attention to the advisory vote. May I not say to the Senator from South Dakota that it was generally the opinion of the people in our State that no candidate would heed the advisory vote unless it happened that he had the plurality or the majority.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LORIMER. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to understand the Senator. Does the Senator mean to say that Mr. Shurtleff was a supporter of Mr. Hopkins?

Mr. LORIMER. I will come to that in a moment, if the Senator will permit me to just go along a little further.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the Senator mean to distinguish the people of Illinois when he says that all the candidates there decided among themselves that they would disregard the vote of those people unless it happened to be in favor of the candidate?

Mr. LORIMER. I mean to say that the candidates did not intend to regard the primary vote. That is what I mean to say, and I mean to prove that by showing that every candidate before the primary, whether he got the majority or not, was a candidate and was voted for during the session of the general assembly on almost every ballot.

But that is not the point, Mr. President. I want to show that Mr. Shurtleff was a friend of Senator Hopkins. He lived in Senator Hopkins's congressional district. He had been for him as the candidate for Congress for 16 or 18 years. When Mr. Hopkins was elected to this body Mr. Shurtleff was in the legislature and was one of his campaign managers and voted for him and helped to elect him to this body. But after Mr. Shurtleff had become a candidate, as I was about to say, all candidates were looking out for themselves regardless of the result of the primary election, and in order to protect themselves Mr. Hopkins's friends went to Mr. Shurtleff and discussed with him the probability of some other person securing a majority or a plurality in the State, and they asked him what he would do under those circumstances. He said that he would abide by the result of the vote of the Republicans in his own legislative district. They asked him if he would write a letter to that effect. He said he would; and he did write the letter; and that was satisfactory to Mr. Hopkins and to his friends, because it was the identical thing that they wanted him to do.

Then the primary election came on. Mr. Hopkins and his friends were sure that Hopkins would get the primary vote in his congressional district, because he had represented the district in Congress for many, many years. But when the vote was cast it was learned that Mr. Hopkins was beaten in the district by Congressman Foss. When Mr. Shurtleff was consulted about what he would do, he stated that he had written a letter declaring to his constituents what he would do; that he had pledged himself to abide by the majority or the plurality of his district, and that he intended to keep his word and vote for Mr. Foss; and he voted for Mr. Foss on every roll call except three. On two roll calls he voted for Gov. Deneen, and on one roll call, the last, he voted to elect me to this body.

That is the story, and it is the everlasting truth about Mr. Shurtleff and as to his being a henchman of LORIMER.

Then, Mr. President, we go along just a little further in the speech, and we find this statement in the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]:

> The next move was to install Lee O'Neil Browne to the position of minority leader of the Democratic minority in the house.

Let us see how near to the facts that statement runs. Lee O'Neil Browne was elected minority leader, and he was elected minority leader after a contest infinitely more bitter within the lines of his own party than the one in which Mr. Shurtleff was concerned. Mr. Tippit, the other candidate of the Democratic members of the general assembly, was as much opposed to Mr. Browne's leadership as the Governor was to Mr. Shurtleff's leadership. The fight had gone on for many months, but at the end Mr. Browne was selected as the leader of the Democratic minority.

But, Mr. President, not one man of that minority was ever spoken to by me in behalf of Mr. Browne or anybody else, and no man was ever spoken to in behalf of Mr. Browne through anybody else for me.

The proof of it is apparent. If you read the journal of the joint session when I was elected to this body you will find there among the 53 Democrats that voted for me the name of Thomas Tippit and 16 of his followers. Suppose for an instant I had gone in with the power it would be made to appear, from the statement of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], I wielded in the Democratic party, that I had gone into their party affairs and undertaken to foist Mr. Browne on the shoulders of Mr. Tippit and his friends, would they have voted to send me to this body after I had been responsible for their defeat, their humiliation, and their probable political destruction?

When one comes to know all the history of the organization of the house of representatives, he finds that there was nothing in it that would justify the statement made upon this floor about my connection with Mr. Shurtleff's elevation to the speakership and my connection with Mr. Browne's elevation to the leadership of the minority of the Democratic party in my State.

Labored efforts have been made to show that I organized the legislature to defeat Gov. Deneen and Senator Hopkins in their united effort to return the latter to the Senate. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the facts. The first ballot for United States Senator was taken in the separate branches. In the senate Mr. Hopkins received a majority, and in the house he received 61 votes out of a total of 146. The following members of the house belonging to and cooperating with the Deneen faction cast their votes for candidates other than Senator Hopkins:

Abbey	Church	Hull	Price
Ap Madoc	Fulton	Maclean	Reynolds
Butts	Hagan	Pierson	Sollitt

The following members of the house, also of the Deneen faction, failed to respond to their names on the roll call:

Campbell	Scanlan	Ton

The presence, however, of these members on the following day, as shown by the roll call, shows at least that they were able to be there, had they been interested in securing the election of Senator Hopkins. In proof of the statement that the 15 members named above belonged to Gov. Deneen's faction, I invite an inspection of the journal of the Illinois House on the vote for the election of speaker, where it will be seen that they voted for Edward J. King, the governor's candidate. Had these Deneen followers voted for Mr. Hopkins, he would have received a majority of the votes of the house as well as of the senate, and there could have been no deadlock.

Here is the story in figures:

Total vote cast in house	146
Necessary to a choice	74
Voting for Senator Hopkins	61
Add Deneen votes indicated above	15
Making a total for Hopkins of	76
or a majority of	2

Now, Mr. President, we come to another very important branch of this discussion. Take the journal of the house, and what will you find there? Republican members of the lower house from the district I live in and with whom I am supposed to have influence voted for Mr. Hopkins, including the senator from the district. Every Republican member from the congressional district I represented voted for Senator Hopkins. The record will show that Schumacher and Kittleman and Cruikshank and Ball and McNichols, all from my congressional district, voted for Senator Hopkins.

Let me call your attention to the fact that Gov. Deneen is and was the father of the direct primary, and he traveled from one end of our State to the other urging upon the people to send members to the general assembly to make a direct primary vote the law of our State, and but for him it would not be on our statute books to-day. He used all the arguments that are used by the direct-primary advocates in favor of such a law. He was for it and he got it.

When the roll call was had in the separate branches of our general assembly, the first roll call on senatorship, what do we find by the journal? We find that every single member of that general assembly from Gov. Deneen's own legislative district voted for some person other than Senator Hopkins.

Senator Lundberg, Representative Church, and Representative Fulton, from Mr. Deneen's own district, two from his own ward and his own neighborhood, nominated through his influence and through the power of his organization, voted against Mr. Hopkins for United States Senator. Every member of his congressional district but one, Mr. Kowalski, voted against Hopkins, and Mr. Kowalski changed his vote the next day and never voted for him again. That is the truth, and that is what the house journal will demonstrate to any man who will take the time to make an investigation.

So, Mr. President, the simple statement of the truth does away with the house organization by and on the part of LORIMER to elect himself Senator and to promote, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] says, dark-lantern schemes; and that is what becomes of the statement that it was done to defeat Senator Hopkins.

But that is not all. There were other days on which votes were had for the election of United States Senator.

At the first meeting of the joint assembly:

Total number of votes cast was	199
Necessary to a choice	100
Hopkins received	89
Foss received	16
Mason received	6
Shurtleff received	12
Stringer received	76

There were present and voting on that day for candidates other than Senator Hopkins, 13 members of the general assembly, who were of the Deneen faction, viz:

Senators:
Hay	Olsen	Schmidt
Representatives:
Ap Madoc	Hagan	Price	Sollitt
Butts	Kowalski	Reynolds	Ton
Church	Maclean

Number of votes cast for Hopkins	89
Add the above named	13
	102
Necessary to a choice	100
Hopkins's majority	2

If the 13 members named above with whom Gov. Deneen had a controlling influence had voted that day for Senator Hopkins, he would have been elected on the first ballot taken in the joint assembly or on any succeeding ballot that day.

Mr. President, that is not only so of that roll call, but there were five roll calls on that day, and if Gov. Deneen and his friends and the men who were promoting or supposed to be promoting the candidacy of Senator Hopkins had voted for him he would have been elected on any ballot on that day.

As proof of this statement the record will show that the day did come when the men to whom I have referred did vote exactly as Gov. Deneen wanted them to vote. That was the day of the last roll call when I was elected to this body. Weeks before Gov. Deneen had told many of his friends to help elect me. They told me so. I told them I would not accept their support unless they told the governor that if they once pledged their support to me under no conditions would they ever break their word.

The day before the roll call on which I was elected the governor called these men into the mansion and into his office and told them that LORIMER must not be elected; that it would be better to have no election, to allow nobody to be elected, and to let the legislature adjourn without the selection of a United States Senator; and these men one after another stated to him:

> I have given my word to LORIMER; I will not break it. If you thought it wrong to elect him you should not have permitted me to become pledged to him with your consent.

These men gave me their support to the end.

Those of the Deneen faction who had promised me their support and who broke their word when the roll was called, and those the governor controlled who had not promised to support me, on the final roll call at the governor's suggestion, supported Hopkins. When the time arrived that he wanted to place them either in one column or the other, they went where the governor suggested they should go. So, Mr. President, it was not a prolonged fight to defeat Hopkins. Hopkins was beaten on the first day. Hopkins was beaten on the second day. After the first session of the joint assembly the question was no more about Hopkins, but it was who can, under these conditions, be elected to the United States Senate? That was the question from the first day and from the second day, and then began the effort to elect a United States Senator upon whom the Republicans could agree.

I talked with the governor every week I was in that city, and I urged for weeks and weeks that he himself become the candidate of the party. I told him I believed if he would take the place our party, rent asunder with factional strife, would be united. The lieutenant governor of our State is the son of Gov. Oglesby, who had been governor of our State two terms and served one term in this body. The name of Oglesby is cherished by every citizen of Illinois, I care not the party to which he belongs. Oglesby was nominated under a direct primary without any organization. The governor was against him and all the governor's organization was opposed to him. Ex-Gov. Yates was a candidate for governor and his friends opposed Oglesby. The result of it reminds me of a statement that I heard former Senator Mason make to a large mass meeting in Springfield immediately after McKinley was nominated for President. He said:

> All the politicians were against McKinley; all the men who have influence were against him; there was nobody for him but the people.

Oglesby was nominated by the people of the State without the support of any faction, and I believed, and other Republicans believed, that if Deneen was elected to this body and Oglesby became the governor, that he would unite the party and harmonize the differences of the factions, and we would be able to go to the polls with a solid front in the future as we had done in the past in our State.

I talked with the governor and labored with him until along about the 15th of March. About that time he said he felt that he could not take the place, but he led me to believe that, if the party could be united upon him, he would take the place. I asked him to send for the chairman of the State central committee, Mr. West, his close friend, so that we might discuss the matter. Mr. West came to Springfield, and the Republicans consulted about the advisability of electing the governor. Enough of them pledged themselves to support him to make his election assured. On that night at about 11 o'clock, after I had understood from Mr. West that the governor would be a candidate, Mr. West came to the hotel at which I was stopping and said that the governor would not be a candidate.

From the day that Senator Hopkins was defeated until the 23d day of March, when Mr. Deneen refused positively to be a candidate, we were endeavoring to secure the election of Deneen, and not LORIMER, as United States Senator.

When the governor refused to be a candidate, I consulted him about many other men, and among them Mr. Foss, who was voted for every day. Then I talked with him about Col. LOWDEN, a Member of the House of Representatives, Representative MCKINLEY, and Representative RODENBERG, but before I came to discuss any of these names I urged upon him the name of Edward Shurtleff, the speaker of the Illinois House of Representatives. His name was discussed not by the governor and myself alone, but by the governor and his friends—his newspaper friends, and they are all-powerful and absolutely controlling with him. Mr. Noyes, who was then the editor of the Record-Herald, said that he would not agree to Mr. Shurtleff's election. Mr. Noyes is now president of the Star Company in the city of Washington, where Senators can easily reach him and verify this statement. For about three weeks we were trying to elect Shurtleff.

Then came the discussion on this other set of men, and it was not until it had become apparent that the governor would not support any of those men that at his urgent suggestion I considered the advisability of becoming a candidate. This same Mr. Noyes was interviewed by my friend Mr. Shanahan, who was a member of the legislature. Mr. Noyes said he had no objection to Mr. Deneen joining to elect LORIMER to the Senate, but that he personally could not declare in his favor; that he had fought him for so many years that he could not turn in one night and support him, but that he did believe—and he did tell this to Mr. Shanahan—that Mr. LORIMER was the only Republican in Illinois who could afford to be elected by the aid of Democratic votes; that it would not injure him politically to receive the support of Democrats, because he had been elected to the House time after time from a Democratic district by the aid of Democratic votes; that everybody would concede that LORIMER could be elected without injury to himself or to the party politically; and if Mr. Deneen wanted to join with him he had no objection.

Mr. President, that is the statement of fact; that is the true history of the senatorial election in the State of Illinois up to this point. Does that show that months before the legislature convened I was conjuring up in my mind a plot by which I could elect my "henchman" as speaker of the general assembly, and, through the power of that office, foist myself onto that general assembly and place myself in this body? If that truth demonstrates that theory, then I have nothing more to say.

Then we come to another important question in this discussion.

> The investigation—
> Said the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]—
> The investigation concerns itself with the way in which those 108 votes were procured. It is practically concentrated upon the way in which the 53 Democratic votes were secured, because it was a matter for special inquiry that 53 Democrats should leave the candidate of their own primary and unite upon a candidate of the opposite party.

If this were the only case of the kind in history, Mr. President, Senators might inquire why Democrats voted for LORIMER, but history is teeming with testimony to the effect that men have been elected to this body by votes of the opposite party.

But here we come, it strikes me, to a point where the question arises how it was that 53 Democrats voted for LORIMER. It is not a very long story, or it is a long story, according to the way it is told, but I shall not test the patience of the Senate by going into a detailed history of the things that brought about this condition. I shall, however, ask a little time of the Senate to answer the question of the Senator from New York.

When I first became a Member of Congress in 1895 I made up my mind that I should try to do something more than vote for appropriation bills in return for what the people had done for me. I lived in and represented the district in which is located the great Chicago Drainage Canal, which is intended ultimately to be a portion of a great waterway to be established between the Great Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico. I have been urging upon Congress during my service the importance of such an improvement, and I think the Senator from Ohio (Mr. BURTON), who was chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the House, will bear me out in the statement that I was constantly at work trying to secure the attention and the aid of Congress for that development, and that I was largely responsible for all the appropriations that were made for the surveys of that project. I found that it was going to cost a great deal of money, the expenditure of vast millions of dollars, and that more than the effort and more than the voice of one man would be required to secure the money requisite to make the improvement. After many years of personal effort I decided that if the improvement was worth while, and the people of the valley came to know that it could be made, and if it were worth enough to them to have it made, if they were informed on the subject, they would support a movement to make the improvement. So I built a little boat—I think it was in 1904—only about 26 feet long, for the express purpose of organizing the Mississippi Valley for that project. One day, with four of my colleagues from Illinois, and my two sons to operate the boat—I will pause just a moment to say that of these four Members of the House, the only Democrat in that body from that State, HENRY RAINEY, was one of that number—we began our trip from Lake Michigan to the Gulf. We stopped at almost every town along the Illinois and the Mississippi Rivers, discussing the matter with the people, organizing in every one of the places where we stopped a Lakes-to-the-Gulf deep waterway association. As we passed down through the valley one Member for one reason and another Member for another went back home, and we filled his place with a Member that we picked up along the route. When we left Chicago we had on board of Members of the other House, four Republicans and one Democrat, Mr. RAINEY, and when we landed in New Orleans we had on board four Democrats and one Republican.

So the work of organizing this association was divided equally from the beginning to the end among Democrats and Republicans, no man and no party seeking to take advantage over the other. Out of these organizations we formed a central organization, held our first convention in St. Louis, and there perfected a permanent Lakes-to-the-Gulf Deep Waterway Association. The following year we accompanied President Roosevelt down the Mississippi River in the interest of this project to the great city of Memphis, all the people turning out to make a holiday.

In the next convention, at Chicago, attended by over 4,000 delegates from the valley, we had upon the platform in the Auditorium, speaking in favor of this project, the Democratic and the Republican candidates for the Presidency—Mr. Bryan and Mr. Taft, our President to-day.

After the convention at Memphis I went back home to my State. Some question had been raised in the House as to whether the Federal Government should make the improvement between Lockport and Utica, in the Illinois valley, a distance of about 60 miles. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors raised that question, and it seemed apparent that unless that portion of the work was done by the people of Illinois, in addition to the other 40 miles which they had built at a cost of over $60,000,000, it would be impossible to get this work under way. So I went back home to my own State where our legislature was in session. I proposed to them that they submit a constitutional amendment to the people authorizing an expenditure of $20,000,000 to do that work. Here [exhibiting] is a copy of the document containing the arguments that were made, running over a period of several weeks.

After the discussion was completed, the general assembly unanimously, every Democrat and every Republican favoring it, voted to submit a constitutional amendment to the people of our State to decide whether or not $20,000,000 should be expended for the purpose I have indicated. I remember that, when I was discussing the subject before the general assembly, one gentleman asked me what I thought the people would do about the question. I told him if they passed the resolution and submitted it to the people, and nothing more was done, the people would not adopt the constitutional amendment, for few of them knew anything about it and a lesser number knew anything of the benefits that would come to the State by the development of this great waterway. I pledged them there that if they would submit the amendment to the people I would go myself into every part of our State, explain the benefits to come to the people, and trust to them to vote an approval.

The legislature submitted the constitutional amendment, and I immediately began the work of organizing the citizens of our State in favor of the project. This work was not confined to Republicans; it was not confined to Democrats; it was not confined to Socialists; it was not confined to Prohibitionists; it was taken even to the homes of men who believed in no party. We organized every precinct in Illinois outside of the city of Chicago by getting people who were interested in the progress of our State—Democrats and Republicans and members of other parties alike. Wherever a county or a town was made up overwhelmingly of Republicans we installed a Democrat for president of the association, and where it was overwhelmingly Democratic we installed a Republican for president of the association; so that every man with whom we talked and worked was impressed with the nonpartisan character of this movement in our State.

I traveled from one end of Illinois to the other, speaking once, twice, three times a day, all the way from two hours a day to five hours a day, interesting the people in this project. At the end of the campaign in September, 1908, the work had been so exhausting that I was not able to say even one word in my congressional district during that campaign, and I had naught to do with my election to Congress the last time.

Would you know the character of people who were interested in the movement? We interested the best men of the State. When we went to Bloomington, a town in a county that is overwhelmingly Republican, we had as our presiding officer and the head of our organization there a gentleman who once graced the chair as president of this body—Adlai E. Stevenson, a Democrat. It was that class of men that were interested in this work. I traveled from county to county with Hon. HENRY RAINEY, spoke from the same platform with him day after day, and in every place a Republican speaker was supplemented by some leading Democrat, either from that community or from some other community in the State.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the roster of that organization. There it is [exhibiting], 50,000 Democrats and Republicans, about evenly divided, in the precincts outside of the city of Chicago.

When the campaign for the waterway amendment was over and the vote was had, the people announced what they thought of it. That vote was cast on the same day that the President was elected and on the same day that the governor was elected. The vote cast for governor was approximately 1,079,000; the vote cast for President was approximately 1,080,000; the vote cast for the constitutional amendment for the deep waterway was approximately 887,000. The plurality that Governor Deneen received was approximately 23,000; the plurality that President Taft received was approximately 179,000; but the majority for the constitutional amendment was approximately 497,000, almost a half million majority, showing how the people of Illinois, men of all parties, look upon this question.

Result of election.

	Vote.	Plurality.
For governor:
Deneen	550,076
Stevenson	526,912
	1,079,988	23,164
For President:
Taft	629,932
Bryan	450,810
	1,080,742	179,122
Amendment to constitution:
For	692,522
Against	195,177
	887,699	497,345

Mr. President, that was the result of the work of over 13 years for this improvement. It was accomplished just exactly as I have stated to you, by the aid of all of the people of the State, regardless of party and regardless of any partisanship. That is one of the reasons why I was able to secure Democratic votes, as I shall show to you later.

The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] further said:

Now, there are certain undisputed facts which bear upon this inquiry as to these 53 Democratic votes. The first which I ask you to consider is that Mr. LORIMER was present at Springfield and in attendance at the State capital at the time of this election, and he had been there for several weeks.

The Senator wants you to know that when I was elected to this body I was present at the capital of Illinois and had been there for several weeks. Yes, Mr. President, I had been there for several weeks, and all the time that I could spare from my duties in the other branch of Congress during the session of the legislature, after its organization was perfected, I put in at Springfield, and I was there when I was elected, and I was there to render effective the work done when the constitutional amendment was submitted to the people—to urge the general assembly to pass a bill to carry out the purposes of that amendment, to provide for an organization through which this work could be done and this $20,000,000 expended. There was a difference between the governor and myself on that question.

I had pledged the people that in so far as I had influence not one dollar of the twenty million should be spent until Congress agreed to cooperate with our State and appropriated the money requisite to finish the project from the Lakes to the Gulf. We had much discussion on that question. I told the governor that I would support, with all the influence I had, a bill to give him absolute control of the work; to place the appointment of all the officials in his hands for the expenditure of the $20,000,000; and that the only thing I exacted, in so far as I was concerned, was that the money should not be spent until Congress authorized the Federal Government to cooperate with our State.

He wanted the money to be spent for the development of water power. We disagreed, and the contest went on until the last day of the session, when it became known that no bill could be passed because the adherents of one policy were not strong enough to pass it and those of the other policy would not yield a peg. So, Mr. President, I was in Springfield as I have been many, many times before.

I should like to know from the Senator from New York if he has ever been identified with a work of this kind, if he has ever come in contact with his Democratic brethren and worked with them in season and out of season for a project that would not benefit them alone, but would benefit the whole people of his State? If he has been connected with such a work, will he tell me, or will he tell anybody, that when he was doing that work he was not making friends among the people of his State regardless of their party affiliations?

But there is, Mr. President, an abundance of evidence here to show that work in favor of things that help a great State is appreciated by the people who receive the benefit of the effort, and I have here a list of Democrats who voted for me on account of the fact that they felt I had been doing something, that I had been helping in a work that meant much to Illinois, and that if they promoted me to a seat where I would be secure for four or six years this improvement would ultimately be made.

I mention as the first Democrat Senator Hearn. Oh, if there be a Democrat in Illinois, surely Senator Hearn is that man. He had service as captain of Company G of the Fifth Missouri Infantry, in Cockrell's brigade, a Confederate general, and he served through the war as a Confederate soldier. If you think he is not a Democrat go and talk with him. He was one of the men who was in the forefront of this work. He aided in every way that he could to pass the proposed amendment in the house. At that time he was in service in that body. He worked throughout his district with me and with others. But the thing above all things that I am confident caused Senator Hearn to vote for me was not alone that I was for this project, but because he became convinced that I was not trying to get advantage over any Democrat.

He was fond of Congressman RAINEY, and he knew that I had never taken a step in this work from the time we began the organization until he voted for me, until I had consulted with Congressman RAINEY. He was really the leading Democrat in my State in this work, and it was because of the work and because of the fact that I was not trying to get advantage and because I did what was in my power to put a Democrat in the forefront of the work, that he voted for me.

A few days before the vote was taken he came to me and told me all these things and he said: "LORIMER, I would like to vote for you, but I wish you would give me an additional reason for doing it." I asked him what request he had to make. He said, "If you could only go back to Washington as a Senator, and join with the Democrats and just cast one vote with them on the tariff bill, my conscience would feel easier, if I had voted for you." [Laughter.]

I said to him, "Senator, much as I appreciate the dignity of that office, if I can not go there and vote with the Republicans, the stalwart Republicans, I do not want a seat in the United States Senate." [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. No applause is permissible by occupants of the gallery.

Mr. LORIMER. Senator Hearn said, "Well, I guess I will have to vote for you anyhow." Then he went away, and when the roll was called he responded, and I received his vote.

In the campaign it happened that I talked at the home of Representative Blair, who voted for the constitutional amendment, and he had heard me talk about it before the general assembly. To make this campaign I had large maps made to illustrate the work, and after I had finished my talk before the people in his town and the meeting had adjourned he came to me and said, "LORIMER, if you keep up that work you will be governor of Illinois, and when that day comes I will vote for you." That was the way that Democrat felt about the work for the waterway.

Then I went from there over to Franklin County, and I talked in the courthouse on this subject there, and when the meeting adjourned a great, tall, fine looking gentleman came up to me, took me by the hand, and laying one hand on my shoulder said, "Mr. LORIMER, keep up that work. It has merit; the people will come to understand it after awhile, and this improvement will be made, and it will make you"—he was very enthusiastic—"governor, or it will make you Senator, or it will make you President of the United States; and when the time comes, and I am alive and I have the opportunity, you will get my vote."

At that time he had no idea of going to the legislature. But he was nominated by his party, and he was elected by his party, and when on the roll call the name of Sidney Espy was called Sidney Espy cast his vote for me; and there was no man in Springfield, and there is no man in Illinois, whether he be Democrat or Republican, who is a warmer and closer and more enthusiastic friend of mine than Sidney Espy, and for no other reason except the one I have explained.

Now we come to another name—Mr. Gorman, who lives in Peoria, another Democrat. When they began discussing the election of LORIMER, many of the influential people of his town came to Springfield—Democrats and Republicans alike. Peoria is on the Illinois River, and its people believe that the improved waterway will redound greatly to the benefit of their great city. The Democratic ex-mayor, the leader of the Democratic organization, was among the men. I had never seen Mayor O'Connor in my life until he came to Springfield. Those men urged their members of the legislature—Democrats and Republicans—to vote and work for LORIMER, with the result that I secured Gorman's vote, the Democrat, the vote of Black, Republican, and the vote of Butts, Republican, who had also been urged by Mr. Kenney, at the suggestion of Gov. Deneen. The Republican senator came to me before the roll was called and he said: "LORIMER, I wish I were free to vote for you." Senator Dailey further said: "The people of my city want me to vote for you, but I can not do it because I am chairman of Senator Hopkins's"—either his executive committee or his steering committee—"and I can not on that account vote for you. But I wish you godspeed." There is where the vote of Gorman came from.

Michael Link—you have heard much talk about Michael Link here, one of the men who it has been said was bribed to vote for me. When I made the campaign in his senatorial district in Madison County, where I talked every night to large crowds of people, Michael Link was on the platform with me, and I had there with me also the Republican members of the legislature, and I told the people of their district that if this improvement should be made they would owe as much to these men, including Link, as to anybody else in the country. Madison County fronts on the river, and every man, woman, and child in the district is for the improvement and anxious that this work shall be done.

Then the next one I come to in the waterway group is Representative Riley, a stanch old Democrat. I doubt if he ever voted for a Republican in his life, even for supervisor of his township. But if there be a father of the waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf it is Representative Riley. Years ago the people from our city went to the legislature to have the bill authorizing the construction of the canal passed. The mayor and many of our leading citizens spent several weeks there discussing the project. The legislature defeated their bill, and when they were gone Mr. Lyman E. Cooley, the engineer, and Mr. Riley took up the bill together, and at the end of several months Mr. Riley's bill became a law. The channel—160 feet wide in the rock and 24 feet deep—built from Chicago to Joliet, is the result of the work of Representative Riley.

He was in the last legislature; I had worked with him in season and out of season; and if there be anything on earth that would make Riley leave his party (and I am sure it is the only thing in the world he would leave it for) would be for the construction of a waterway from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. He was not only in this work, but more than 20 years ago he was the leader and the father of it all, and championed it and made it what it is.

Mr. Staymates is another Democrat; a man whose honesty no man on earth, who ever knew him, would impugn; a man who has devoted his time from the day we adopted the constitutional amendment up to this time in writing for all the papers that would take his copy on this subject; and he voted for me on that account.

We come to Henry Shephard. What about Henry Shephard? When the congressional party came back to Washington from New Orleans at the opening of Congress, I called a meeting of the men who had made the trip, and we organized among the Members of Congress an association. When I notified Mr. RAINEY, he told me that he could not attend that night because his friend, Henry Shephard, was in town. I invited Henry Shephard to come to that little dinner where we organized, and it was there that I first met Henry Shephard. It was there that he first became interested in this work. It was at that time that a friendship grew up between him and me that has lasted until to-day. Henry Shephard was a member of the legislature, and he was for this proposition all the way through.

The Senator asks why I was at Springfield when I was elected to the Senate. The Senator says that I was there for several weeks before I was elected to the Senate. Suppose I had no business there in favor of this waterway; suppose I had never had any interest in the development of my State and that the only thing I cared about was to get office for myself; suppose I had organized the legislature to elect myself to the Senate; and then suppose that for no other purpose, except to promote my election, I was in Springfield for several weeks before I was elected; then what of that? Is that proof of bribery? Is that evidence of corrupt practices, that a man who is a candidate for office should go to those who have the votes with which he can secure office and tell them he wants their votes and ask them to be for him? Is that an evidence of corruption and bribery?

Great stress is laid on the fact that I was in Springfield. Has any Senator here ever been in Springfield, or has any Senator here ever been at the capital of his State when they were discussing his election to this body? Is it a crime to be there? If it is, Mr. President, then I am guilty of that crime; I am guilty of being in Springfield; but it has always struck me that if a man wanted votes for United States Senator, wanted the support of his own legislature, and wanted a seat in this body, he had a right to go where the votes are; that he had a right to talk to the members of the legislature; and that if he did go there and if he did talk to the members of the legislature it was not evidence of bribery or curruption.

Mr. President, it is the talk of a child. No man who has ever had any experience in politics will pay any attention to a statement of that sort.

During the time that I have been actively identified with politics in my State, every time a Senator was elected, sometimes during the campaign for his election and frequently on the day he was elected, he was present in the capitol at Springfield. I have only to recall the memorable fight of 1885, when the legislature was in a deadlock. The Democrats had one-half of the strength of the body and the Republicans had the other. Gen. Logan had a seat in this body at that time, and he was a candidate for reelection. From the day the members of the general assembly began to assemble in Springfield, before the house or the senate was organized, Gen. Logan was on the ground. He was there talking to the members of the general assembly, and he was there during the whole winter, until the springtime, when he was finally returned to this body.

Did anybody cast suspicion upon Gen. Logan because he was present at the capital weeks before he was returned to this body? Not at all; and nobody ever thought of such a thing.

The only purpose, Mr. President, that there can be in throwing this seeming cloud of suspicion over this election is in order that Senators may believe I was not only elected to this body by bribery and corruption but that I was present there and knew it was going on and was sanctioning that sort of thing. Any man who knows anything about that contest knows that the contrary is the fact in the case.

Now, we come to another set of Democrats who voted for LORIMER, the anti-Hopkins Democrats. There was present in that general assembly Representative George Alschuler, and he voted for LORIMER. George Alschuler lives in Hopkins's home town; he is his neighbor. May I say, in passing, that while he voted for LORIMER—and the brand of condemnation is asked for those who did vote for LORIMER—he was reelected to the general assembly by an overwhelming majority, and he was elected leader of the minority, and he is now the minority leader of that body. He voted for me, I may say, because he was friendly; but that would not be sufficient reason. He voted for me because he was opposed to the election of Hopkins, and he announced it to everybody. There was not one man in Springfield who knew anything about the election but knew that George Alschuler would vote for any Republican or any man of any other party in order to defeat Senator Hopkins. It was not a LORIMER vote; he belongs to nobody; but he was against Hopkins, and he announced in the beginning that if the time ever came when his vote could defeat Hopkins it would be cast for the man who would defeat him.

Then we come to another—the departed Charles Luke. Not one single man who had aught to do with the election of Senator, not one single man who was paying attention to the election of Senator but knew that Luke would vote for anybody in order to defeat Senator Hopkins. All who served with the Senator, either in the House or in this body, remember him very well. You knew him a lot better than I did, and I helped to send him here. It will be remembered that Senator Hopkins had one of the most bitter and most partisan tongues of any man who ever sat in this body. If he had a weakness at all, it was that. When he went through Luke's district he used that tongue for all it was worth denouncing Luke. He seldom made a campaign that he did not denounce Democrats everywhere he went.

It may be the right policy in a campaign; it may be the proper thing to do if you want to get office; but it is not the policy I have ever adopted. I have laid the principles of my party before my constituents and left it to them to decide, and I have denounced nobody. Denunciation gets nowhere. It never placed a law on the statute book. No man who has any sense would make a campaign along those lines. Senator Hopkins made these bitter enemies among the Democrats, and they were willing to vote for anybody to defeat him in his desire to be returned to this body.

We come now to De Wolf. You have heard his name mentioned on this floor. What about De Wolf? De Wolf stated upon the stand that he was ready to vote for Hopkins, and that he was going to try to get other Democrats to vote for Hopkins, to break the deadlock; that he was tired of his service in Springfield and wanted to get back home to his farm and attend to his own business, and that not only would he vote for Hopkins, but everybody in Springfield at that time knew he would vote for any Republican or any Democrat who could be elected to break the deadlock. When the roll was called he voted for me for the same reason that he was willing to vote for anybody else.

Then we come to Senator Broderick, who voted for me. You have all heard his name. Senator Broderick I have known (I can not measure the time) for probably more than 15 years. My old district is filled with Senator Broderick's friends and relatives. There never was a time when I had a contest in the district, and these same newspapers that are hounding me now and always have hounded me undertook to drive me out of Congress, when, without any solicitation on my part, Senator Broderick sent word to his Democratic friends in the district and went there himself and pleaded with them, and asked them to vote for LORIMER and they did vote for LORIMER.

Let me say now, if it had not been for the support I received from Democrats in that congressional district when these assassins of character were trying to destroy me, I would not have been in the Lower House of Congress, much less occupying a seat in this body to-day.

I never solicited a vote from a Democrat under false pretenses. No Democrat who ever voted for me ever thought that when I was sent to Congress I would support the principles of the great party to which he belonged. No Democrat was ever deceived into voting for me for a seat in Congress. Everybody knows, and with God's help everybody will know, where I stand on every question until my time shall come to leave this earth.

So it was not from deception that I received that support, nor was it from deception or by deception that I received the support of Broderick when he voted for me for United States Senator.

Senator Gorman, another Democrat, lives in the old district I represented that gave a Democratic majority of all the way from 5,000 to 17,000 every election we had except the elections when I was a candidate for a seat in the house of representatives. In every election except one Senator Gorman, as a Democrat, voted for me. He was one of the best friends I had in that congressional district. The only time he ever voted against me was when his chum ran in opposition to me. When he was elected to the senate the first time I went to Springfield I met him in the St. Nicholas Hotel and he began the discussion of this Senatorship. He said, "If the time ever comes, LORIMER, that the Democrats and the Republicans can elect you, depend upon me to do what I have always done, to vote for you when the roll is called."

Senators Rainey and Jandus and I were raised in the same neighborhood. The same is true of Representatives Cermak and Forst. I was associated with them and with their friends for many years.

Representative Geshkewich I have known for more than 15 years. I have known him at home; I have known him in the legislature; I have known him in political contests in my city and my county; and he would have gone further to serve me than he would have gone to have served any Democrat in our State. That is why I got Geshkewich's vote.

I am not going to give all the history and all the reasons that led up to the friendships which grew up between these Democrats and myself over a period of 40 years, but I think it is due to the Senate that I should relate one or two of the circumstances that finally led up to the voting of Democrats for a Republican.

John Griffin voted for me. John Griffin lives in the neighborhood I lived in 40 years ago. I can not remember just when it was that I made his acquaintance, it is so far back. We have been friends all that time. But that was not the single reason why Griffin voted for me.

When I was a boy and started out in the world the first dollar I made was by selling newspapers. I had been well taken care of at home, with no responsibility, with nothing to look after. I had been brought up as mothers would bring up their boys if they had all to do with it; almost at mother's apron strings all the time. At the time it became necessary for me to go out and earn a living I was 10 years old. I had had no experience. I knew nothing about where to turn. Friends in the neighborhood suggested that I might make a dollar by selling papers in the morning, and I began peddling papers and blacking boots.

After I had been at the work for a time (I remember it as well as if it were yesterday) I went over to the Tribune Building and down into the basement and bought 50 Tribunes. In those days the papers were not folded as they are now. They were counted out, first the heading and then the supplement, and shoved out of the window to the boy purchasing them; and then he went away into a doorway or hallway and folded them and put them together.

One Sunday morning as I came up out of the basement a crowd of boys surrounded me. Some held me by the hands and others by the throat, and they pulled my headings out from under my arm and then let me go. They disappeared. I was standing there brooding not only over the dollar that I might have made out of the sale of those papers, but the dollar and a half that I had paid for them, because the supplement was of no value without the heading, when another boy came along with an armful of papers and asked me what was the matter, why I was so downcast. I told him the story. He looked at me for a moment and handed his papers over to me and said, "Stand back there in the doorway. Stay there until I come back." He went away, and in about five minutes he returned and he had my headings in his hand. He said, "Here are your papers. Now, see to it that they don't take them away from you again." Out of that little incident grew a friendship to the extent that almost every week I helped him. We had in our town at that time a Saturday afternoon paper called the Gazette. In the territory that I worked I sold all of mine, and this boy usually had some left over. We used to call it in those days getting "stuck." He would give them to me and I would take them up into my territory and sell them for him. Sometimes there was only one paper, but it saved him 5 cents and he made the profit on it of another 5 cents. Sometimes there were half a dozen, and he saved his 30 cents and made a profit of 30 cents.

That friendship grew up on that basis. A dollar and a half he had saved for me, and one dollar was more to me, Senator Root, in those days than $1,000,000 would be to many of the people of this country to-day. What grew up out of that little incident was a friendship and a gratitude that has lasted for over 40 years. This man that I speak of as a man now was a boy then. He was a sort of a hero with the newsboys—a sort of a king of the crowd—and what he said they should do they did.

I have no doubt that Senators in this Chamber have heard his name because the newspapers of my town are ringing with it every day. In those days we called him Hinky Dink. His name is Michael Kenna. The nickname has followed him to this day. He is the leading Democrat in the neighborhood in which he lives. John Griffin represents that district. When the papers published the story that LORIMER would probably be a candidate for Senator he came to my office and said to me substantially this:

> Bill, I understand you are going to be a candidate for United States Senator, and that you can not be elected unless you get Democratic votes. You can depend upon it that if your name is presented John Griffin will vote for you if no other member of the legislature does.

Can the Senator from New York understand a situation of that kind? Has he ever come up through conditions of that sort, which bind men together more firmly than all the things that can be done for him when he has grown to manhood—after he has been successful?

When we quit selling papers Michael Kenna went one way and I went another. He became a Democrat and I became a Republican. But there never has been a time in 40 years when we could help each other that we have failed to do it without solicitation, and almost invariably without notifying the other of our performance of what we considered our duty unless it was necessary to do so. It may be the Senator from New York and the Senator from South Dakota and some other Senators can not understand that kind of a friendship.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LORIMER. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think there is a person on the face of the earth a story of that kind does not appeal to. I want to say to the Senator from Illinois he is not the only poor boy who has made his way through hardships to the Senate, and he can not plead that he is the only one.

Mr. LORIMER. I am not pleading that I am the only one who has made his way through this world and is now sitting in the Senate, nor am I pleading poverty or hard knocks as a reason why I should sit in this body. I am giving to the Senators the truth as to why these men voted for me for United States Senator. I am not pleading for sympathy. I do not want sympathy. This is not a question of sympathy. It is a question of right or wrong. If the Senate can believe me to be the low, vile creature the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from New York and other Senators who have talked against me would have you believe me to be, then there is a plain duty staring you squarely in the face, regardless of the testimony in this record. If I could be the foul wretch that you, Senators, have sought to paint me, regardless of how I came here, by right or by wrong, I should be driven from yonder door with the stamp of infamy branded upon my back. I am not pleading for sympathy. I am trying to narrate the truth of my election as it was, not as Senators would have the Senate believe it.

Then I come to another, George Hilton, a Democrat, a member of the legislature, and he has been for many years. In my State there is a great deal of patronage that is known as "the minority patronage" given to Democrats. In my career of over 20 years, and on account of the position I have held in my party, I have had much to say about the disposition of that patronage. Several years ago it happened to fall to me to suggest that George Hilton should be appointed to the chief bailiff's office in my city, a place that pays him well, and a place for the holding of which he is very much gratified.

Representative Hruby was also a boy from my own neighborhood. I have helped him and his friends for the past 25 years.

Walter A. Lantz, a member of the general assembly, is a man who, through my assistance, was appointed a member of the civil service board of the county in which I live.

John J. McLaughlin and George L. McConnell are both members from the congressional district where I live. I have known them both many years. I do not know how many favors they have done for me or how many I have done for them, but I would say that they are probably almost innumerable.

Thomas J. O'Brien, John O'Neil, and John J. Poulton are men with whom or with whose close political friends I have been associated ever since I have been in politics.

John P. Walsh is a resident of my former congressional district. He is now and has been for years in the circuit clerk's office of our county, at the suggestion of my friends and myself.

John C. Werdell, Frank Wilson, and Bob Wilson—Frank Wilson I have known for years.

Peter F. Galligan. I do not know how long I have known Peter, but Peter has been a Democrat all these years; a leader in the Democratic party; for many years a member of the legislature; and at one time he served in the senate of our State. So partisan is Peter, or so partisan was Peter, that, though I was his friend, he would not ask a favor from me; yet at the same time he would go any length to serve me; but about 15 years ago when everybody was broke, when everybody was hard up, Peter, with the balance of us, was also hard up. It was the most trying time of his life. Peter's wife was sick—sick unto death—and he did not have a dollar at home, no money to pay the doctor, nor any money to buy medicine, no money to furnish coal to keep the home warm. Then he came to me and related his circumstances. I secured an appointment for him, out of which he received a fair salary, with which he was able to take care of his sick wife and give to her such nourishment as she required during those long painful days, and finally, to give her a decent burial. He had gone to all his friends; he had called on all his Democratic leaders for help, but he had called in vain. When he came to me I was fortunate enough to be able to help him, and from that day to this the gratitude of Peter F. Galligan has made him almost my willing slave. There is nothing in the world within the bounds of decency, there is no honorable thing that he might do that I would ask him to do, that he would not do with the greatest of pleasure. The day I was elected in the house of representatives in Springfield, when I was called upon to address that body, just before I went up to the speaker's desk, I was met by Peter Galligan with the tears streaming down his cheeks, tears of joy, tears of great pleasure, tears of gratitude for an opportunity that had been afforded him to pay back what he thought was a great obligation, but which to me amounted to nothing at all. It was that sort of thing that made Peter Galligan my friend; it was that act that made him my devoted friend; and I know there is no man in Illinois—I care not to what party he belongs—for whom Peter Galligan would go so far or make so many sacrifices, or would give up so much for, as he would for me. When he cast his vote he did not think he was making a sacrifice, because in the house of representatives when the roll was called and his name was reached—because Republicans and Democrats had stated upon that floor that the Democrats who voted for me would live to rue the day, that they would be ostracized and driven out of the party—when his name was called, he said: "Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the statements made here. I will not be ostracized from my party; I will not rue the day that I vote for LORIMER. When the people from my district know that I am returning after this vote is cast, they will meet me at the depot with a brass band, and say, 'Here comes our hero.'" Peter Galligan is now a member of the general assembly, reelected after his vote cast for me, and reelected by an overwhelming majority.

Much has been said of Emanuel A. Abrahams—"Manny" Abrahams they say, and that was what we called him when he was a boy. "The bellwether," "the bellwether," goes ringing all through the speech of the Senator from New York. How about "Manny" Abrahams? It is only a short story, and I will tell you a little of "Manny" Abrahams.

When I was about 20 years of age I was running a street car on South Halsted Street in Chicago. In those days, early in the morning the loads were all carried down town, and coming back we had very few passengers. About that time the Jews were moving over into the neighborhood of Halsted and Twelfth Streets—only a few; but as time went on the numbers increased. They were all industrious men. They came to Halsted and Twelfth Streets to take a car to go out to the suburbs with their big packs of goods and work their way home, disposing of their wares during the day. In those days we had a rule which permitted the conductor either to take or reject passengers with large packages. Then the prejudice against that people in that neighborhood was very strong and very bitter. Many of the conductors when they arrived at Twelfth Street would refuse, even with an empty car, to allow them to ride. Frequently I have seen those men get on the car with a pack, lay it on the platform, and have seen the conductor stop the car and kick the pack out into the street, and then the car moved on, and the passenger stayed there or else he walked out into the suburbs. Either my folk taught me to have prejudice against nobody or God made me that way. So I have no prejudice against anybody of any nationality. When I came along in the morning and had no passengers I always took those men on board with their packs and carried them out to the end of the line, until I became known among them as the man they could ride with. So they waited for my car. It turned out after awhile that every morning I would get a large load of those men. In increased numbers they moved into that neighborhood. I was known as their friend. It was a small thing to do, and there was no reason why men should have any gratitude on account of me permitting them to ride and pay their fares; but they did have it. After I quit service on the cars I lived in the same ward with those people and as they came in I became better acquainted with them.

Then I entered into politics. When I entered into politics not one of them was ever permitted to vote at the polls. Nobody would let them have anything to do with or allowed them to go near the polls; and if they undertook to go there, they were insulted, abused, assaulted, and knocked down, bricks were thrown at them, and they were driven from the polls. I organized every precinct in which they lived, and we gave them protection. It got so they came to my home at night and talked over their little troubles. There might be a dozen or probably 50 coming to my home, laying their little troubles at my door and asking for help. I helped them always. Then I moved out of the neighborhood; but when I go down there now to attend a meeting—and I go there about once every year or two; they have large halls and large meetings—I am met there by the old citizens and the rabbis of the neighborhood; I am taken around and introduced to the newcomers. I am not introduced as "Mr. LORIMER;" I am not presented as "Congressman LORIMER;" I was not made acquainted with these people as "Senator LORIMER;" but I was taken from one to the other and introduced as "the Father." Does the Senator from New York know what that means? When people come to believe in you, when they come to trust you and almost to revere you, as these people do me, when they come to the point of introducing you as "the Father," that is the greatest compliment that race of people can pay to any man. Whether I deserve that confidence or not, whether I have earned their gratitude or not, that is the condition there, and any man who would declare for the political, for the business, for the financial, or for the social destruction of LORIMER and run for office in that district could not get votes enough to make a respectable showing. No man can go among those people into that district as my enemy and live politically—I state that not in any sense of boasting, but because it is a matter of fact—and "Manny" Abrahams could not have gone back home and looked his people in the face if I had been a candidate and had been beaten by 1 vote and he had failed to vote for me.

"Manny" Abrahams, the bellwether! I say it goes ringing all through the speech of the Senator from New York. For what purpose? For any other purpose than to create prejudice? I wish I could think so. A bellwether; the first man on the roll call for everybody to follow, as though a bellwether was a new thing in legislative bodies, as though we had never heard of a bellwether here, as though they had never had a bellwether in the House of Representatives, or as though they had never had a bellwether in any legislative body in the United States. We have our bellwether here; we have the Democratic bellwether; we have the "insurgent" bellwether [laughter], and we have the "stalwart" bellwether. When I happen to be absent from this Chamber and the bell rings announcing the roll call, if I chance to step in the door in time to hear the name of Senator ALDRICH called, he is my bellwether. [Laughter.] I know where my vote belongs, and I vote as he votes. If he happens to be absent, I listen to the roll call until the clerk comes to the name of my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Illinois, and then, when he has voted, Senator CULLOM becomes my bellwether. I know where to vote from that time on. If I happen to get in a little later, I wait for the roll call to reach Senator GALLINGER's name; and after he has voted I know my place. Then we go along a little further, and if I happen to come in after he has answered the roll call, I wait until Senator LODGE has voted. [Laughter.] Then, if I find that he and Senator LA FOLLETTE have voted the same way, I wait for somebody else to vote, and then somebody else becomes my bellwether. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

Senators know that when the roll is called they walk in the door and ask "How is our vote." I have heard many a Democrat say that. I sit on this side with them. I do not want to know their secrets; but sometimes they talk too loud; and they ask that question so that I can not avoid hearing it. So I know they have a bellwether. While I do not know it as a matter of fact, I venture the statement that the time has been—I will go a little farther than that, and say the time will come—when the Senator from New York will walk into this Chamber some day when the roll is being called and ask somebody in whom he has confidence, "How is our vote" and then vote that way.

Why, Mr. President, the talk about "bellwether" is all nonsense. There is a bellwether in every legislative assembly in this country, and so long as there are parties and so long as there are principles that divide parties, there will be bellwethers. The talk of bellwethers fools nobody; it will create no suspicion that will injure anybody either in this forum or in the House of Representatives or in any other legislative body in this country or anywhere else, unless it be upon the Chautauqua platform. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, grave charges have been made against my right to hold a seat in this body. If I read the speeches of Senators rightly, and if I understand what they mean—some of them go even to the extent of making almost the direct charge—if I understand them at all, they would leave an impression upon this body that I was elected by bribery and corruption, and that not only was I elected by bribery and corruption, but that I was on hand aiding it, giving it the stamp of my approval, and sanctioning it. In proof of that statement they point out that Lee O'Neil Browne was my agent—my authorized agent. What else can it mean? They would have you believe that Lee O'Neil Browne tied up in one package 30 Democratic votes, carried them into the hall of the general assembly, dumped them down there, bought body and soul, and sold and delivered them to me. I can understand how that might make an impression on Senators who know nothing about the situation and know nothing about the politics of my State. But here, Mr. President, is a list of 34 Democrats that were for me for United States Senator on my own account, and not because Lee O'Neil Browne delivered them to me.

Democrat waterway support.—Senator Hearn; Representatives Blair, Espy, Gorman, Link, Riley, Staymates, H. A. Shephard.
Anti-Hopkins.—Representatives Aschuler, Luke.
To end deadlock.—Representative De Wolf.
Democrat personal support.—Senators Broderick, Gorman, Jandus, Rainey; Representatives Abrahams, Cermak, Forst, Geshkewich, Griffin, Hilton, Hruby, Lantz, McLaughlin, McConnell, E. J. Murphy, O'Brien, O'Neil, Poulton, Walsh, Werdell, F. J. Wilson, R. E. Wilson, Galligan.

Seventeen or 18—19, I think it was—of the men who belonged to Lee O'Neil Browne's faction who voted for me, would have voted for me if I had been a candidate for Senator, even though Lee O'Neil Browne labored with them throughout the whole session—if I had been a candidate through the whole session—to oppose me. He did not deliver them. They delivered him. They were my friends, and there is not one of them who would not have gone further on a personal matter for me than they would have gone for Lee O'Neil Browne, and many of them would have made more sacrifices for me personally than they would for any Democrat in the State of Illinois; and I measure my words when I make that statement. Thirty-four of the 53, for one personal reason or another, voted for me and pleaded with the other 19 Democrats and prevailed upon them to vote for me also. That is the history of that vote.

Much has been made in statements here upon this floor of the fact that I am a personal friend of Speaker Shurtleff, and the further fact that during my stay in Springfield I occupied the speaker's room at the capitol; that I met Shephard in the speaker's room, and that I talked with members in the speaker's room, and that it was a suspicious circumstance that I should occupy the speaker's room. That may be so in other States. I do not know anything about the speaker's room in other States, or the privacy of his room in other States, but I do know all about the speaker's room in the State of Illinois. Mr. President, the speaker's room of the State of Illinois is practically the same size as the Marble Room outside of this Senate Chamber. It has more lounges and sofas in it than we have in the Marble Room. It has more chairs than we have in the Marble Room. It has a much greater seating capacity than the Marble Room. Our legislative assembly hall has a seating arrangement all around outside of the members' chairs.

I do not know how it is in your State, but I know how it is in mine. Anyone introduced by a member is free to go in and take possession of these seats in the assembly room. They walk down the aisles and they sit and talk to the members, and if they are interrupting the legislative proceedings by their talk they go out into the speaker's room. In fact, anybody who goes to Springfield and is acquainted with a member of the legislature may go into the speaker's room. It is a meeting place. Democrats go there and Republicans go there, and they take their friends there, and they sit and they talk and they smoke there. It is more of a smoking room than a room of privacy, and the door of the room is never locked, except in the morning before the opening of the session, when the steering committee is occupying it, preparing the work for the legislative day.

Great stress is laid on the fact that LORIMER was present in Springfield when he was elected and that he occupied the speaker's room. Has any Member of this Senate ever sat in the speaker's room of the capitol of his State? Has any Senator here ever sat in the speaker's room while the roll was being called that elected him to this body? If he was there, was it a sign of bribery and corruption?

Oh, Mr. President, if that is to be adopted as the rule, I do not know how men are going to get votes when they want to be elected to this great forum. Surely, I never will intimate to anybody anywhere that because a man who was elected to this body was present in his capitol and sitting in the speaker's room when the roll was being called, and talked to the members of the legislature in that room, that such is evidence of bribery and corrupt practices; and I do not think, Mr. President, anybody else will think so. I do not believe anybody will pay attention or give any weight at all to a statement of that kind, which I fear was made to cast a cloud of suspicion. It is not and can not be evidence of anything either good or bad, and it could have had no other purpose except to unsettle the minds of Senators and probably lead them to believe that maybe something was wrong.

Mr. President, if the securing of Democratic votes is an evidence of wrongdoing, then I have been doing wrong for the past 25 years. If the securing of Democratic votes, either for myself or for my party or for the candidates of my party is an evidence of corruption, then I have been a corruptionist ever since I was a boy. I was brought up in a Democratic neighborhood, and the thing that took me into politics was not the hope of political preferment. I was a Republican, and there was nobody in the precinct to give me a Republican ballot the day I went to cast my first vote for James G. Blaine. All the precincts around my home were made up almost solidly of Democrats—500 Democratic votes and two or three Republican votes. There were not enough members of my party in a precinct to fill up the quota of judges and clerks and ticket peddlers on election day. I was only 24 years old then, and I voted for Blaine, and I doubt if there was a more enthusiastic Blaineite in this country than I was, and nobody was more disappointed than I was at his defeat. I concluded that if all the country was managed in my party as the territory that I lived in was managed, that that in itself applied to New York, was enough to defeat Blaine for the Presidency. I made up my mind that that would never happen in my election precinct again.

So I began to organize, not to become a leader of my party, but to take care of my own precinct two days in a year, and see that the ballots were there for Republicans when they came to vote. That precinct was organized and then the other precincts were organized, because once the political virus is injected into the white man there is no telling where he will stop. So I went into the next precinct and organized that. And how? With Republicans? No. There were no Republicans there. With Democrats, young men of my age who had never affiliated with their party, but thought they were Democrats because their good fathers were Democrats. They joined with us, and we organized one precinct after another until the whole ward was organized.

We did not go out calling Democrats names. We did not abuse Democrats. We told them the things our party stood for, and asked them to join us on that account; and after a while, with energy and industry, we had a splendid organization in every precinct in the ward; and we were not in politics, or at least we did not know we were. But we had not been in politics over two years until we sent a Republican alderman to the council from that ward, and that Republican organization spread from that ward to other wards until the Republican leaders of our county began to look to that section of the county for their Republican majority.

But for the organization in that section the city of Chicago would have been as strongly Democratic for the past 20 years as is the city of New York.

This organization, my friends, was bred not in malice, not in denunciation, but it was bred in principle and fostered by telling what we thought was the truth, and in good fellowship to each other. It was not very long until the leaders of the party all over the county looked to our territory; and without knowing it, or rather without realizing it, and surely not knowing the reason why, I was pushed forward, made the leader in my party of that Democratic section of the county.

I do not know whether Senators who do not live in a large city and a large county understand what that means. In our city and in our county in those days we had at the disposal of the party in power anywhere from 12,000 to 15,000 places, according to the season of the year, and when the Republican party came into control of the city for the first time in my career, in 1887, the disposition of all the patronage in that section of the town fell into my hands. I knew nothing about it. To be truthful, I did not know what to do with it. I disposed of it as best I could, and it was disposed of among the people in our neighborhood, and these young men that came from Democratic families into our party were chiefly the recipients of what we had.

From that time to this no man has ever come to my home, no man has ever come to my office to ask me to do him a favor, little or big, that, unless it was a strictly party matter, I ever asked him his politics. I do not know and I can not know whether I properly carried out my obligations in the disposition of those places or not; I do not know what people would think about it; but I do know that in the territory from which I come 90 per cent of the Democrats, whether they vote for me or not, will tell you they would rather have LORIMER in Congress or LORIMER in any place he wants to go to than any man in their own party.

As I have stated before, it is not because I have ever deceived a Democrat. No Democrat ever thought I would vote with his party when he voted for me. A very distinguished senator and elderly Democrat in the Illinois General Assembly came to me—and unless Senators ask his name I shall withhold it—a few days before I was elected and he said, "LORIMER, you know I would like to vote for you, but I live down in a Democratic country, where it is hard to forgive a Democrat if he votes for a Republican; I think you ought to be sent to the Senate, and if you will vote there with the Democrats on the tariff I will vote for you." I said to him, "Senator, I can not do that." He thought for a moment or two. "Well," he said, "I will go a little further with you. If you will vote with Senator LA FOLLETTE and his followers in the Senate on the tariff bill I will vote for you. That is not going the whole distance, but I can go back to my district and my people will not destroy me politically because I voted for you if you will vote that way." I told him I could not do that. Then he said, "Well, I am sorry; I would like to vote for you; I would like to see you in the Senate; but I can not afford to do it unless you can do something to make the way easy for me."

So it is that at no time and at no place have I ever had Democratic support on account of any reason except pure, unadulterated friendship. In the last campaign in which I was elected to Congress, when I was unable even to sign a letter to be sent out to my constituency, that district gave approximately 12,000 majority to President Taft. He received the largest vote and the largest majority—or his electors did, and I take the elector who received the highest vote in the district. He received a larger vote than any person other than myself running in that district. I did not make one speech, and I did not see one man, and I got more than 3,500 plurality more than President Taft.

Of what is that an evidence? Is that an evidence of bribery? Is it an evidence of corrupting Democrats to vote for me? If it is, then Mr. President I have a trail of corrupted Democrats following me over my career of 25 years. If they were bought with money I would have been compelled to buy them by the tens of thousands, and according to the theory that is contended for here it would have cost millions of dollars.

Mr. President, it is an easy matter to intimate that any man is guilty of wrongdoing, and once the intimation is made, I regret to say, it is an easy matter for many people to believe it. But when one is charged with wrongdoing, the facts should be laid before the judging body. They should be the unqualified and unadulterated truth, and that applies more largely, in my opinion, to the question of unseating a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives than it does to taking the life or the liberty or the property of a citizen. To turn a member from this or any other legislative body on the suspicion that if certain things happened, certain other things might happen, would be establishing a rule that would indeed soon destroy this Republic.

No man, not even the Tribune, has ever dared to charge that I was ever remotely guilty of bribery or corrupt practices; and I never did, not only in this election but in any other election, use one dollar, or allow the use of one dollar, or knowingly permit the use of one dollar, nor had I the remotest idea or knowledge of the use of one dollar for my election, the corrupt use of it for bribery, or for any other corrupt purpose, either to the Lower House or to this body. If Senators even suggest that they think I did have knowledge of any corrupt practices of any kind, have the knowledge in any degree, I am very sorry for it. On my word as a man—and even the Tribune will not say to you or intimate to you that they know of any time I ever even remotely broke that word or violated faith; even they will not say to you that I am guilty of that act—I never gave nor do I know of any other person giving any kind of a promise, or any money, or anything else as an inducement for them to vote for me.

My regret, Mr. President, is that anybody should think so. I claim nothing more for myself than any other man. I am not possessed of any more virtues than any other decent citizen of this country. In the life I have lived and worked for 40 years, I may not have succeeded, but I have tried, as hard as a human being can try, to live a life that would make me at least acceptable to the decent citizens of my community. I have tried for 40 years to live a life that will make my neighbors and my townsmen and the people of my State have confidence in me. I say I may not have succeeded, but God knows I have tried. But if I have failed, if I did not succeed, no living man will come to my door and lay the charge of practicing bribery or corrupt practices in any election that I ever was interested in, be it for myself or for anybody else. I regret that there are Senators in this Chamber who feel that they have been able to find anything at all in my business life, in my political career, in my social life, or in my life with my family, that will justify them in even having a suspicion that I have been guilty of the charges they would lay at my door.

I say again, on my word as a man and on my word as a Senator, I am not guilty, and I have no knowledge in the remotest degree that bribery and corruption were practiced in securing a seat for me in this body. No matter what the Tribune says, no matter what they have been able to do through coercion in the State attorney's office in my county, I do not believe that votes were bought by anybody to send me to this body.

I have stated that I knew something about my election to this body, and I have stated to you what I know about it. What I have stated to you is the truth. Even the Tribune will not dare to refute the statement that these 34 Democrats voted for me for the reason I have stated to you, and that they secured the balance of the Democratic votes; and instead of Lee O'Neil Browne, who was friendly to me and who did help me and to whom I am obligated, delivering these 53 votes from the Democratic Party to me when I was elected United States Senator, they, with their influence, with their talk, with their persuasion, delivered Lee O'Neil Browne if there was any delivery of anybody at any time during my election. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Occupants of the galleries will refrain from applause. It is not permitted under the usages of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator to withhold the motion for one moment.

Mr. LODGE. I withhold it for a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts withholds the motion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish merely to state that in view of the lateness of the hour and the desire of the Senator from Massachusetts to go into executive session on a very important matter of business, it is manifest I can not continue my remarks this evening. Therefore, with the permission of the Senate, I shall continue them to-morrow after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 25 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 23, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 22, 1911.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for the great men who have contributed to the life, growth, and character of our Republic, especially for that heroic soul who led our fathers to victory in the unequaled contest between the American Colonies and the oppression of the mother country and established our independence; then wove his own incomparable character into the warp and woof of a government of the people, by the people, for the people; then first in the hearts of his countrymen, now first in the hearts of their children, and first in the hearts of the liberty loving people of all the world. Grant that the millions who love him may repeat in song and story on this his natal day his deeds and strive earnestly to follow his illustrious example, that our Republic may become great in all that makes a nation great, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, Tuesday, February 21, was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The point is sustained.

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 51, noes 18.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House is ordered. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander, N. Y.	Gaines	Law	Rhinock
Ashbrook	Gallagher	Lawrence	Riordan
Bates	Gardner, Mass.	Lindsay	Sabath
Bennett, Ky.	Gardner, Mich.	McCredie	Saunders
Borland	Garner, Pa.	McDermott	Sheffield

Elvins	Joyce	Pou	Wood, N. J.
Fassett	Kahn	Pray	Woodyard
Foelker	Korbly	Rauch
Fornes	Kronmiller	Reeder
Fowler	Langley	Reid

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 290 Members—a quorum—have answered "present."

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered on yesterday upon the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 32212) and all amendments to the final passage. Is a separate vote asked for on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with instructions to strike out, on page 59, line 23, the word "two" and insert "one;" and to strike out the letter "s" in the word "battleships;" and to strike out the word "each" in line 24, page 59, and in line 3, page 60, and forthwith to report the bill so amended to the House, and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to recommit the bill, with the following instructions:

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs with instructions to strike out, on page 59, line 23, the word "two" and insert "one;" to strike out the letter "s" of the word "battleships;" and strike out the word "each" in line 24, page 59, and line 3, page 60, and forthwith report the bill so amended to the House.

The SPEAKER. And on that motion the gentleman demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 167, answered "present" 4, not voting 75, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. REEDER with Mr. FORNES.

For balance of session:

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia with Mr. BYRD.

On two battleships:

Mr. VREELAND (against) with Mr. SAUNDERS (in favor).

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. VREELAND. I notice that the pair was not announced. If he were present, I would vote "aye."

Mr. ANDRUS. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye," but I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. RIORDAN. I wish to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

Mr. ANDRUS voted "present" as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FOSS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FORTIFICATIONS BILL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 32865) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes. And pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be had for 40 minutes, 20 minutes on a side, to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications bill, and pending that asks unanimous consent that all general debate on this bill be limited to 40 minutes, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, this being the anniversary of the natal day of the Father of our Country, George Washington, I ask unanimous consent that Representative SHEPPARD, of Texas, be given 20 minutes to deliver an address on George Washington.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. Pending the announcement of the vote, the gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent, to-day being the anniversary of the birth of George Washington, that Representative SHEPPARD, of Texas, be allowed to address the House, for how long?

Mr. BOEHNE. For 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. In committee?

Mr. BOEHNE. In the House.

The SPEAKER. But the motion has been agreed to to go into committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. STERLING in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications bill, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 32865) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This bill carries, in round numbers, $5,300,000. It is the lowest fortification bill since that for the fiscal year of 1907 and, with the exception of the bill for 1907, is the lowest in amount carried for 11 years. The amounts appropriated are almost equally divided between continental United States and the insular possessions. It does not include, however, any appropriations for the fortification of the Panama Canal, for the reason that the Panama Canal appropriation estimates were sent in by the department in connection with the sundry civil bill, and it was determined by the Committee on Appropriations that those items should be considered in connection with the canal estimates, and that subject will come before the House in the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

There are no appropriations in this bill for distinctly new armament in continental United States. The appropriation for continental United States consists of matters pertaining to the improvement and efficiency of the existing armament, the improvement of the fire control, and the increase of ammunition supplies and the like. Appropriations are also carried for the mobile artillery and the like. The balance of this bill is for the fortification in the insular possessions.

I want at this time to state that while it has never been the practice of Congress to designate where money should be spent for fortifications, that being left to the wisdom and judgment of the War Department, a somewhat different policy has been pursued in the appropriations for the insular possessions from that heretofore pursued with reference to continental United States.

While not designating where money was to be expended in the insular possessions, it has been the practice to ascertain what would be the cost of the completion of a given unit of defense, and give that amount of money with the understanding that it would be expended for that purpose. This enabled us, as we thought, to know just how far we had progressed in the completion of the Taft Board plans for the fortification of the insular possessions. I regret to say that it now develops that the cost of the works in the Philippines was underestimated, and we have not, therefore, covered so large a percentage of the work to be done in the Philippines with past appropriations as we had hoped we had done. The change probably will amount to at least a million dollars, in the aggregate, but the appropriations for the insular possessions are now drawing to a conclusion. The appropriations for the Hawaiian Islands are practically closed, and in the Philippine group the fortifications are nearly all provided for. It does not seem to me that the appropriations in the future can be very considerable, and now, as the appropriations for the Philippines have largely been made, I want to say that it is my belief that upon the completion of a somewhat small additional amount of work upon the island of Corregidor it will become one of the great historic fortresses of the world and the most impregnable citadel now in existence on this earth. I am glad this work is now approaching completion in these new possessions before we are compelled to enter upon the expenditures for the fortification of the Panama Canal now at hand.

As this bill contains no new features whatever and is so small compared with the bills of recent years, it was believed there would be little matter of contention contained in it, and for that reason the general debate has been decreased. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman takes his seat I desire to ask him a question. Will he yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman whether under the Taft or any other plan there is proposed any fortification for Alaska. It has been called to the attention of the committees of the House recently that there are valuable coal deposits there, and it has also been called to my attention that up in Controller Bay, which is the bay nearest the United States to the rich coal fields of Alaska, there is a harbor that will afford ample protection for our naval fleet. Has there been any consideration by any board as to the fortification of that or any other part of the Alaskan territory?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I can only say in reply to that question that during the administration of President Cleveland a special board was created, headed by Secretary Endicott, to report to Congress what fortifications were needed. That board reported, but did not report in favor of fortifying anything on the coast of Alaska. During the last administration a new board was created by Executive order, which was known as the Taft Board. This board was never authorized by Congress, nor has it ever been officially approved of in its work by Congress, but it is the latest work of the War Department on this subject, and it does not recommend the fortification of the coast of Alaska.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman referred to an appropriation to be carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the fortification of the Panama Canal. It has been reported that the amount of that appropriation is in the neighborhood of four and one-half millions of dollars. Does the gentleman know whether the report is approximately correct?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is in error when he says that I stated that any appropriation will be carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill for canal fortifications.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman suggested it might be carried.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I suggested that the estimates were sent in for the sundry civil appropriation bill and that the matter would be considered upon that bill. It is not proper, Mr. Chairman, for members of the Appropriation Committee to express opinions as to what that committee will probably do in the future on matters not pending before the House. The sundry civil bill has been carefully considered by the subcommittee on the sundry civil bill and has not yet been reported to the Committee on Appropriations. In my judgment it would be ungracious to the Committee on Appropriations to inform the gentleman before that committee even was informed what the subcommittee proposes to do, but I think the gentleman may rest assured that it will not carry four and one-half millions of dollars.

Mr. HAMMOND. May I ask the gentleman, the estimate is about four and a half millions?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The estimate is about $5,000,000, which is an estimate not for the completion, however, but for the next year.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is for next year?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is for next year.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman has stated that the estimates carried in this bill in round numbers amounts to about $5,300,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. HAMMOND. If an appropriation of approximately $4,000,000 be made for the Panama Canal fortifications, would not the total appropriation for fortifications be about as much as has been carried heretofore?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I must say to the gentleman that I must decline, with all possible courtesy, to tell him how much I think will be carried in the sundry civil bill for that purpose. Five million dollars are asked for, and I am willing to say to the gentleman, as a matter of mathematics, if $5,000,000 be authorized the two items together would make approximately $10,000,000, which would be in excess of bills in recent years.

Mr. HAMMOND. What have the amounts been in recent years?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. For 1911 it is $5,600,000; for 1910, $8,170,000; for 1909, $9,316,000, and so on.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. I see that one of the items of the bill carries an appropriation of $150,000 for seacoast batteries for the Hawaiian Islands. Can the gentleman tell us with propriety where those batteries will be planted?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Well, where they will have the most effective efficiency. All the seacoast batteries were supposed to be provided for these islands and all armament except some small batteries and guns to keep out small boats from the entrance to Pearl Channel. The Hawaiian Islands were supposed to be entirely provided for, with this exception, in the last bill.

Mr. SCOTT. There are no fortifications intended for any of the islands except the Island of Oahu.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There were none reported by the Taft Board, and none are contemplated by the War Department.

Mr. SCOTT. My recollection is that the statement was made, in the course of debate upon this floor in the last two days, that Hawaii would fall an easy prey to any enemy which might attack the United States. Is it the judgment of the gentleman as a member of this committee that when we complete the fortifications on the Island of Oahu contemplated, as I understand in the appropriations made in this bill, that the island will be measurably defended?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I should say, Mr. Chairman, least of any man here claiming to be an expert on military science, I would state that Honolulu and its harbor and Pearl Channel and Pearl Harbor will be amply defended when the money now appropriated here, or contemplated to be appropriated, shall be expended. It is true that the configuration of this island is such that a landing might be made upon the opposite side of the island from Honolulu, and a landing force might come down upon these fortifications from the rear, but it would be useless to attempt to fortify the opposite side of the island. It is impossible to fortify coasts. What we can possibly fortify would be harbors, and there is no harbor upon the other side of the island and a landing might be effected there, and against such a landing we can rely for our defense upon the protection of the American Army which, I believe, will be there in time to prevent a force landing on the island back of these fortifications.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How nearly complete are the fortifications at Pearl Harbor?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The fortifications on Pearl Harbor are complete so far as mounting the 12-inch guns are concerned, but the harbor is not yet open. Originally Pearl Channel was a winding and tortuous channel with projecting coral reefs, through which nothing more than a 700-ton burden vessel had ever gone under its own power in the history of the world. We are now excavating that channel and forming an entrance into Pearl Harbor, but that work is not yet complete.

The harbor is not yet opened. We are proceeding with the opening of it and its defense and fortification upon parallel lines, and when this channel is so far opened that vessels of sufficient magnitude to be dangerous can enter Pearl Harbor the fortifications at the mouth of it will be absolutely completed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To about what depth are they dredging it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is not strictly a process of dredging. It is the cutting away of these coral reefs. The water is deep enough in Pearl Channel, and always was, but the channel was winding and tortuous and filled with these projecting coral capes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have been over there, and that is the reason I asked about it. What depth are they to make it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not tell you the depth, but it will be an ample ship channel for the heaviest naval ships of the world.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield for a minute only?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will, but I have only four minutes, and my colleagues have not had any opportunity whatever.

Mr. HOBSON. Since the question has evidently been raised as to the accuracy of remarks of mine referring to the taking of Hawaii, I just simply wish to state for the information of the committee that my information was accurate, that the war games have been worked out, and what I stated has actually been the result of the war games, and what was pointed out actually did happen, namely, a landing was made on the opposite side and Pearl Harbor was taken from the rear.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I now ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to use such portion of his time as he may desire, and I will reserve the balance of mine.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. KNOWLAND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 9693. An act to provide for the payment of the traveling and other expenses of United States circuit and district judges when holding court at places other than where they reside;

S. 9874. An act to refund to the Gate of Heaven Church, South Boston, Mass., duty collected on stained-glass windows;

S. 10095. An act to provide for the acquisition of a site on which to erect a public building at Gilmer, Tex.; and

S. 8047. An act for the relief of Clement A. Lounsberry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 31538. An act to authorize the Pensacola, Mobile & New Orleans Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across the Mobile River and its navigable channels on a line opposite the city of Mobile, Ala.; and

H. R. 16268. An act for the relief of Thomas Seals.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution (H. Res. 61):

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 25061) for the relief of Helen S. Hogan.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, to my party colleagues I owe somewhat of an apology. I shall not be able to explain in detail the bill or add anything of value to what has been said by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], as my sickness prevented my being present during the hearings or during the making up of the bill. But I have carefully gone over the hearings since that time, and over the bill, and it does not carry, in my judgment, any unnecessary items, and it does carry all the necessary items that I am aware of. The estimates submitted to the committee were this year very moderate, and therefore the percentage of reduction is very much less than in previous years; but, as just stated, we do carry all necessary appropriations to continue the defense both of Continental America and all her possessions.

I desire to also second what has just been said by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] touching the Hawaiian Islands. They will, upon the expenditure of the money heretofore appropriated, and in this bill to be appropriated, be in a position of as good defense as we can hope to put them by virtue of fortifications. And gentlemen need not be unduly worried as to the probability of a force landing on the other side of the island on which is situated Honolulu. As stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], fortifications necessarily can only protect specific points. It has never been expected that fortifications should protect an entire coast line, and there are hundreds of places upon the American shore, and there must always remain hundreds of places where theoretically, and perhaps practically, a hostile fleet, unmolested, under proper weather conditions, could land a force. That is true of the Hawaiian Islands as it is of America generally, and not true of it in any other sense.

This bill also, as stated by the gentleman, does not carry any of the items in regard to the fortification of Panama. To my mind this was a mistake. I believe that the fortifications of Panama should be carried in the fortification bill. I do not believe that it is proper to charge to the engineering cost of the Panama Canal the moneys that may be expended for the fortification of that canal. And it would have enabled us to have kept more clearly in mind the totals that are to be expended for fortifications if those items had been carried in this bill. But in the wisdom of the committee they were not so carried, and if carried at all, will be carried in the sundry civil bill.

In view of the limited opportunity that I have had to consider this bill in its preparation, I do not know that there is anything further that I can say to the committee at this time. Unless some one desires to ask a question, I will now yield to my colleague.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to one question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] is correct in that the Hawaiian Islands are going to be taken away from us within 10 months, it would not be desirable to spend any more money out there, I suppose.

Mr. SHERLEY. With due deference both to the patriotism and the learning of the gentleman from Alabama, I have been forced, in contributing my part to the preparation of the fortifications bill, to rely on other opinions.

Mr. MANN. I wondered whether the gentleman from Alabama was going to oppose or favor the proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not consulted him on that proposition. I have thought it worth while that the Government should continue fortifying, regardless of this opinion of the gentleman, and I think the expenditure of the money will not be interfered with by the taking of the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman pardon me? I did not quite catch his meaning.

Mr. SHERLEY. I said that while appreciating his skill and patriotism, I had not in the past, and could not in the consideration of this bill, and the appropriations carried by it, rest upon his views for my position, and that I considered that the money now proposed to be appropriated for fortifications in the Hawaiian Islands would be expended, notwithstanding the prophecy of the gentleman as to the seizure of the islands within 10 months. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say to him that neither heretofore have I gone to him, nor probably hereafter would I ever come to ask him, to take up the execution of propositions relating to the national defense. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERLEY. I appreciate the fact that we are very wide apart, and probably will remain so—wide enough probably to enable us to meet on the other side. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOBSON. I am not quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to meet the gentleman beyond the river. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky how much time it will take to complete the projects laid out by the War Department or by the Fortifications Board.

Mr. SHERLEY. I could not say now from memory.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The reason I ask that question is that one year they asked for $38,000,000, and we appropriated only one-fourth of that amount.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman will find in the statement or report accompanying the bill the totals that we have appropriated, and the totals that were recommended by the Taft Board as necessary. Of course, the difference, in a sense, is what remains unappropriated, although it must be borne in mind that a part of the appropriation each year is not used in the completion of the plans, but is used in maintenance and in the purchase of powder for seacoast practice, and other items of that kind, so that the difference between the sum originally estimated and the sum appropriated does not actually show the amount remaining yet to be appropriated. But the gentleman can get for himself all that information by reading the report. I have not been able to refresh my memory sufficiently to answer offhand.

I now yield to my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] five minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] is recognized.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, while no appropriation is carried in this bill looking to the fortification of the Panama Canal, in view of the fact that this Congress is rapidly drawing to a close and the difficulty of securing time at some future date, it will not be inappropriate now to discuss the question of the fortification of the Panama Canal, and I shall therefore avail myself of the opportunity that has been afforded me by my colleague to say something along that line. All doubt as to the ultimate success and efficiency of the canal can not be removed until after its completion and until it has been demonstrated that it will serve satisfactorily the purpose for which it was intended. If we are not to have a canal and it shall not prove to be a success, then, obviously, there is no occasion for any expenditures for fortifications. But if it shall result, as we all hope and trust and pray it will, that it shall prove to be the triumphant success that we expect it to be, then I am in favor of using the utmost skill at the command of the American Army officers, and I am in favor of appropriating the uttermost penny that shall be required to make the canal as safe, as secure, and as impregnable as our skill and money can make it.

But we might further bear in mind the fact that when the type of the canal was under discussion, and the question was under consideration whether it should be a lock canal or a sea-level canal, there was grave doubt expressed as to whether the lock type, which has been adopted, will prove to be effective. And in this connection it may also be well enough to bear in mind the fact that the original estimate for the sea-level canal was $140,000,000. This has now grown to $400,000,000, not for a sea-level, but for a lock type of canal, which has always been considered the cheaper proposition of the two. The appropriation that I understand will be reported to the House by the committee is, I take it, but the initial sum; and, as I said before, after it has been demonstrated that the canal will carry our fleet from one ocean to the other, that it will carry the large ocean-going vessels of commerce efficiently and satisfactorily, then I say this Government should not spare any sum to make it safe and secure.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HELM. Certainly.

Mr. KOPP. Right along the question of a sea-level or lock canal, does not the gentleman also think that the fact that it is a lock canal makes the necessity for fortifications all the greater?

Mr. HELM. By all means.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. HELM. I can not work myself up into a nervous rigor through alarm or fear of war. It has been my invariable observation here that as soon as these appropriation bills for the Army and the Navy are behind us grim-visaged war smoothes his wrinkled front very easily. That is not only true of the advocates of large navies and large armies, but it is also true of the press.

I do not consider it a safe proposition to erect a home in any locality this side of the New Jerusalem without putting locks on the doors, and if it is my house I want to carry the keys to that house. There are some people wise enough to put locks on their stables before their horses are stolen. [Applause.] There are few people who want to do business with a banking institution that has not a safe vault and a secure place in which to store its treasure, no matter how reverently the law is respected by the community in which the institution is located. It would be absolute folly to construct a fort and store in it arms and munitions for a siege and put no defensive guns there to protect the fort. The canal is of extraordinary value and importance. It would be just as logical and just as sensible to construct this canal and not fortify it as it would be to build a residence and not secure it as best you can, or to have a banking institution without a safe vault in which to store your treasure, or to build a fort without guns.

The Panama Canal will be one of the most strategic points on the Western Hemisphere; it is either going to make us stronger or it is going to make us weaker.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield the gentleman four minutes more.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HELM. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Of course we will put the lock on the stable door, but you would not put the lock on the door before you had the stable?

Mr. HELM. No; I would not. I say we should wait until the canal makes good and then fortify it.

Mr. SIMS. Exactly; we do not know now that the canal will be a success.

Mr. SHERLEY. In that connection, if the gentleman will allow me, suppose the organized force they have on concrete could save you about 33 per cent by doing the work while the force was there, do you not think it would be economy and good business judgment to do it now instead of waiting until the force disorganized and left the Isthmus?

Mr. HELM. We had an exhibition of the canal here in this House by Col. Goethals, the officer in charge of that work. He told the membership of this House, such as were present, that this canal would be ready for the test in 1913. His reference to the possible seepage from the lake was very significant and not altogether reassuring. I do not believe that that force will be away from there at that date, and it will be ample time then to adopt measures of fortifications. I do not say—it is not my advice to this House to wait until it has been tried out and tested thoroughly and completely before you begin the fortifications, but when you have a reasonable assurance that it will be efficient and effective, then it is time to begin to take such steps.

Mr. SIMS. Col. Goethals says that we could send ships through in 1913, two years before it was completed, and that would be a test.

Mr. HELM. There is but one of two things for Congress to do—either to agree to fortify this canal or stop digging it, for as you do or do not fortify you will strengthen or weaken our position as a naval and as a military force.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELM. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think England's position as a great power is weakened by her failure to fortify the Suez Canal?

Mr. HELM. I do not think England's position is weakened, but my candid opinion is that England has, to all intents and purposes, securely fortified the Suez Canal. Every avenue of approach by sea to the Suez Canal is strongly fortified.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman assumes that because they have large guns——

Mr. HELM. The difference between the Panama Canal and the Suez Canal is that the latter is a stock company, several different nations or sovereignties owning the stock, while we are paying our hard money, and a prodigious sum of it, for digging this canal; we have bought this strip of land and we are paying for the work as it progresses. We are the sole owners of the entire enterprise and project.

Under the treaty with Panama, we alone have the right of sovereignty, dominion, and control of the Canal Zone.

The canal is an outlying naval and Army post, intended and believed by all to be the most vital strategic and vital war measure of our national defense. It is a thousand miles from our base. I can not believe that in its isolated position it is safer without fortifications than with them. If we fortify it it will be a means of defense; if we refuse to fortify it we are but furnishing any possible enemy the means of assailing us the more effectively.

We have guaranteed the independence of Panama; have reserved to ourselves the extraordinary right of intervention in order to maintain a stable power and government there; and we have guaranteed to all nations of the world the right to use the canal on terms of equality. How can we enforce these guaranties without the means at hand to do so?

The United States intends to and will dedicate the canal to the use of the commerce of the world on terms of equality; that is to say, there shall be no favored nation. This is all that is to be understood or implied from the treaty with Great Britain. By the neutrality agreement no one ever supposed that we intended presenting the canal to the world as a kind of Christmas gift. We alone have the right to exercise sovereignty and dominion over the Canal Zone, and have covenanted with Panama that this right shall not pass from us or be exercised by any other nation. Panama has no claim whatsoever, except an annual rental. Furthermore, the Panama treaty, in which the expressed right to fortify is granted, is of later date than the British treaty. There was, and has been, no protest lodged against the terms of the Panama treaty. The "general principle" of neutrality in the British treaty relates solely to the commercial usages of the canal. This commercial neutrality can be preserved and is not violated by a fortified canal. In fact, I fail to see any repugnance between neutralization and fortification in their application to the Panama Canal.

Without fortification our entire naval strength would have to be centered at both ends of the canal; this would leave our entire coast line exposed, so that in the event of war the canal would be a positive disadvantage to us. Will the American Congress be so foolish as to spend $750,000,000 for a trap to be caught in? Will it spend that staggering sum of money to dig a pit to fall into?

The canal was intended, in the event of war, to give us an advantage over the enemy. If we have not the right to fortify under the treaty with Great Britain, we have not the right to defend it with our Navy, but must stand idly by and watch the procession of the enemy's fleet pass through the canal to our disadvantage provided the promise in the treaty not to injure the canal during the passage is kept. I shall never sanction such an interpretation or construction of that treaty. Fortify it or fight.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HELM. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

[Mr. McMORRAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, has the time been completely exhausted on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not desire to consume the balance of my time, and I call for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sums of money herein provided for be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available until expended, namely:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] may address the committee for 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A year ago to-day the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE] delivered a most eloquent eulogy on the life and deeds of Washington. On this, another anniversary of Washington's birth, I rise for a similar purpose. I trust it will become a custom for some Member of the House to deliver on each succeeding anniversary a tribute to his memory.

Perhaps the most unchanging theme of psalm and song, philosophy and prayer, since lips could speak and hearts could break has been the emptiness of all earth's pageantry, the fickleness of humanity's presiding star. From page and tongue the melancholy cry ascends. How soon are men and all the memories of men engulfed beneath the flood of years, their voices stifled in the torrent of the centuries. To few indeed of all the multitudes that have lived and loved and hoped and vanished has it been given to surmount the tide. Defying time and storm they stand like giant columns in the tumultuous stream unmoved. Too often even these, the favorites of destiny, are all but lost to view amid the haze of disappearing ages. But there is one among this company of the great so enduring that not only does his character, crested in eternal light, retain its identity unobscured, its radiance undimmed, but advances before the deluge of events to point posterity to ideals of thought and conduct that will never be surpassed. That character is Washington. In strength of moral fiber, in firmness and purity of purpose, in modesty and dignity of bearing, in freedom from mere personal ambition, in courage that disaster could but emphasize, in wide-winged judgment, in beneficence of example, and in the influence of his achievements on the progress of humanity he stands unequaled and alone. He occupies the foremost rank in the illustrious group that has constructed the governments and societies of mankind. Without organized society there can be no art, no science, no education, no law, no culture, no upward stride. The founders and the preservers of States, empires, and nations are thus the primary instruments of civilization. Among these Washington is preeminent.

Let us summon the prodigies of the past, array them by his side, and observe how he outranks them all. Consider Pericles, one of the most imposing figures of antiquity. His name denotes the brightest period of Athenian development. His elegance in speech and action, his gallantry in arms and gentleness in peace, his love of the beautiful in art, the just in law, his devotion to the masses, their comforts, and their rights, the splendor of his domestic and foreign policies, made him the idol of his people, an ornament of time. His rule and inspiration gave to Athens and to eternity the Parthenon, the Odeon, the Propylea. But on his fame there falls the shadow of Aspasia. His sway was personal and autocratic; he could not efface his own ambition in the general good. His chief concern was the glory of the present and of Pericles. Wedded to glamor and display, he made himself the exclusive prop and guardian of the state, and when he died it fell a prey to demagogues and factions. Call Alexander from his sarcophagus of gold—the master of the world at 33. Statesman, student, warrior, murderer, voluptuary, it is difficult to believe that so noble an aspect, such towering gifts, could coexist with such depravity. He signalized his access to the throne with the butchery of a little girl, the representative of a collateral line, while yet within her mother's arms. Shortly before he died he crucified the physician who attended the last hours of his friend, Hephaestion, and as a sacrifice to Hephaestion's memory exterminated a whole community. Other friends he sent to death on frivolous grounds, destroying in a drunken frenzy a beloved companion for questioning his divinity. Extravagance, dissipation, luxury, followed in his crimson steps.

On the other hand, he founded universities and cities, and in the pathway of his armies Greek learning spread throughout the earth. He became one of the determining forces of human history. In ecstatic arrogance he claimed the honors of omnipotence and was saluted by a fawning world as son of Jupiter. He reached the summits of human power, but his example is condemned by the enlightened verdict of posterity. The colossal fabric his sword had builded did not long survive; he contributed little to freedom and less to virtue. Consider Hannibal, the consummate strategist, who at 26 began the boldest enterprise in military annals and who for 16 years disputed with Rome the scepter of the world. Mountains, glaciers, gorges, legions, storms, and winters could not arrest his remarkable advance from Carthage to the interior of Italy. Maintaining for 16 years in hostile territory an army of 20 different nationalities, defeating the proudest troops and generals of a race transcendent in military prowess, he was the only barrier between the Roman Republic and the ascendency of the earth. He was pronounced by Polybius the model warrior of all time, but he fought for empire, not for principle. Recalled by the Government his valor had made immortal, he was attacked and banished. But his heroic spirit was unbroken, his bitterness against his ancient antagonists undiminished. Forming confederacies in Asia, he struggled on to find at last the only refuge from his foes in suicide. Inglorious end! He added nothing to the cause of human liberty; with him it was Carthage against Rome for world supremacy. Hatred of his enemies was the dominating passion of his existence; death by his own hand in a land of strangers was his unhappy fate.

Call mighty Julius, commander, historian, politician, who gathered into his own possession the substance of authority while yet the people worshipped the empty symbols of a dead republic. Accomplished in diplomacy and war, unprincipled in conduct, skilled in every art of winning popular devotion, he believed in neither God nor freedom. He filled the world's horizon until assassination laid his corpse upon the corpse he had made of liberty. The effect of his career was to magnify the avocation of arms, to belittle peace, to place military authority and military ideals above the civil in the estimation of his time. He could think of no term more shameful in rebuking a body of mutinous soldiers than to address them as citizens. He builded a personal tyranny on the ruins of human rights; his name became an everlasting emblem of autocracy. On the foundation of his sword arose the bloody structure of the world's first universal empire. A thousand years of kings and emperors compose the heritage he left the world. Consider Charlemagne, whose marvelous capacity lifted him to the overlordship of nearly all of medieval Europe. He did much to reestablish order and culture in a time of violence. He founded schools, encouraged literature, and in a series of proclamations called capitularies announced standards of thought and action that were termed by Ampere the charter of modern knowledge. But while he advanced the learning he made no effort to restore the liberties of men. His hands were wet with blood of helpless victims, and imperial power had no stronger votary. Desolation, waste, and massacre are too prominent among the memorials of his dominion. Call William, preserver of Normandy, conqueror of England, victor of Val-es-Dunes, of Varaville, and Senlac—William, superb alike in battle and in council chamber; terrible in countenance and in strife, gigantic in stature and in brain, of whom Freeman declared: "No man that ever trod this earth was endowed with greater natural gifts; to no man was it ever granted to accomplish greater things."

The fact remains, however, that he accomplished little for the liberty and the happiness of man. The lawlessness and cruelty of his Viking antecedents found expression in the ferocity of his revenge and wrath. Throughout all England his invading fires lit up a scene of famine, pestilence, and death. Often he practiced the most revolting barbarities, on one occasion burning out the eyes of prisoners, hewing hands and feet from living bodies.

Observe Napoleon, without whose name no history of the world may be called complete; Napoleon who rewrote the map of Europe with his sword, Napoleon whose personality and power aroused a devotion among his countrymen that approached idolatry, Napoleon whose brain, said Hugo, "was the sum of human faculties, and who was seen standing erect on the horizon, a gleaming scimitar in his hand, a splendor in his eyes, unfolding amid the thunder his two wings, the Grand Army and the Old Guard." He assumed control of France when through its veins were leaping the new-born fires of revolution, the virgin energies of fraternity and freedom. Dazzling his countrymen with the resplendence of his genius, he turned these sacred currents to the elevation of himself. Thus he reestablished tyranny with the very forces that had overthrown it. Thus he exalted his own fortunes above the fortunes of his country, his own interests above the interests of humanity. Beethoven, monarch of all harmony, the friend of man, who registered in eternal melody the mutations of history, composed a triumphal symphony in honor of Napoleon when his elevation to the first consulship seemed an appropriate sequel to the Revolution. Hearing that Napoleon had yielded to the lust of power and made himself an emperor, he changed the symphony into a funeral march to symbolize the death of liberty.

The contrast presented by the life of Washington with these other lives is gratifying and refreshing not only to every American, but to the friends of liberty in every portion of the globe. [Loud applause.] Without experience in directing warlike operations on an extended scale, without adequate equipment for his troops, without a supporting government or treasury of even moderate strength, he was summoned from the farm to the red arena of the battle. Through incredible difficulties, with a patience and a courage that bordered on the superhuman, he led a small and undisciplined body of men taken suddenly from the ordinary callings of life to final victory against one of the foremost nations of the world. In triumph and in disaster he was alike immovable and serene; in official conduct and in private intercourse his every act was free from the slightest taint of intemperance, immorality, or corruption. No massacre of helpless foes, no deeds of cruelty defiled his fame. He claimed and received no reward for his services beyond the gratitude of his country. The idol of the Army and the people, he might easily have become a king, yea, established an empire that would ultimately have embraced a continent. He rejected the glittering prospect to resume the cultivation of the soil in the seclusion of Mount Vernon, his rural home. A few years later he was again summoned to his country's aid. As the presiding officer of the convention that framed the American Constitution, as the first President of the Republic it created, a Republic that in 11 decades has reached a population of approximately a hundred millions, and whose example illuminates the world, he became for all time one of the chief figures in the advancement of human happiness and freedom. [Applause.] Again he retired to his ancestral halls and fields, where he remained until his death. Thus he taught that the pursuits of peace are more sublime than those of war, the functions of private life more noble than those of public station, the attractions of the farm more permanent and uplifting than those of noisy cities.

And who will deny that the hand that wielded the sword of righteous revolution, that forced the tyrant from our shores, that signed the American Constitution and guided the mightiest Republic of all history into secure and glorious being, was ever greater than when it trained the roses in the gardens of Mount Vernon? [Loud applause.] There is a wonderful significance in the fact that Washington perished practically at the close of the eighteenth century. That century marked the permanent advent of liberty in human institutions; it witnessed the birth and rise of Washington, without whom this advent might have been delayed indefinitely. Thus an ideal century and an ideal man died almost together. As sculpture finds its most beautiful expression in the marbles of Phidias, painting its loftiest era in the frescoes of Raphael, dramatic poetry its superbest notes in the plays of Shakespeare, philosophy its profoundest embodiment in the inductions of Aristotle, music its most perfect utterance in the oratorios of Handel, the operas of Mozart, the sonatas of Beethoven, so human conduct finds its brightest mirror in the life and deeds of Washington. [Applause.]

Of such world import is his name that it looms larger through the gathering years. To-day, more than a century after his death, the interest and the love of earth's increasing millions are centered in his memory. Let me refer here to the modest ceremony of his burial, an episode that has not received the attention it deserves. His funeral was in keeping with the quiet and simple majesty that had marked his whole existence. Under the stately portico of his home on one of the loveliest eminences of the Potomac rested his coffined form on a cloudless December afternoon nearly 112 years ago.

The peace of an indulgent God was on his brow; the affection of a liberated people at his feet. The profound impression of serenity and repose his motionless frame imparted gave evidence that in death he had but added another victory to the long list of his renowned achievements. No pomp, no decoration, no pride and circumstance of state emblazoned these final hours. From the countryside and from neighboring Alexandria poured his friends and fellow citizens in informal array. A few companies of artillery and cavalry with a single band of music gave the only martial touch to the proceedings. The firing of solemn minute guns from a little vessel in the Potomac; the sad procession across the wooded lawns and slopes to the family vault upon the river's edge; the dirge that quavered in the December winds and sobbed upon the waters; the chanting of the Episcopal orders of the dead; the death service of the Masonic ritual, with the weird response, "So mote it be," from the brotherhood he loved and honored; the commanding figures of the pallbearers, all colonels of the Revolution, his comrades in war, his friends in peace; the unusual luster of the declining sun with which his soul went down that evening to rise again upon the shores of endless morning, comprise a picture that will never vanish from the lengthening galleries of immortality. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

And so they laid him down to sleep in the loving arms of old Mount Vernon, where the poplar and the aspen whisper peace unto his ashes and glory to his soul; where the Potomac bears every day the message of a people's love and veneration. [Prolonged applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Proving ground, Sandy Hook, N. J.: For current expenses of the ordnance proving ground, Sandy Hook, N. J., comprising the maintenance of rail and water transportation, repairs, alterations, accessories, and service of employees incidental to testing and proving ordnance material, hire of assistants for the Ordnance Board, purchase of instruments and articles required for testing and experimental work, building and repairing butts and targets, clearing and grading ranges, $56,200.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the estimates for mountain, field, and siege cannon equipment, and so forth, for the coming fiscal year were $860,000. The committee has reduced that to $498,000. There has been a good deal of criticism in the press of late of our lack of preparedness in the matter of guns. I assume that the committee considered this matter very carefully, but that is a very large reduction, assuming that the estimate of the department was a reasonable estimate.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs to provide mountain, field, and siege guns for the militia. More than a year ago it was announced that the militia was fully supplied with guns. The Regular Army is also fully supplied, and a few reserve batteries are now in the possession of the Government beyond that under any former estimate necessary to supply both the Regular Army and the militia. The gentleman will observe that we have put $200,000 in this bill for the conversion of the old type of guns into the modern field guns, which will go much further than an equal amount in the construction of new guns in equipping the Army. Suddenly the War Department changed its plans overnight from two guns to 1,000 men to three guns to 1,000 men, and announced that the militia supply was more than $700,000 short, although it had been given in prior military bills the full estimated equipment. More than $700,000 is appropriated in the military bill this year for this same class of guns, making with the $400,000 that we gave them, and without considering the appropriation for the modernizing of the old guns, far more than they ever got in any year in modern times.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman state for the information of the committee the basis of the size of the Army upon which these estimates have been made from time to time?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the Army has also been increased. As we would think we were about approaching the supply necessary for the Army, and as there came to be no claim for further appropriations, they would increase the theoretical Army from 500,000 to 600,000 men, thus increasing the number of guns required, and then increased the number of guns required for 1,000 men, and by the time we had appropriated five or six years we were not as near the completion of the reserve supply as we were when we started. Now, for this reason, and because the combined amount carried in this bill and the military bill exceeded the amount given in recent years for this purpose, and because we are providing for the reconstruction of old batteries, we feel we have been generous to the department, in place of parsimonious, in cutting this estimate in two.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's explanation is complete and satisfactory. I do not think, however, it is a question of being generous to the department in the matter of guns. It is a question of how much war material do we need as a matter of reserve, and there has been a great amount of criticism that Congress has been penurious and parsimonious in not granting appropriations to supply a reasonable reserve. It has been said that if there was a sudden declaration of war we would not be able to rapidly expand our forces; but I assume that the various committees have considered all these matters and that possibly the amount carried is sufficient, but I want to ask the gentleman another question. I notice that the department's estimates for ammunition for mountain, field, and siege guns was $500,000, and that the committee has granted $150,000 for ammunition. There has also been much criticism of a lack of preparedness in the matter of reserve ammunition, and the magazines and newspapers have been full of criticism of the action of Congress in alleged failure to properly supply these necessary munitions of war for emergencies.

I read a magazine article a short time ago, and we must assume these magazine articles are written with knowledge of the facts, in which it was stated we did not have enough ammunition for a single battle; that the seacoast fortifications could fire a few guns on the approach of an enemy, and then would be silenced for lack of ammunition. Now, it seems to me that unless the department was very extravagant in its estimates the committee has been overeconomical in cutting the estimates from $500,000 to $150,000, else there is no foundation for the criticisms that are abroad in the land.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Well, we have passed this item, but I am willing, of course, to explain to the gentleman who criticizes me for the use of the word "generous" and then immediately speaks about our being "penurious." I say to the gentleman the word "generous" was used in contradistinction to "penurious."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to criticize anyone; I am simply seeking for light, information.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman commented on the use of the term "generous" by myself. Now, Mr. Chairman, it appears from the evidence before the committee that they persistently estimated for ammunition upon the basis of the guns authorized and not upon the guns in their possession. They have, in fact, an available balance for the purchase of mountain, field, and siege guns——

Mr. MONDELL. Ammunition?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; I know what I am talking about, if the gentleman will pardon, I am well aware of what I am talking about—more than all the appropriations for the past three years. So slow is this production of this material that all the money appropriated in three years past is in the Treasury for the production of mountain, field, and siege guns.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not that the strongest kind of an argument in favor of having a reserve supply——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit me, I will show whether it is or not. Now, if it appears that the production of mountain, field, and siege guns in the ordinary course requires more than three years, and if ammunition can be produced in six months, it is not necessary to purchase ammunition for the gun that will not be made for three years. That is the first difficulty with the gentleman's proposition in this regard.

Mr. MONDELL. Right there——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Now, if the gentleman will please allow me to finish the statement, then I will cheerfully submit to an interruption. Last year the department asked only $150,000 for reserve ammunition for mountain, field, and siege guns, and got it, and now at the end of the year, with that much added to this reserve, it claims it needs money faster than it did a year ago, which is an unreasonable proposition unless some additional explanation is made of it. We gave them this year all they asked for last year, when they had a less reserve by $150,000 than they have now. Those are in substance the reasons for this reduction. I will now cheerfully yield for any other question which the gentleman may wish to propound.

Mr. MONDELL. If I may make a further inquiry along the same line, I notice in the item of ammunition for seacoast cannon you have reduced the estimate from $250,000 to $140,000, and I hope the gentleman will not assume I am criticizing the committee in referring to these matters.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not.

Mr. MONDELL. But there has been a great deal of talk about our lack of preparedness in the matter of guns and ammunition, and I am seeking for information on the subject. Is it a fact that we are so lacking in preparedness for war that all our ammunition will practically be exhausted at the first broadside from our seacoast artillery and from the mountain, field, and siege guns?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is a matter of common knowledge that no battle with seacoast fortifications will ever be prolonged. No vessel can stay in front and in range of a seacoast gun for any great length of time, for it will either knock the fortifications to pieces or the fortifications will knock it to pieces. The plan of the War Department is to have a supply of ammunition ultimately equal to one hour's maximum fire of every battery in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. And that is considered sufficient?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is considered by them to be sufficient, because it is not supposed there is any probability that we will be attacked upon both coasts at once, and, consequently, by the transportation of this ammunition we could maintain a two hours' fight, which is longer than the life of any 12-inch gun in existence, probably, in our fortifications.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, how near do we come to realize that estimate with the appropriations now available and made in this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. My recollection is that in the hearings of last year it appeared we had over 70 per cent of the amount of ammunition required for the guns mounted, but they were counting guns existing only in the imagination of man as yet. But I again call the gentleman's attention to the fact that last year they only asked $140,000 for reserve ammunition, and got it.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman understand that they have changed their view as to the amount of reserve ammunition they should have?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No, sir. In their judgment, they require in the insular possessions a two hours' fire, because they contemplate that in continental United States, as only one coast is in probable danger at one time, that they have a reserve of another hour's fire on the other coast that can be transported for use, but in the insular possessions they claim they should have a two hours' fire.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman that perhaps most of the explanation of these articles, aside from the lack of information, is to be found in the assumption that we are to have an army of a given size, whereas Congress has never yet agreed to these figures of a standing army of a given size. Naturally the amount of reserve ammunition that you may have will depend upon the size of the army contemplated.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman will admit we must contemplate a large volunteer force in time of war, and therefore the reserve ammunition and the reserve guns should be prepared, not in view of an increase in the regular establishment, but in view of the demands of war when the volunteer forces should be called upon.

Mr. SHERLEY. That assumption is not entirely warranted, because it is just as impossible to create an army of a certain size immediately as it is impossible to create the guns and ammunition for that army. We are speaking of siege guns.

Mr. MONDELL. A volunteer force can be drilled into soldiers in less time than heavy guns can be made.

Mr. SHERLEY. These articles are usually based on the assumption of an army of 500,000 to 750,000, and using that as a basis you get one set of figures of percentages, whereas if you use a less number you get another. I simply suggest that, because nearly all of these statements will be found to vary because of the basis on which they start out.

Mr. MONDELL. I think, from what the gentleman has said, they must be based largely on lack of information.

Mr. SHERLEY. That unquestionably is largely true, but the other enters into it.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I only want to add a word. I think the preparation for war is sufficiently taken care of in this provision of the bill. While we may have wars come, they will not come suddenly. We have a good deal of talk and time for preparation before we have a big battle, if we are attacked. If we are going abroad to attack, we will get ready before we go and take a little time to do so.

Now, I understand that the gentleman in charge of this bill has said that there is a rule to have ammunition for one hour's fire of all guns. That does not mean there is distributed that much ammunition to all the Coast Artillery and other artillery, or the armies and posts, just to that measure. It is to have that on an average; and it is always after a war is likely to come, or has come to us, that the war will center at some particular place or places, and there we can concentrate our ammunition, as we would have to concentrate our Army and Navy forces.

But the suggestion I wanted to make is that we should act prudently in preparing ammunition for a reserve. Much of it formerly—I do not know how much now—was perishable and useless, and in time of war very dangerous to undertake to use at all. Our facilities for making ammunition, especially for Infantry and Cavalry, and for Light Artillery, are very great, and when we commence assembling an army by recruiting up to the full limit the Regular Army and raising a volunteer army we can make ammunition very fast.

I think that has not been one of the troubles in the past. The troubles have been in other directions; rather in the direction of getting soldiers, whether in the Regular Army or Volunteers, trained for war. Soldiers are not made on enlistment and muster into the United States service. The Regular soldiers, if we are to have a long war with a powerful nation, would have to be trained in campaigning and in battles, as has been proved in the past. The soldiers of Napoleon's army, the old soldiers who had gone through many campaigns and battles, became great soldiers. The soldiers of our Civil War, after having served as much as three years, were improved greatly. It has been discussed among distinguished military experts—I do not claim to be one—that the soldiers of both armies in the Civil War who fought in the battle of Gettysburg (July, 1863) were not trained or disciplined or used to battle sufficiently to have been equal to the campaigns of 1864, the Wilderness campaign, or the Atlanta campaign, and my judgment is that we shall be more troubled about making soldiers ready for battle than we shall be troubled about ammunition.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them for closing the channels leading to our principal seaports, and continuing torpedo experiments; for the purchase of the necessary machinery, tools, and implements for the repair shop of the torpedo depot at Fort Totten, N. Y., and for extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods not less than 10 days on work in connection with the issue, receipt, and care of submarine mining material at the torpedo depot, $150,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the chairman of the subcommittee on fortifications inform the House as to the extent to which the inside channels along the Atlantic coast are used for submarine or torpedo-boat purposes?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean, have the torpedo defenses been supplied?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No. I desire to know to what extent the inside channels are used for torpedo boats or submarines.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not inform the gentleman as to that. That is a matter wholly within the work of the Naval Committee. This provision is for torpedoes and mines for submarine defense.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell me to what extent the inside waterways are used for transportation of the torpedoes and mines?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not answer as to that, but I do know that the Atlantic coast is amply provided with submarine defense in all parts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call to the attention of the House the importance and the growing necessity of the inside waterways of the Atlantic coast for purposes of defense as well as for purposes of commerce. There are natural channels along the Atlantic coast line, which is about 1,800 miles long, that have not been opened up sufficiently to be of any great service either to the Department of War or to the Department of the Navy. They are natural channels, and need only to be cut through and connected to make a continuous channel.

It occurred not long since, when the Secretary of the Navy desired to send torpedo boats from one of the navy yards in the North to one of the navy yards in the South, that he found it impracticable to send them through these inside channels, and was obliged to send them outside along the coast, until they struck a storm at Cape Hatteras and were driven back.

Both the Army and the Navy of the United States in time of war would find it necessary to fall back upon these streams, which to-day are insufficient for modern war purposes as well as for purposes of modern commerce. And yet their utility is not to be disputed. During the Civil War a canal which connects Delaware Bay with Chesapeake Bay, bisecting a portion of Delaware and Maryland a distance of 13 miles, saving an outside sailing distance of 325 miles, was used for military purposes. The railroads in that neighborhood were not available and it was necessary to bring troops to Washington through this inside channel. The shallow depth of that channel has not been increased in the course of all the years.

Mr. Chairman, we recently connected up the Atlantic Ocean with the North Carolina sounds by a cut at the Beaufort Inlet, which now admits vessels drawing 10 feet of water. These vessels, coming in from the south out of the Atlantic Ocean inside of the terrors of Hatteras, entering the North Carolina sounds at a depth of 10 feet, can not proceed to the city of Norfolk because of the inadequacy of the inside channels leading to that city. And if they were able to pass the city of Norfolk into Hampton Roads and the great Chesapeake Bay, they would be unable to pass on to the cities of Baltimore or Philadelphia by reason of the lack of depth of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. And if it were sought to have communication between the cities of Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York through an existing inside passageway to-day for a vessel drawing more than 7 feet, it would be impossible. And yet I assume that if the coast was to be attacked by a foreign foe, and the fleet of the United States should be disabled, recourse must be had to some inside waterway for the purpose of obtaining repairs and sending the ships out again to fight. I draw the attention of the House to this matter now, because it will come up from time to time until these waterways along the Atlantic coast are opened for the purposes of commerce as well as for the purposes of war.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance Department: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including their carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and the machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenals, $225,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he can give the committee an approximation as to the amount of this appropriation that will be expended in Government yards for the manufacture of cannon and ammunition?

Mr. MANN. The total expenditures in all the paragraphs under this department are limited to $700,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It says:

For the purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon.

As I understand it, these are all finished in Government arsenals.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is, the manufacturing is done by the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Some portions are purchased.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But most of this, as I understand, will be used in the manufacture of these articles in the Government arsenals.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In the Government arsenals.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I desire to submit a few observations at this point in regard to a very spirited controversy that waged on the floor of the House in the consideration of the naval bill about the relative cost of manufacturing ships, cannon, and powder in Government yards and in private yards.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to say, whatever may be my views about the Navy, that I regard Gen. Crozier, who is in charge of the manufacturing operations at the arsenals, as one of the greatest administrative officers I ever knew.

Mr. COX of Indiana. So do I.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And a great manufacturer, who handles this work with wonderful administrative ability.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman and I quite agree about that, and I do not want to offer any criticism whatever, either upon Gen. Crozier or the committee. But for the last two days a great many things have been said about the expense of manufacturing these things in Government yards and the greater amount of economy that could be effected if the work was let out at private contract. A few days ago I addressed a letter to Gen. Crozier, trying to obtain information along this same line, and I received an answer signed by Col. John L. Thompson, in which he says:

In addition, in all statements of cost and in its price list issued for use of the service by this department, there have been included those administrative expenses, such as interest on the value of plant, depreciation, and pay of officers and enlisted men, which private manufacturers must take into account, and which it has been rather the fashion to assert the Government takes no notice of.

Now, I wish to call attention to a few items that the Colonel submits in his letter. For instance, ball cartridges, caliber .30, model of 1906, per thousand, cost to manufacture by the Government in 1908, $31.96. The same when manufactured by private concerns cost the Government $34.84 a thousand.

Revolver cartridges, per thousand, manufactured at the Frankford Arsenal, $10.78 per thousand. The same cartridge, of the same caliber, manufactured by private concerns, cost the Government $11.38.

Then, in 1909, the same rifle cartridges cost the Government to manufacture at the Government plant $30.18 a thousand, and when bought from private individuals they cost $34.87 a thousand.

Revolver ball cartridges, same size, cost the Government in 1909 $10.78, while the same caliber cartridges bought from private concerns cost the Government $10.95.

Gallery-practice cartridges, caliber .22 (estimated cost of manufacture at the Frankford Arsenal), including administrative expenses, $1.54 per thousand.

Gallery-practice cartridges, caliber .22, purchased, $1.60 per thousand.

As the gentleman in charge of the bill has well said, I believe that Gen. Crozier is an authority on these questions. He has contended for years that the Government can and is actually manufacturing powder a great deal cheaper than any private concern is manufacturing it, including in the cost of manufacture every conceivable item that can possibly enter into the price of manufacture of every kind of powder in Army equipment. For one I would be glad to see the Government itself engage in the manufacture of Army ordnance of any kind, I care not whether it is powder, cartridges, or guns, and that it be developed to the very fullest and completest extent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a letter that I have received and have already referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, February 9, 1911.

Hon. W. E. COX, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: 1. Referring to your letter of the 1st instant, O. O. file 37888/1641, in which you request information as to the name and location of Government manufacturing plants, and a comparison of the cost of manufacture of cannon, etc., in Government and private plants, I have the honor to inform you that the Government plants are located as follows:

Army gun factory for manufacture of guns of all calibers for seacoast and mobile artillery, Watervliet Arsenal, Watervliet, N. Y.

Navy gun factory, Washington, D. C.

Army powder factory, Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N. J.

Navy powder factory, Indianhead, Md.

Army small arms and machine-gun factory, Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass.

Army factory for manufacture of small arms, equipment, gun carriages for mobile artillery and field artillery supplies, Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill.

Army seacoast gun carriage factory, Watertown Arsenal, Watertown, Mass.

Army factory for manufacture of small arms and mobile artillery ammunition, fire-control instruments, etc., Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.

The private manufacturers of small-arms powder and cannon powder for Government use are the Du Pont Co., with plants at Carneys Point, N. J.; Haskell, N. J.; and Santa Cruz, Cal.; and the International Smokeless Powder & Chemical Co., with plant at Parlin, N. J.

2. With reference to the cost of materials manufactured in Government arsenals under control of the Chief of Ordnance, while perhaps not a matter of general information, the Chief of Ordnance some five or six years ago instituted radical changes in the financial methods of this department by which an exceedingly accurate knowledge of the cost of materials purchased and manufactured at its arsenals is obtained, expenditures controlled, and the available funds under its appropriations easily ascertained at any time.

3. The principal feature of the system is the distribution or assignment of funds for specific purposes by allotment. Whenever an order is given an arsenal involving the expenditure of funds an allotment of funds under the proper appropriation is made to that arsenal on the books of the Ordnance Office, based upon the estimate submitted by the arsenal of the amount required. The arsenals are required to report monthly the status of all the allotments made them. In no case is an arsenal permitted to exceed an allotment without previous report. Upon completion of the work report of the cost is made to this office and any unobligated balance revoked from the allotment made. In case additional funds are required to complete an order the arsenal necessarily has to advise this office, giving the reasons for an additional allotment. In this manner a complete check is kept on all allotments made to ordnance establishments. It may be stated, further, that a detailed and comprehensive system of keeping track of the labor cost of all work done and the material used is and has been in practice, and the results are accurate and reliable. (In addition, in all statements of cost and in its price list issued for use of the service by this department there have been included those administrative expenses, such as interest on the value of plant, depreciation, and pay of officers and enlisted men, which private manufacturers must take into account and which it has been rather the fashion to assert the Government takes no notice of.) A description of the cost-keeping system of this department will be found on pages 14 and 15 of the report of the Chief of Ordnance to the Secretary of War for the year 1910, copy herewith.

4. A complete price list of ordnance and ordnance stores is inclosed herewith for your information.

5. A comparison of the cost of the manufacture of guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and ammunition in private factories and at Government arsenals will be found on page 14, report of the Chief of Ordnance for the year 1909, copy of which is inclosed. A comparative statement of the cost of powder manufactured by this department and private concerns will be found in the statements of Gen. Crozier at the hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, of the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1911–12, commencing on page 314.

6. The cost of the manufacture of the United States rifle, caliber .30, model of 1903, including bayonet, appendages, and packing boxes, including administrative cost, which is 8.7 per cent, is as follows:

1906	$17.40
1907	17.25
1908	17.41
1909	17.39
1910	16.85
1911	16.18

The above cost includes all factory costs—material, labor, and general expenses of all kinds.

7. The only comparison with outside manufacturers in the manufacture of arms is a purchase made in 1898 from the Winchester Repeating Arms Co. of 10,000 Winchester repeating rifles, at $18 each. The price of the United States magazine rifle, caliber .30, model 1898 (known as the Krag-Jörgensen rifle), at that time, including administrative and all other charges, was $16.29. The price given in this paragraph does not include bayonet for either rifle.

8. The cost of the manufacture of small-arms ammunition at the Frankford Arsenal, including all administrative expenses, and of that procured from private concerns is as follows:

Years.	Frankford Arsenal (including all administrative charges).		Private concerns.
	Ball cartridges, caliber .30, model of 1906, per 1,000.	Revolver ball cartridges, caliber .38, per 1,000.	Ball cartridges, caliber .30, model of 1906, per 1,000 (average).	Revolver ball cartridges, caliber .38, per 1,000 (average).
1908	$31.96	$10.78
1909	30.18	10.78	$34.84	$11.38
	29.00	9.70
1910	29.11	8.95	34.87	10.95
1911	27.92	8.95	35.50	10.77

Gallery-practice cartridges, caliber .22, estimated cost of manufacture at Frankford Arsenal, including administrative expenses, $1.54 per 1,000.

Gallery-practice cartridges, caliber .22, purchased, $1.60 per 1,000.

Cartridges have been purchased from the following concerns: Winchester Repeating Arms Co., New Haven, Conn.; Peters Cartridge Co., Cincinnati, Ohio; Western Cartridge Co., East Alton, Ill.; Union Metallic Cartridge Co., Bridgeport, Conn.; United States Cartridge Co., Lowell, Mass.; Robin Hood Ammunition Co., Swanton, Vt.

The price at these concerns could be reduced if a quantity as large as that manufactured at the Government arsenal was manufactured thereat.

9. If any further information is desired, it will be furnished upon request.

Respectfully,
JNO. T. THOMPSON,
Lieutenant Colonel, Ordnance Department, U. S. Army,
Acting Chief of Ordnance.

Inclosures: Price list, two reports.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the same connection I ask unanimous consent to insert a statement made by Gen. Crozier before the Committee on Appropriations relative to the expense of Government manufacture. I wish to put it in, so that the House may have the benefit of the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the statement referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter is as follows:

EXPENSE OF GOVERNMENT MANUFACTURE.

Gen. CROZIER. That is the question of the expense of Government manufacture. There are other things that I might bring to your attention, but I will not stop to do so now. There is only one place that I would like to speak of the cost of manufacture, though the manufacturing is not great in this bill, but some members of the committee know something about this place, so I think it would be appropriate, that is the Springfield Armory. I know it is a difficult matter to convince anyone that in stating the cost of Government manufacture the entire cost is included. It is usually suspected that something has been overlooked or that some overhead charge or general charge or charge paid out of another appropriation has been overlooked. At the Springfield Armory, where the great bulk of the manufacturing is a single article—namely, the infantry rifle—I have taken the pains to ascertain the value of everything that has been sent up to Springfield in the way of a resource; that is, funds from the appropriation from which the manufacture is carried on, clothing which is sent up there in kind for the soldiers, rations which are sent up there in kind for the soldiers, commissary property, in the way of scales and vinegar spigots, and things of that sort, sent up there for the use of the soldiers, so as to cover every item of expense that can in any way be charged to the Springfield Armory, whether it is in anyway connected with the manufacture of the rifle or not. Then I have added that all together so as to see what might be called an exaggerated cost of the rifle would be—that is, a superior limit of cost, which it certainly must be below—and to see how much that would differ from my reported cost.

As a result of such an effort, I find that there has been during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, expended at the Springfield Armory for officers' salaries $19,010, and I charged that all into the manufacture, although it is not all properly chargeable to manufacture, for some of the time of these officers is engaged in making issues of stores which have to be issued to other people and which service would have had to be performed if we did not manufacture up there; the pay of the enlisted men, $20,527.40; clothing allowance of enlisted men, $2,732.06; rations of enlisted men, $5,163.88. This is not a very long list. Extra-duty pay, enlisted men, Subsistence Department, $107.10, that is commissary clerks; value of subsistence property received, like these scales and the things I spoke of, $18.78; value of medical stores received, $191.32, that is irrespective of whether used or not, all the stores received during the year; funds and property from the Quartermaster's Department, $4,491.60, those are funds which are utilized particularly in the shop supplies which would have to be expended even if we did not manufacture anything; value of stationery which is sent from the ordnance office here, $400; value of ammunition used in manufacture and tests, $10,000, that is manufactured at Frankford from another appropriation and used in the manufacture of small arms; Ordnance Department funds, that means the funds sent up there for manufacturing purposes and the funds sent up there for keeping the buildings in order, etc., $1,318,515.60; the interest on the value of the manufacturing plant at 2 per cent, this may be a little low and I am going to revise it and make it 3 per cent next year, $36,884.97; depreciation on machinery and buildings, 5 per cent for machinery and 1 per cent for buildings, I suppose those are both a little low and I am going to raise them hereafter, $54,263.68; the insurance cost to cover possible loss by fire, etc., taken at 30 cents per hundred, which is about half the insurance rate of private insurance companies, $5,532.74. That totals $1,477,839.17. I can not find anything else that is properly chargeable, and I think it is all included.

I have a list of all the manufactures at the armory, quite a list, most of them parts of rifles, either complete or parts, and the value of all the material at the price which I say it cost is $1,256,501.57. The difference between these two sets of figures is $221,337.60, which should be charged to receiving, issuing, storing, and accounting for stores, and keeping up the place. I will give you the cost of manufacture based on the idea that it is all charged to manufactures. Having those two figures, the ratio of one to the other would give the percentage by which I must increase all my reported manufacturing costs in order to know what I would call the exaggerated cost, a cost they can not possibly come up to. That would still be a reasonable cost. The total expenditures are thus 17.6 per cent above the value of the manufactured product, and therefore if I add 17.6 per cent to my reported cost of every article manufactured up there I would get this exaggerated cost which it must necessarily be below. Take the most important article, the magazine rifle. My reported cost of that is $15, and if we add 17.6 per cent to that the cost would be $17.64. The cost of that rifle must necessarily be less than that. I do not believe that rifle could be manufactured for the Government by contract under $20, and I think more likely $25. Take another article which is an important one, the bayonet. My reported cost of that is $1.90, and the exaggerated cost would be $2.23.

Mr. GILLETT. Do you know the ordinary price of a Winchester rifle?

Gen. CROZIER. It is more than our rifle, though not as expensive a rifle to make. We make a telescopic-sight bracket for automatic-machine rifles. My reported cost of that is $1.25, and upon this basis that would run up to $1.47. In other words, my reported prices, which are not always accepted because something has been omitted, can not possibly be increased more than 17.6 per cent by any method of charging anything that goes up there.

Mr. SMITH. What is the value of the plant?

Gen. CROZIER. $1,850,000.

Mr. SMITH. As a matter of fact, no private producer could afford to run a plant on less than 6 per cent?

Gen. CROZIER. That is true, because the private producer can not borrow money at less than 6 per cent.

Mr. SMITH. We can not borrow it at 2 per cent.

Gen. CROZIER. We can borrow it at 3 per cent. I said I was going to increase that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have borrowed all we have used up there at 2 per cent.

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In addition to being a manufacturing establishment this is also a storage place?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In stating this so-called exaggerated cost you have charged in all the maintenance and overhead charges that are encountered on account of its being maintained as a storage place as well as a manufacturing establishment?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir; for storing and issuing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can you state what percentage of the cost of manufacture your overhead charges are, using as a basis the two sets of figures—what percentage of the cost of the work done?

Gen. CROZIER. The overhead cost properly chargeable with the percentage of the officers' pay and interest, which is properly chargeable to the manufacturing establishment as separate from the storage feature of the establishment, is 18.7 per cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much is it, including all of the overhead and maintenance charges?

Gen. CROZIER. 17.5 per cent. I added what the factory cost is, 8.7 per cent, to get the cost which I generally report including the proper overhead charges. Now, to that cost which I generally report there should be added 17.5 per cent to get the exaggerated cost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does that make the overhead charge?

Gen. CROZIER. The amount by which the factory cost, without any overhead charges should be increased in order to get the entire exaggerated cost would be 27.8 per cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They say in the Navy Department that the lowest possible cost is 32 per cent?

Gen. CROZIER. In other words, this total exaggerated cost would be 27.8 per cent over the cost which I have to pay for out of the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not see how you get those figures. If your overhead charges are 8.7 per cent and then to include all the other charges you have to add 17.6 per cent, how do you get it up to 27.8 per cent?

Gen. CROZIER. The first factory cost, which is the cost which I have to pay out of the appropriation, includes a certain amount of overhead charges, coal, and the pay of civilian superintendence, but it is the cost which, as I say, I have to pay for out of the appropriations you make for the purpose. Now, I add to that the proper percentage of the pay of officers and enlisted men, the depreciation, the charge for fire loss, etc., to get a proper cost to the Government, and that addition is 8.7 per cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not that exaggerated in that you include the interest on your investment, which has been made not only for manufacturing purposes, but the investment has been made for purposes entirely distinct?

Gen. CROZIER. In getting at the 8.7 per cent I take only the part of the investment which is applied to the manufacturing purposes and take off part of the original cost of the establishment used as a storage place, but so again when I want to get at the exaggerated cost of my manufactures, by charging the issuing and storing to the manufactures, I have added in addition to the 8.7 per cent the total which I gave of 17.6 per cent.

I have some other figures with reference to some other manufactures, but I will let them rest.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that you put in the record a statement such as will throw considerable light on the matter.

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir; I will.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for seacoast cannon, including the necessary experiments in connection therewith, and the machinery necessary for its manufacture at the arsenals, $400,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the Government is now utilizing to the full capacity the yards which it now owns for the manufacture of Army ordnance material?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would not say that they are utilizing it to the full capacity.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why are they not?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think the chief reason is that the appropriations are not large enough.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all material purchased under the provisions of this act shall be of American manufacture, except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point of order against that paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from New York that if he understands this provision I think he will not be opposed to it. It is existing law now. The object of this section is largely to import matters for inspection and experiment. For instance, if the War Department should hear of some new rifle in the world it would import that rifle for inspection and experiment, as a method of keeping itself up with the war departments of the world. It wants from time to time to import samples, if I may so express it, of various devices, and those come in free. I think with that explanation the gentleman will not care to make a point of order. We have heretofore carried the provision. It seems idle when the Government does not want to buy material abroad for national defense, but only wants the information to keep step with the progress of the world in this regard that it should pay itself duties on samples.

Mr. PAYNE. Does this bill provide for the building of fortifications by contract?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean emplacements?

Mr. PAYNE. Any portion of it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There are no new fortifications in the United States contemplated in this bill. The ammunition is made here, and no one would advocate buying ammunition abroad. This is simply a provision by which they may keep informed. If a new process in fire control should be devised somewhere else, and it was desired to compare its operations with our own to see if improvement has been made, they would make a small importation for the purpose of ascertaining that fact.

Mr. PAYNE. It was formerly the policy of the Government to admit everything imported directly by the Government, or imported to be used on contracts for public works by the contractors, free of duty. At the time the McKinley bill was under discussion there was considerable discussion about that free entry. It was claimed, and the committee became satisfied, that some of the importers were bringing in goods under that clause that were in fraud of the revenue.

It was also claimed that advantage was taken by some importers, who are particularly well posted as to the law, in making their bids and getting a little under, realizing they could claim the exemptions from these duties because the material was to be used in contract work, and for that reason in the McKinley bill—I am quite sure it was—we required the Government to pay the duty on everything imported for the Government or for Government work; and I never have heard the propriety of that amendment to the law even questioned in any particular. I should very much dislike to allow anything to be done that weakens that provision, and I think if it is to be abrogated as the policy of the Government it ought to be made a general policy as to all imports for all purposes and not have the duty taken away for a particular purpose. Of course it is just as easy for the Government to pay this duty for the importation of a sample as it is to purchase it without the payment of duty. It amounts to only a small sum of money in either event, and I have no doubt that there is enough appropriation in this bill to carry the payment of that duty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the Government has been importing material under this bill free of duty ever since the McKinley law was enacted. Is it not somewhat late to make that objection on this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I freely confess to the gentleman that I have not read all the appropriation bills that have been passed the last few years, and especially the appropriations for fortifications; my attention has been attracted rather to the work that was being done and the amount of money being appropriated for particular items, and I have not looked the bill through carefully to see whether points of order should be made or not.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will permit me to offer him this suggestion: The appropriations have been proposed upon this theory. I am not prepared to say whether the phraseology is such as to permit the payment of duties on Government purchases. In view of the long time this has existed, I suggest that he let this go this year, and then if he wishes to make the point at another time, to give notice that he will do so another year, and the committee can make up the bill with that suggestion in mind. For the gentleman to demand a change now, when the bill has been prepared on this theory, in accordance with the practice for several years, might very seriously embarrass the department.

Mr. PAYNE. That might all be, and still, if this comes out and the wise gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol get notice of that fact, it will not take them long to solve the whole situation, even if we make a mistake here.

Mr. MANN. Would they have jurisdiction to put in that amendment?

Mr. PAYNE. I never knew an amendment to fail on an appropriation bill over there because of the fact of jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; that would be to insert in an appropriation bill an amendment affecting the raising of revenue—a tariff bill—which is clearly without their power.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Could they not hang a whole tariff bill upon that clause?

Mr. PAYNE. If it went out on a point of order, they would have the right to appropriate whatever was necessary.

Mr. MANN. To appropriate; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Let me suggest to the gentleman from New York that I do not want to make it necessary for, much less encourage, the Senate to amend this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. How long has the gentleman been a member of this subcommittee?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Some eight years.

Mr. PAYNE. During all that time has this clause been there?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will not say, because I am not positive it has been there all of the time; but I will say that I know it is old law.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that this clause has not only been there ever since I have been on the committee, but has been the occasion twice of a fight on the floor of the House. I thought everybody in the House was perfectly familiar with it. It certainly has been fought up and down enough to be known to everybody.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, the gentleman has found one conspicuous instance of ignorance on this subject. Mr. Chairman, in view of what my friend has suggested and in view of the fact that he is retiring to a position either higher or lower than that of a Member of Congress—and I am not exactly able to say which—and notwithstanding the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky, I am inclined to withdraw the point of order at this time, but to give notice I will renew it next year.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "duty," in line 13, the following:
"Likewise all supplies sent by the Government of the United States for the use and supply of the Army and Navy in the Philippine Islands shall be admitted free of duties by the Philippine Government."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment on the ground that it is not germane, it is legislative in character and changes existing law.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, if the other amendment is in order, this one is in order. It is practically the same thing. It is utterly absurd to think this Government will continue to pay $200,000 a year to the Philippine Government for supplies of the Army and Navy sent over there. If you can exempt in this fortification bill the payment of duties by the Government here, we can certainly exempt the payment of duties by the Government in the Philippine Islands on its supplies sent by this Government over there. It simply means about $200,000 more charged up to the support of the Army and Navy than should be, and we ought not to hang that burden on the Army and Navy.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is utterly improper, in my judgment, to make a radical change like this on the fortifications bill, which has nothing to do with this subject.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is on the same principle in this bill in which we exempt the Government from paying duties.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman is in error. One is simply for some trifling experimental materials——

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the same principle.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman now proposes we should take it away from the Philippine revenue when we do not know whether the Philippine Government can stand this loss of revenue or not.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Philippine Government can not stand it, why not put in a place where the people would know what they are doing.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Under the existing law we pay these items out of the Federal Treasury and they go into the Philippine treasury. Now, he proposes to make a radical change and save the $200,000, as the gentleman asserts, and take it out of the Philippine revenues, and it is certainly not an amendment that should be on the fortifications bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. The reason I offered the amendment was because one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee objected to an amendment on the Army bill a few weeks ago, and I do not see why the same language should not go in the fortifications bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman that was the first offense in reference to that, but, Mr. Chairman, there are one or two distinctions here between this amendment to the text of the bill and the text of the bill itself. In the bill the clause simply exempts the articles purchased appropriated for in this bill. Now, it is certainly not germane to the text of the bill to introduce here an amendment which exempts articles purchased by the Government for another purpose. Aside from that, the Philippine tariff provides that all of the revenue shall go to the support of the Philippine Government and not into the Treasury of the United States, and it is not germane to amend a law with reference to the revenues of the Treasury of the United States by an amendment with reference to the revenues of the Philippine Islands. The cases are entirely dissimilar.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman promise to bring in a measure and take this Government out of the ridiculous position of paying duties to itself in the Philippine Islands. I think the gentleman owes it to us.

Mr. PAYNE. I will discuss at any time with the gentleman the question of whether the thing is ridiculous or not, but I will not promise to bring in any revenue bill between this and the 4th day of March from the Committee on Ways and Means and I will not promise that after that, Mr. Chairman, because I think that—well, I will not say what I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "in limited quantities."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I quite understand the policy the gentleman referred to just now of buying articles of this kind in America. I agree that it is quite well under ordinary circumstances and under usual conditions to do so. But the exception he makes in the bill that he reports is, namely—

Except in cases when, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases in limited quantities abroad, which material shall be admitted free of duty.

Now, if not only in limited quantities, but in large quantities, it seems the manufacturers, either by a combination among themselves, agreement with each other, or in any other way, are charging such extortionate prices or furnishing such inferior goods that it is to the manifest interest of the United States to make purchases abroad, then the Secretary of War ought to do it, and he ought not to be required to do it in "limited quantities" only, to use the language of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. How do the words "in limited quantities" affect it in any way?

Mr. HARDWICK. It narrows the discretion of the Secretary of War, and it increases the advantage of the domestic producer and manufacturer and contractor with the Government. It increases his opportunity to charge a larger price and to furnish an inferior article, because he has no practical competition with the balance of the world.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Do the words "in limited quantities," as the gentleman understands them, apply to the amount produced by the manufacturers, or the amount produced by the Government?

Mr. HARDWICK. It applies to the amount of purchases that the Secretary of War may make abroad, even when he believes it is to the manifest interest of the United States Government, possibly, to make more.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I think if the Secretary of War wanted to buy all he could use, he could do it under that section.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then this amendment could do no harm, for the reason that the Secretary of War is informed by this bill, what we all agree to without party division, that it is the correct American policy to buy all things under ordinary circumstances and under usual conditions in America, and encourage our citizens and our own enterprises engaged in business of this kind to produce these things, so that the country will be self-sustaining in time of war. But at the same time, Mr. Chairman, it is wrong for these men to take advantage of the United States, and wherever it is for the manifest interest of the United States to make these contracts abroad, then the Government ought to be permitted to do it, even in unlimited quantities.

Now, for instance, in the hearings on this bill you will find on page 16 that Col. Burr said that the searchlights purchased here were formerly inferior and probably a larger price charged for them than should have been charged. He got authority to purchase some of them abroad, and immediately the American manufacturers improved the quality of the article that was furnished, and the best results were obtained from this provision that allowed him to purchase these searchlights abroad. Now, if it is true in one instance, it may be true and it ought to be true in a great many more instances, and all I am asking by this amendment is to strike out the words "in limited quantities," so as to broaden the discretion given to the Secretary of War and to enable him to protect the Government and to get a better article at a lower price.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does not the amount appropriated compel the Secretary of War to buy all of these articles in limited quantities?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know about that. There are about $5,000,000 carried in this bill. It depends on what you mean by a limited quantity.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] must remember that the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes from Pittsburg. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDWICK. And $5,000,000 looks small to him, but large to a man that comes from Georgia.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Georgia does not look large to me.

Mr. HARDWICK. There ought not to be a dispute between us on a question of that kind.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It seems to me the appropriation itself does limit the amount of these articles which the Secretary of War is able to buy, and therefore the words "in limited quantities" in the last paragraph do not mean anything.

Mr. SHERLEY. May I suggest this: That whatever may be our theoretical construction, the department has always considered it is a prohibition upon any purchases save in limited quantities.

Mr. HARDWICK. As the gentleman said just now, it meant they could only buy a small quantity, and to strike out these words will give the Secretary a broader power, which he will not use unless the Government is being cheated or overcharged or inefficiently served.

Mr. BUTLER rose.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. I understand if these words are stricken from this paragraph the Secretary of War may, if he sees fit, buy everything abroad that is provided in this bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not that smack a little of free trade?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know what the gentleman thinks about that; but, so far as that is concerned, I think the Government of the United States ought to buy all of its material wherever it can buy it the cheapest, especially if the difference in cost is considerable.

Mr. BUTLER. Without any duty of any kind?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; without any duty of any kind.

Mr. ROBERTS. Does not that apply to the individual also, from the gentleman's standpoint?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated that he believed in the policy of having the Government manufacture, or in having manufactured within our own confines, all the munitions of war we require?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But under the amendment would not the Secretary of War be obliged to purchase all articles abroad that he could purchase there more cheaply than at home, because would it not be to the manifest benefit of the United States to purchase them abroad if he could purchase them more cheaply abroad, rather than at home, where they would cost a little more?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not necessarily in all cases; if the difference were small, it might not be so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, the time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] will be extended five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Then, would the Secretary of War take into consideration, in determining whether it was to the manifest interest of the United States, the desirability of manufacturing in the United States rather than abroad?

Mr. HARDWICK. I think the Secretary should take that question into consideration to some extent.

Mr. MANN. Then it does not amount to anything, does it?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; it does; because while we all agree that it is correct policy to buy our munitions of war at home, other things being any way near equal, yet where an excessive price is sought to be charged by our home people, or an inferior article furnished, then we ought to buy abroad.

Mr. MANN. If I were Secretary of War and that provision was put in as the gentleman has it, I should buy the article abroad if it could be brought abroad more cheaply than at home, because Congress had directed me to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman not believe that the Secretary would be obliged to purchase the articles in this country—unless the Secretary believed that whoever was furnishing the articles was trying to take advantage of the Government—because of the manifest advantage it would be to the Government to have the facilities for manufacture developed and retained in this country?

Mr. MANN. Yes. But that is something that can not be measured, and the executive officer who attempts to measure that lays himself open to the strongest kind of criticism.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yet if the gentleman will recall it, the provision that Congress puts into this bill vests that discretion in the Secretary.

Mr. MANN. You mean the provision as to limited quantities?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. The discretion would still be lodged in the Secretary.

Mr. MANN. The executive officer would have no discretion, because it is to the manifest interest of the Government to buy in the cheapest market it can buy in, so far as that side of it is concerned.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is but one consideration only.

Mr. MANN. That is the only consideration that the Government officer ought to take into consideration, and if he takes into consideration any other matter it amounts to nothing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to me for another question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Ordnance Bureau obtains large appropriations under the Army appropriation act for the purchase of similar Army materials, and there is no such limitation in that bill as there is in this one, and still the department continues to spend the money in this country.

Mr. MANN. But in that case there is no such direction coupled with that discretion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Without any direction, is it not the duty of executive officers to expend the money appropriated for the bureaus in that manner which will be manifestly for the best interests of the Government?

Mr. HARDWICK. And supplementing the question, what law is there that requires the Secretary to buy in this country only?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The tariff itself is a restraint upon buying abroad.

Mr. MANN. You propose to put a provision in here practically directing him to buy abroad if he can buy cheaper, without any tariff on the articles purchased.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. That is what it says. The gentleman may construe it to mean something else.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not quite fully informed on the subject.

Mr. MANN. I do not profess to have the knowledge on the subject that the committee has, but the gentleman will find that there has been nothing in the hearings on the subject of the amendment offered by the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been discussed here in other years, time after time.

Mr. MANN. That is like the statement that this importation business had been discussed on the floor. I am satisfied it never has been.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement was made that the paragraph has not been discussed.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the paragraph has been discussed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is assumed that at least the leading men on that side of the House are familiar with the provisions of paragraphs that have been discussed.

Mr. MANN. I think the recollection of the gentleman who made the statement is far better than the recollection of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. SHERLEY. On two occasions I made the exact motion now made by the gentleman from Georgia on this floor and discussed this matter, and the gentleman from Iowa will bear me out in that, and he will bear me out in the further statement that the hearings on several occasions—at least two occasions—have contained several pages of discussions as to the value, from the standpoint of the Army officer, of the Government being able to buy abroad.

Mr. MANN. I do not controvert that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just two years ago Gen. Crozier was testifying before the Committee on Fortifications, and this transpired:

Mr. SHERLEY. With regard to other purchases than powder abroad, do you make any of those at all except for the purpose of getting some special kind or piece of armament that is not manufactured in this country?

Gen. CROZIER. We generally do not make them at all. An instance in which we made the largest purchase abroad occurred about four years ago, when we bought some $500,000 worth of field guns. It is not quite accurate to say that we bought them abroad, because they were made abroad according to our drawings and specifications, just as they would be made at home. The principal reason we did that was because at that time things were booming in this country and our people were loaded up, and we could not get any more from our people until after a long time; the delays in delivery were very great, and as the guns were new and we wanted to get some at once we placed this order abroad—in Germany—for 50 guns.

In my opinion the United States should have facilities within this country to furnish all of the munitions of war necessary for the proper defense of the country; and still there may be times, either because of combinations which may attempt to impose unreasonable charges upon the Government for materials, or because of the situation described by Gen. Crozier, when the business conditions will be such that manufacturing establishments will be so occupied with other work that materials that are imperatively needed can not be obtained.

Mr. HARDWICK. And that of itself would very much increase the price, would it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Undoubtedly. Under such conditions it might be advisable to purchase not only in limited, but in large quantities abroad. I am in perfect accord with the gentleman from Iowa as to the desirability of having in this country the necessary facilities, and I am quite sure that there is not much excuse for putting the prohibition upon the department against purchasing abroad in large quantities when it is desirable.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] states, however, that the appropriations carried in another bill, to be expended for similar purposes, are in a different category, in that there is a restriction upon the power of the Government to make such purchases abroad, because the duty must be paid upon such articles.

I am not so sure that even a good protectionist would find it easy to defend the policy which will permit the use of the tariff for the purpose of keeping up prices to the Government itself. It is justified in so far as the people of the country are concerned, but in matters which are imperative for the defense of the country the department should be fairly free to obtain whatever munitions of war are required wherever they can be had best and the most quickly. I doubt very much the wisdom of retaining in this bill the words which the gentleman from Georgia suggests should be stricken out. I say that with some hesitation, because I have given considerable attention to the subject, and there are unquestionably two sides to it. It seems to me, however, in view of the statement made by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance favoring this policy, pointing out at times the necessity for the authorization to be given here, that we should not hesitate to make the change.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been repeatedly discussed in this Congress, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARDWICK) there were 15 ayes and 41 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I see the bill, on page 9, provides for a per diem of $2.50 a day for officers when away from their place of business. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not there has ever been any complaint before his committee that the $2.50 a day was not sufficient?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is the Sandy Hook provision the gentleman is speaking about?

Mr. COX of Indiana. It is on page 9, beginning line 12:

For the payment of the necessary expenses of the board, including a per diem allowance to each officer detailed to serve thereon, when employed on duty away from his permanent station, of $2.50 a day.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There has been no complaint.

Mr. COX of Indiana. They seem to be perfectly satisfied?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They seem to be perfectly satisfied, and we are not stirring up anything where they are satisfied.

Mr. COX of Indiana. My purpose in making the inquiry is that the post-office bill ever since I have been here has carried $4 a day for the per diem of inspectors when absent from their place of business. I thought for a long time it was too much, and I have arrived at the conclusion that if the Army officers are satisfied with $2.50 a day these other people ought to be satisfied with that amount.

Mr. HAY. The Army officer gets a mileage.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STERLING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 32865, the fortification bill, and had instructed him to report it to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 32866) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate in the committee be limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. MANN. Do we need two hours' general debate?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I could cut my side down to half an hour.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have promised one hour on this side, and I hope we can agree on that time.

Mr. MANN. Is it understood that we run through this bill to-night?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. To-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Virginia. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the committee resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania in the chair.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be omitted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives has little to do with negotiating treaties, but has an equal part with the other branch of Congress in terminating treaties. I desire to say something in behalf of the resolution that I have introduced, House joint resolution 284, which calls for the terminating of the treaty between this country and Russia, made in 1832, and which reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That it is, and always has been, a fundamental principle of this Government that the rights of its citizens shall not be impaired at home or abroad because of religious belief; that this Government concludes its treaties for the equal protection of all classes of its citizens, without regard to religious belief; that this Government will not negotiate nor be a party to any treaty which discriminates, or which by one of the parties thereto is construed to discriminate, between American citizens on the ground of religious belief; that the Government of Russia has violated the treaty between the United States of America and Russia concluded at St. Petersburg December 18, 1832, by construing that part of article 1 thereof which says that the inhabitants of the respective States "shall be at liberty to sojourn and reside in all parts whatsoever of said territories in order to attend to their affairs, and they shall enjoy to that effect the same security and protection as natives of the country wherein they reside, on condition of their submitting to the laws and ordinances there prevailing, and particularly to the regulations in force concerning commerce," to mean that American citizens of Jewish faith are subject in Russia to the same class restrictions that Russia imposes upon Russian inhabitants of Jewish faith, by declining to permit American citizens of Jewish faith to sojourn and reside in Russia in order to attend to their affairs and to enjoy to that effect the same security and protection as non-Jewish native Russians, and by refusing to honor American passports issued to American citizens of Jewish faith; that in the judgment of the Congress the said treaty, for the reasons aforesaid, ought to be terminated at the earliest possible time and be no longer in force; and that to this end the President be, and he hereby is, directed to give notice to the Government of Russia that the treaty aforesaid will terminate and be of no force and effect upon the expiration of the year which shall commence after the date of such notification.

The reason why that treaty should be terminated in my opinion is stated in the resolution, and is because Russia has not fulfilled her part of the treaty. This is our principal treaty with Russia and it was made in 1832. Article I of that treaty provides that:

There shall be between the territories of the high contracting parties a reciprocal liberty of commerce and navigation, the inhabitants of their respective States shall mutually have liberty to enter the ports, places, and rivers of the territories of each party, wherever foreign commerce is permitted. They shall be at liberty to sojourn and reside in all parts whatsoever of said territories, in order to attend to their affairs, and they shall enjoy, to that effect, the same security and protection as natives of the country wherein they reside, on condition of their submitting to the laws and ordinances there prevailing, and particularly to the regulations in force concerning commerce.

The general rules of interpretation with regard to treaties are well known and well settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Justice Field in Geofroy against Riggs (133 U. S., p. 271) says:

It is a general principle of construction with respect to treaties that they shall be liberally construed, so as to carry out the apparent intention of the parties to secure equality and reciprocity between them. As they are contracts between independent nations, in their construction, words are to be taken in their ordinary meaning, as understood in the public law of nations, and not in any artificial or special sense impressed upon them by local law, unless such restricted sense is clearly intended. And it has been held by this court that where a treaty admits of two constructions, one restrictive of rights that may be claimed under it and the other favorable to them, the latter is to be preferred.

But despite this article, which provides for reciprocal liberty of commerce, Russia declines to admit within her borders a large portion of American citizens. She construes that article to entitle her to exclude from Russia members of the Jewish faith, even though they are American citizens, and even though they have American passports. Her construction and her practice are in plain violation of the treaty, and place us in a position where, instead of a treaty which we thought would safeguard the fundamental rights of American citizens, we have a treaty that is so construed by Russia that it violates one of the most precious of the fundamental principles of our country, namely, the principle that the rights of American citizens shall not be impaired at home or abroad because of religious belief.

We have repeatedly complained against the construction that Russia has put upon this treaty. We commenced to complain the very first time Russia interpreted it in her own way. Away back in 1867 the State Department remonstrated. At that time Mr. Cassius M. Clay, our minister to Russia, wrote to Mr. Westmann, representing Russia, a letter in regard to Mr. Rosenstraus, in which, among other things, he said that he admitted——

Mr. Rosenstraus was a Jew, but as all religions alike are tolerated in the United States, the United States claims equal protection for all her citizens, without regard to religious principles.

Secretary of State Evarts, in 1880, wrote to our minister to Russia, Mr. Foster:

You are sufficiently well informed of the liberal sentiments of this country to perceive that whenever any pertinent occasion may arise its attitude must always be in complete harmony with the principle of extending all rights and privileges to American citizens without distinction on account of creed.

Mr. Foster, our minister, conveyed that information to the representative of Russia, saying:

From the foundation of the United States as a nation the Jews have been entitled to the full and unrestricted privileges of citizens, and have shown themselves to be peaceable and law-observing in their conduct, industrious in their habits, and are esteemed a valuable portion of the community, so that in so far as the regulations for the expulsion of foreign Jews from Russia affect American citizens, whatever may be the conduct of their coreligionists of this or other countries, it is an unjust reflection upon American Jews as a class and a discrimination which can not be acquiesced in by my Government.

Secretary Evarts again stated our position in a letter to Mr. Foster in 1881:

In your presentation of the facts you should be careful to impress that we ask treaty treatment for our aggrieved citizens, not because they are Jews, but because they are Americans.

* * * * * * *

This Government does not know, or inquire, the religion of the American citizens it protects.

Mr. Blaine, as Secretary of State, wrote to our minister:

I need hardly enlarge on the point that the Government of the United States concludes its treaties with foreign States for the equal protection of all classes of American citizens. It can make absolutely no discrimination between them, whatever be their origin or creed.

And his words were conveyed to the Russian Government. In one of his letters Secretary Blaine said, in reply to a communication from our minister:

This note requests that Mr. Kutner shall answer certain interrogatories concerning his life and past history, among them one as to the religion professed by him. In conveying the inquiry of the Imperial foreign office to Mr. Kutner this department found itself unable to interrogate him as to the religion professed by him inasmuch as the Constitution of the United States prohibits the application of any religious test whatever in reference to citizens of the United States.

Similar statements were made by Secretary of State Olney and by Secretary of State Hay. We have had negotiations with Russia for years endeavoring to secure a modification of the treaty so that Russia could under no pretense construe it otherwise than that all American citizens should be treated alike.

Numerous resolutions have passed the House of Representatives on this subject. The first was passed as long ago as 1879, and in it the House said that—

The rights of the citizens of the United States should not be impaired at home or abroad because of religious belief, and that if existing treaties between the United States and Russia be found, as alleged, to discriminate in this or any other particular as to any other class of our citizens the President is requested to take immediate action to have the treaty so amended as to remedy this grievance.

We passed a resolution on this subject again in 1882, again in 1883, in 1884, in 1890, and in 1902, and the Senate in 1902 passed a resolution calling, as those others did, for information as to discriminations practiced by Russia against American Jews. In 1904 we went further in the resolution passed by this House, the original of which had been introduced by my colleague from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE]. We requested the President to renew negotiations so that we could have a treaty which would eliminate all chance of any such discrimination as that which Russia has practiced.

In 1909 the Congress passed a joint resolution directing the President to renew negotiations so as to have the discriminations eliminated and abolished, and yet nothing has been accomplished.

Mr. HARRISON. Will my colleague permit?

Mr. PARSONS. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Is my colleague aware of the fact that the resolution of 1909, when it was first introduced by Mr. GOLDFOGLE, contained, in section 2, substantially the same provisions as those contained in the resolution of the gentleman himself now pending and of which I am very much in favor, and that that section was stricken out by the Committee on Foreign Affairs? And I have no doubt the gentleman joins me in the hope that his resolution will now be adopted and place the matter where it should have been two years ago.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the suggestion offered by my colleague, but, as I recall the resolution of my colleague [Mr. GOLDFOGLE], it stated that if certain things should not happen, then he wished the treaty terminated. Now, my resolution does not contain any "if," but says the treaty should be terminated now.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman is correct, and I agree with him.

Mr. PARSONS. I am very glad to hear my colleague does, as I knew he would. We have talked, we have passed resolutions, we have had diplomatic correspondence, and nothing has been accomplished, so that if we mean what we have said——

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Does the gentleman think that the President and the State Department are not carrying out the instructions of the resolution of 1909?

Mr. PARSONS. I think they have endeavored to do so, yes; I know they have, but they have been unsuccessful, and I very much fear they will not be successful.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would like to know where the gentleman gets the information that the department has been unsuccessful in the negotiations?

Mr. PARSONS. Where I get the information? I have read the correspondence in the State Department; that is where I get it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will my colleague permit an additional suggestion? To-day native-born American Jewish gentlemen are all denied the Russian visé on an American passport, and if the State Department had been successful that would not be the situation.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman says he gets the information from the State Department that it has been unsuccessful—from the correspondence of the State Department.

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Is that correct?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Does that correspondence show that fact?

Mr. PARSONS. It shows that nothing has been accomplished, and it does not indicate that there is likely to be anything accomplished.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York——

Mr. PARSONS. That is my view of the correspondence that I have read with some care.

Mr. AUSTIN. What explanation or excuse does the Russian Government give for this treatment of American citizens?

Mr. PARSONS. It claims that this last clause of Article I:

> That citizens of the other party shall have the right to travel and sojourn on condition of their submitting to the laws and ordinances there prevailing—subjects the American Jews to the restrictions imposed by Russia upon Russian Jews. I think Russia has gone so far that she takes the position that she can pass any internal law she wishes, excluding anybody.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is it not a fact that when applying for a passport the State Department rather advises the American Jew who applies for a passport not to go to Russia?

Mr. PARSONS. It gives him a passport, but it tells him he will get no benefit from it. If he goes to the border of Russia he is turned back.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Do you think that is carrying out the act of 1909 for the department, instead of carrying out the act, to try to evade it?

Mr. PARSONS. I think the department in that case acts with every consideration to the American Jew trying to go to Russia. He can not go to Russia unless his passport is properly visèed. Unless he can get his passport visèed by the Russian consul, or some representative of Russia having authority in the matter, he can not enter Russia. And one of the questions asked him when he goes to get his passport is, "What is your religion?" And if he says it is that of a Jew, then for one reason or another, which may be given, he does not get his passport visèed.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Nor gets the protection he is entitled to as an American citizen traveling abroad?

Mr. PARSONS. That is correct. But the State Department has helped him as much as Russia will permit it to.

Mr. HAMMOND. I wish to understand this. Do I understand that the Russian Government refuses to visé a passport carried by any Jewish citizen of the United States?

Mr. PARSONS. It does. The question of expatriation is not involved. It does not depend on whether the Jew was originally a native of Russia who has been naturalized here. One of the very first cases that arose was that of a native of Wurttemberg, who had become a naturalized American citizen and then had gone to Russia. It applies to all native-born Jews.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is there any case in which a native American has been refused admission to Russia?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes; if he is a Jew. It applies to all alike.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If my colleague will permit me, I have gone myself to the Russian Embassy in Washington in behalf of a native-born American of the Jewish faith and asked to have the passport visèed, and it was refused because the Russian law prevents the entrance into Russia of persons of the Jewish faith. It is not a question of religion entirely——

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the basis of that exclusion?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is based on religion.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND] that there have been cases coming under my observation where they have advised Jews who are native Jews not to go to Russia, although they were furnished with a passport.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, when the Federal Constitution was adopted we placed in it as a part of paragraph 3 of Article VI a provision that—

> No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

That was a broad statement of our principle of freedom of religious belief and our principle of toleration. But even that was not sufficient, and when the Constitution was submitted to the several States a number of them asked that there be incorporated in it further provisions in regard to religious freedom, and the result was the adoption of the first amendment to the Constitution, which provides that—

> Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or permitting the free exercise thereof.

George Washington, the anniversary of whose birth we celebrate to-day, said:

> The liberty enjoyed by the people of these States of worshiping Almighty God agreeably to their consciences is not only amongst the choicest of their blessings, but also of their rights.

Liberty of religious belief is a well-established, fundamental, and precious right of the American citizen as an American citizen.

Whether by terminating this treaty we will soon secure a new treaty which will in terms prevent Russia from so discriminating I know not, but I believe that we owe it to this fundamental principle of religious toleration, of the equality of all American citizens before the law, without regard to their religious beliefs, to terminate a treaty an article of which is used as authority for discriminating against some Americans on the ground of their religious belief.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] if the Russian Government excludes any other race of people?

Mr. PARSONS. About that I do not know; but it also excludes missionaries, both Protestant and Catholic. I have here a letter signed by the secretary to the Roman Catholic bishop of Scranton, Pa., acknowledging the receipt of an address delivered upon this subject by Mr. Louis Marshall, of New York, and in this letter the bishop's secretary writes:

> The right reverend bishop wishes me to say that he is in hearty accord with the movement started by your committee. It was only a year and a half ago that he himself was prohibited from entering Russia for only a two days' visit. As you no doubt know, Catholic priests in general are prohibited from entering Russia. He wishes your movement every success.

This, therefore, is not simply a Jewish question. The Jews are not the only people who are discriminated against. The clergy of all denominations are discriminated against, and that has not been a recent matter. The first case of discrimination against an American clergyman occurred some 27 years ago.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish the committee to understand that I appeal for the termination of the treaty on the ground that Russia discriminates against the Jews, or Catholic or Protestant clergy. I make the appeal on the grounds that Russia, in violation of and by misconstruction of the treaty, discriminates against some American citizens, and that each American citizen, no matter what his religion, has as much right to the protection of our laws here and as much right to protection under our treaties abroad as any other American citizen, and that we should not enter into or any longer retain a treaty that does not secure to all American citizens equal treatment, without regard to their religious beliefs.

We have rid ourselves of many forms of persecution. We no longer burn witches. We no longer have slavery. But we do have, as one of the foulest blots upon our civilization, a prejudice against the Jews—virulent in some European countries more or less at all times, and particularly so at some times. Fortunately it has never expressed itself here in the form of persecution.

On the contrary, whenever such persecution has occurred in foreign countries we have protested and extended our sympathy to the unfortunate victims. We view this anti-Semitic prejudice from several vantage points. This anti-Semitic feeling is sometimes claimed to be based upon religion, but here all religions are free. Sometimes it is claimed to be based upon race, but here we have people of many races. Sometimes it is claimed that it is justified for economic reasons, but here we have a country of great possibilities. Sometimes in European countries it is based upon the principle of nationalism, on the claim that the Jews do not assimilate with the other people of the country. But here we have had the Jews since 1655, when their first colony settled in the city of New York, and no people have more right to feel themselves Americans, to feel what it means to live in a land of liberty, than have the descendants of those Portuguese Jews who, exiled from Europe and South America even, landed in New York some 250 years ago. To no people more than to them is this the "sweet land of liberty," "land of" their "pilgrims' pride," "land where their fathers died." And it is a well-known fact that Jews on coming to America invariably become patriotic citizens. Statistics show that in every war that we have had the Jews have done more than their share in support of the war. In every fight for good citizenship they have done their share. In the way of philanthropy they have done their full share. In the city of New York they have been true to the obligation placed upon them by the Dutch West India Co. when, in spite of the opposition of Gov. Stuyvesant, it decided "upon a certain petition made by said Portuguese Jews, that they should have permission to sail to and trade in New Netherlands and to live and remain there, provided the poor among them shall not become a burden to the company or the community, but be supported by their own nation."

Grover Cleveland said at the celebration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in the United States:

I know that human prejudice, especially that growing out of race or religion, is cruelly inveterate and lasting. But wherever in the world prejudice against the Jews still exists, there can be no place for it among the people of the United States, unless they are heedless of good faith, recreant to the underlying principles of their free government, and insensible to every pledge involved in our boasted equality of citizenship.

On our great Republic, therefore, is placed the responsibility of leading the world in proclaiming and guaranteeing the rights of man. If not here, where else is the world to learn that all men should be equal before the law? Not in the older countries, not in monarchies where privilege and caste and prejudice have existed for years and years, but in this New World, where politically all men are equal and which is still the land of golden opportunity.

In abrogating this treaty, in insisting that all American citizens are equal before the law, we will also have the privilege of placing our stamp of disapproval upon the anti-Semitic prejudice that exists in other countries and of again proving that this, the great Republic, is still ready to lead in the fight for the rights of man.

What are the objections urged against the termination of the treaty? Some ask what will happen to the rights of other citizens. They will be unaffected. They will be admitted if Russia's internal laws allow it; and, under the construction Russia has placed upon the treaty, that is the only ground on which they are now admitted. Commercially how will it affect us? Little security can there be in a treaty that Russia has misconstrued and misused as she has this. The maximum clause of the Payne tariff law, which will compel Russia's $10,000,000 of imports into this country to pay an extra 25 per cent ad valorem duty, is a far stronger weapon than the semblance of obligation that Russia might recognize under this treaty. But neither the rights of other American citizens nor of commerce can equal or overcome the duty that we owe to ourselves to be true to our fundamental principle of religious liberty.

Every consideration that should appeal to an American demands the termination of this treaty. Russia has not performed her treaty obligations, and therefore, in self-respect, we should terminate the treaty. Russia has discriminated against some American citizens, misusing the treaty as a justification, and therefore we should terminate it. As misused by Russia, the treaty violates the fundamental American principle that the rights of all American citizens under the law are the same, whatever their religious beliefs, and therefore we should terminate it. And we owe it to our traditions as the great Republic that has ever upheld the rights of man to terminate a treaty which is misused to deny those rights to some men, and the American citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, while other Members have been discussing the bill that is now before the committee, I desire to submit a few observations on a subject that is nearer to us than the subject of our foreign relations or matters relating to them.

I am a member of the Committee on Accounts, which has primarily the charge of the disbursements from the contingent fund of this House. For 16 years I have been a member of the minority of that committee, and have endeavored to discharge my duty as a member of that committee faithfully.

The appropriation made for 1910 and 1911 for the miscellaneous items of expense for the House of Representatives was $75,000 for each fiscal year. I want to call the attention of the House to certain facts with reference to that fund, so that when it becomes exhausted, as it has been and will continue to be, Members both of the majority and the minority will understand why it has thus become exhausted, and why it becomes necessary to ask for an additional appropriation for the contingent fund of the House, in order that this House of Representatives may not be charged with extravagance in the use of that fund; a fund intended primarily, and should be so preserved, solely for the expenditure of money for carrying on the business of the House, and not, as it has been expended, for purposes for which, in my judgment, it ought not to be. We have a statute upon this subject, to which I will call attention, passed in 1892, which provides that appropriations made for the contingent expenses of the House shall not be used for certain purposes.

That act provides:

That hereafter appropriations made for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives or the Senate shall not be used for the payment of personal services, except upon the express and specific authorization of the House or Senate in whose behalf such services are rendered. Nor shall such appropriations be used for any expenses not intimately and directly connected with the routine legislative business of either House of Congress, and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall apply the provisions of this paragraph in the settlement of the accounts of expenditures from said appropriations incurred for services or materials subsequent to the approval of this act.

There is another paragraph relating to the expenditure of this fund, which is as follows:

No person shall be appointed or employed as a page in the service of the House of Representatives who is under 12 years or more than 18 years of age; but this provision shall not apply to chief pages, riding pages, and telephone pages.

The Clerk, Sergeant at Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster shall make certificate each month to their respective pay rolls, stating whether the persons named in such pay rolls and employed in their respective departments have been actually present at their respective places of duty and have actually performed the services for which compensation is provided in said pay rolls, and in each case where a person carried on such pay roll has been absent and has not performed the services in whole or in part for which payment is proposed, the reason for such absence and for such nonperformance of services shall be stated.

The violation of any of the foregoing provisions of law shall, upon ascertainment thereof, be deemed to be cause for removal from office.

It shall be the duty of the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives from time to time to inquire into the enforcement or violation of any of the foregoing provisions of law; and for this purpose they are hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and they shall report to the House at least once every session their compliance with the duty herein imposed.

Yet this House has proceeded to pass resolution after resolution—the House, and not on any recommendation from the Committee on Accounts—authorizing the expenditure of this fund for various purposes, until to-day we find that there has been expended out of it $65,378.49 for items of expense which ought not to be chargeable to that fund. I hold in my hand here a statement of the expenditures out of that fund for purposes for which it ought not to be expended, all done under authorization of resolutions passed by the House. The committee finds itself absolutely helpless to resist the payment of these sums, because the resolutions of the House provide that these expenditures shall be paid out of the contingent fund, and the law requires the disbursing officer of this House to pay these items on approval of the chairman of the committee conducting the investigation. At the suggestion of some members of the Committee on Accounts we have refused to pay some of these items, and I suppose we will continue to refuse, and resort will be made to the House in order to have them paid.

I call attention to this statement, which is authentic:

Statement showing expenditures from the contingent fund of the House for expenses of special and select committees of the House during the Sixty-first Congress; also for expenses of the Joint Commission on the Revision of the Laws.

SHIP-SUBSIDY INVESTIGATION.

The Select Committee to Investigate Certain Charges under House Resolution No. 543, known as the ship-subsidy investigation, was created by resolution adopted by the House March 29, 1910, and on April 1, 1910, the House adopted the following resolution, viz:

"Resolved, That the select committee appointed by the Speaker on March 29, 1910, under House resolution 543, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it hereby is, authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary in the transaction of its business, to administer oaths, and to employ such clerical, messenger, and stenographic assistance as it shall deem necessary. All expenses hereunder shall be paid on the certificate of the chairman of the committee out of the contingent fund of the House."

Expenditures on account of clerical, stenographic, and messenger service, fees and mileage of witnesses, serving subpœnas, and incidentals to Feb. 1, 1911	$11,500.88
Estimated expenditures to end of session	3,475.00
Total	14,975.88

INDIAN CONTRACTS INVESTIGATION.

The House adopted the following resolution June 25, 1910:

"Resolved, That a committee consisting of five members, each of whom shall be a Member of the House of Representatives, be appointed by the Speaker to investigate all circumstances connected with certain contracts now said to exist by and between J. F. McMurray, an attorney, of McAlester, Okla., or any other person or persons, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma, or any member or members thereof, or any other of the Five Civilized Tribes, the Osage Indians, or any members thereof, this to include bribery, fraud, or any undue influence that may have been exerted on behalf of the approval or procuring of the said contracts, or any of them.

"Said committee is hereby empowered to sit and act at any place, to require the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers by subpœna to be signed by the chairman of said committee. The chairman of said committee, or any member thereof, is hereby empowered to administer oath. Said committee is further hereby empowered to take testimony under oath and in writing, to obtain documents, papers, and other information from the several departments of the Government, or any bureau thereof, to employ not to exceed two stenographers to take and make a record of all evidence received by the committee and to keep a record of its proceedings. All costs and expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

"All hearings by said committee shall be open to the public. The committee shall report to this Congress all evidence taken and their findings and conclusions thereon. And in case of disobedience to a subpœna this committee may invoke the aid of any court of the United States or of any Territories or Districts thereof, within the jurisdiction of which any inquiry may be carried on by said committee in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this resolution; and any such court within the jurisdiction of which the inquiry under this resolution is being carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person under authority of this resolution, issue an order requiring such persons to appear before the said committee and produce books and papers, if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding except in prosecution for perjury committed in giving such testimony."

And such committee may file its report with the Clerk of the House during the recess of Congress.

Expenditures on account of mileage and subsistence of the members of committee, fees, and mileage of witnesses, clerical and stenographic assistance to Feb. 1, 1911	$3,951.85
Estimated expenditures to end of session	600.00
Total	4,551.85

FRIAR LANDS INVESTIGATION.

The House of Representatives adopted the following resolution June 25, 1910:

"House resolution 795.

"Whereas it has been publicly charged that sales and leases of public lands have been made in the Philippines in violation of law: Now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the House Committee on Insular Affairs be, and it is hereby, empowered and directed to make a complete and thorough investigation of the interior department of the Philippine Government touching the administration of Philippine lands and all matters of fact and law pertaining thereto, whether the same are to be had in the United States, the Philippine Islands, or elsewhere, and to report to the House during this Congress all the evidence taken and their findings and recommendations thereon; that in conducting said inquiry said committee shall have power to subpœna and require the attendance of witnesses, to administer oaths, to require the production of books, papers, and documents, whether of a public or private character, and to employ necessary assistance, legal or otherwise, and make necessary expenditures, the cost of said investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. The powers hereby conferred may be exercised while the House is in session or during the recess of Congress by the committee or any duly appointed subcommittee thereof."

Two vouchers have been presented to the Committee on Accounts of witnesses, covering fees for attendance and mileage, amounting to $2,195, but that have not been approved by the committee. Estimated expenditures, $10,000.

INVESTIGATION OF NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS IN NEW YORK.

The following resolution was adopted by the House June 20, 1910:

"Whereas it has been recently charged in the public press and has been otherwise publicly stated that the conditions existing in the offices of the several clerks of the courts having jurisdiction to naturalize citizens in the southern district of New York are such that a very large number of persons desirous of declaring their intention to become citizens and applicants for naturalization and witnesses in naturalization cases have been, and are, greatly delayed at such offices to an extent that they have been, and are, compelled to stand in long lines for many hours, and sometimes days, awaiting an opportunity to present and make their declarations, petitions, and proofs, and that frequently, because of such delays and the overcrowding and obstructions resulting therefrom, a large number of applicants for naturalization and their witnesses were, and are, unable to appear before and be properly attended to by the officials in such offices, and that in consequence thereof in many cases did forego and abandon making their declaration and applications: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization are hereby empowered and directed to make investigation into the matters hereinbefore recited and the conditions alleged to exist, and that such committee report at the earliest time practicable the result of their investigation, with their recommendation as to what remedy ought to be provided to correct the conditions complained of, if they find them to exist; and that said committee may make such investigation by or through any subcommittee it may appoint from its members; that said committee or its subcommittee have power to send for persons and papers, examine witnesses, employ stenographers and other necessary clerical help to make such investigation; and said committee or its subcommittee may sit during the session and recess of the House and make a report on or before January 1, 1911, and the expense, not to exceed the sum of $2,500, of making said investigation, certified by the chairman of the committee, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House."

Expenditures to February 1, 1911, $180. Amount limited by resolution to $2,500.

JOINT COOMMISSION ON REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

This commission was originally a joint committee, created by the following concurrent resolution:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a joint special committee be appointed consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws prepared by the statutory revision commission heretofore authorized to revise and codify the laws of the United States, and that the said joint committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress and to employ necessary clerical and other assistance; to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expense as may be deemed necessary, all such expense to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives."

The joint resolution creating the commission follows:

"Joint resolution (No. 19) to create a joint committee to consider the revision and codification of the laws of the United States.

"Resolved, etc., That a joint special committee be appointed, consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President from Members of the Sixtieth Congress, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker from the Members of the Sixtieth Congress, to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws reported by the statutory revision commission heretofore authorized to revise and codify the laws of the United States, including the laws of the last session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and that the said joint committee be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress and to employ necessary assistants, to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expense as may be deemed necessary, all such expense to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives."

Approved March 2, 1907.

Expenditures for legal and clerical services to February 1, 1911, $66,701.52.

One-half, or $33,350.76, has been paid out of the House contingent fund and one-half out of the Senate contingent fund.

The life of this commission being practically unlimited, no estimate of future expenditures can be made. They now average $1,500 per month, or $18,000 per annum.

I have thought it proper to bring to the attention of the House these large expenditures of money out of the contingent fund that the House may understand that this appropriation for the House and the business of the House for such expenses as may not be estimated for in the annual appropriation bills has been paid out not for the benefit of the House, but in these investigations, whether they have been of any benefit or not. I want to call the attention of the House to the careless way in which the expenditure of this fund was authorized. I have no other purpose in view than that the House may know what has become of the money and that it may understand that its Members have expended this large sum, nearly $70,000, nearly one-half of the entire amount appropriated for the contingent fund during this Congress, for these investigations, the end of which we have not seen and the results of which we have not at hand, $33,000 having been expended by a commission in the revision of the laws.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. How much money has been paid on account of the immigration commission?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not know; that is not provided for out of the contingent fund. It is provided for by a separate appropriation.

Mr. AUSTIN. I simply wanted to know how much money we had thrown away in that connection.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand about a million and a half dollars.

Mr. AUSTIN. With no results.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Well, they are not appreciable or ascertainable, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. O'CONNELL. The gentleman from Georgia knows that the Committee on Accounts have consistently and repeatedly refused to approve many of these bills that have come to them.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes; we have refused time and time again to spend money for what may be a laudable purpose, for the benefit of the employees of this House at the request of the Members of the House, and yet we find ourselves in a position where these large sums of money have been expended in the way that I have called attention to. We have refused in many instances to approve these bills and proposed to submit them to the House and let the House authorize their payment out of the contingent fund if it sees fit, or out of some other fund.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. Where an investigation is ordered by the House of Representatives and payment is to be made out of the contingent fund of the House, what authority has the Committee on Accounts to refuse to pay any of the vouchers?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. On the authority that the Committee on Accounts believe that the sums asked for are not reasonable, and we therefore decline to approve them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman asked me a question; we are facing that matter in the committee now, and we faced it during the recess during the last session and this. We did refuse to audit those bills.

Now, here is a resolution which reads:

To be paid on the certificate of the chairman of the committee, out of the contingent fund of the House.

The disbursing officer declines to pay any of those bills unless audited by the Committee on Accounts. The Committee on Accounts may not have the power to prevent their payment, but the Committee on Accounts, acting on the suggestion of some of us who did not believe that these sums were what they should be, have declined to give them our approval, and so these gentlemen will have to look somewhere else or to the House for approval of the accounts.

Mr. O'CONNELL. The gentleman from Georgia knows that many difficulties are caused by the fact that the Committee on Appropriations takes up accounts that we refuse and inserts them in the appropriation bills after we have turned them down. Has the gentleman from Georgia any suggestion to make that will cure that procedure so that it may be prevented in the future?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It could be obviated simply by some one making a point of order on the appropriation bills; because if the Committee on Accounts does not authorize it, or the statute does not authorize it, then a point of order will lie against such an appropriation in an appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I happen to be a member of both committees, and am somewhat familiar with the practice of both committees. It does not seem to me that the Committee on Accounts is in a good position to be throwing rocks at the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have not thrown any rocks at anybody.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON].

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize the point that has been so well made by my colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] with regard to the looseness with which this House legislates in regard to these special investigating committees. Some one introduces a resolution of inquiry. The matter is headlined two or three columns wide in the newspapers, and a tremendous flurry is created over some proposition. Then that is followed by a resolution brought into the House to create a special investigating committee. All of those resolutions have been so loosely drawn that we find ourselves now in the situation where almost the entire contingent fund of the House of Representatives has been spent by these special investigating committees. The lesson that is to be drawn from that is that from this time forward the House should scrutinize more closely the phraseology of these resolutions creating special investigating committees. The House has given too wide a discretion to the chairmen of these committees in the expenditure of public money. That discretion ought to be limited, or it ought to be definitely stated that those accounts are to be audited by the Committee on Accounts before they are finally allowed. I hope that from this time forward the House will look into that phase of these resolutions creating special investigating committees.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Would it not be better to have a rule of the House that no investigating committee could be appointed until the phraseology of the resolution appointing it had been submitted to the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. DAWSON. I think that would be very desirable, that in the first instance these resolutions should go to the Committee on Accounts for consideration and scrutiny with respect to expenditures before they were brought before the House for passage.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my approval of the views of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] in reference to the shameful treatment the Hebrew citizens of America are receiving at the hands of the despotic Government of Russia. And yet, Mr. Chairman, when we read the history of the Russian Government and the horrible treatment of its Jewish citizens we ought not to be surprised at its conduct in reference to our Hebrew citizens. But the American Government owes it to all of its citizens, native or adopted, to protect each and every one of them in their rights not only on the soil of America but entirely around the globe, and I hope that the present administration will have the firmness and the earnestness and the patriotism to either demand the rights of our citizens while in Russia or terminate our treaty with that Government or any other Government that will discriminate against our citizens. [Applause.]

Now, another word in reference to the expenditures which have just been discussed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. I have never voted against a proper appropriation, as the gentleman from Illinois well said the other day. I was inclined to vote against an appropriation to continue the work of the Immigration Commission during the last session of Congress. That commission had been in existence for more than two years and had expended out of the Public Treasury hundreds of thousands of dollars. It had an expensive piece of machinery and in one of the near-by buildings an immense corps of clerks, experts; and in addition the commission was organized and traveled abroad investigating a question that every sensible American citizen knew all about even before the creation of the commission. Do we need any testimony or the expenditure of at least a million dollars to convince us the time has long since passed for allowing undesirable immigrants to land upon the shores of our country? Why, we had the promise of the chairman of that committee if we would give him an additional appropriation that commission would wind up its business, and that some practical legislation would be submitted to this Congress for it to pass that would close our doors to the riffraff and criminal class and the Black Hand and the scum of the earth that has been pouring in upon our shores for years and years; and, as a Republican Member of Congress, I feel indignant that a Republican majority, charged with the responsibilities that we are, is about to go out of power in this Hous without enacting a proposed law which, I think, more far-reaching and more important than any law that we could possibly consider during this session of Congress.

I would not keep out of America any man who comes here from a foreign country who has a character for industry, who is law-abiding, patriotic, and who comes to make America his home and to become Americanized, but I would close our doors to the Black hand, the worthless, the criminals, and that class of people who come here to save and absorb all they can, send it back to their native lands and follow that money or property to their foreign homes. I hope when the other side come into power here that they will appreciate and realize the importance of immediate legislation of this character. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

FORTIFICATION OF THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, we are approaching the completion of the most gigantic engineering project of any age—the construction of the Panama Canal. The opening of this intercontinental waterway has been the dream of the western world for more than three centuries. It remained for the genius, wealth, and power of the United States to work into an actual reality this enterprise that had invited the attention of all governments of both Europe and America. I do not use the phrase in a hackneyed sense when I say that the perfection of this commercial highway marks the most important event in the development of this most progressive age. Its far-reaching consequences are so great, so complicated, so sweeping, that all statements as to the merits of this development are merely speculative. We are at the very earliest dawn of a new era in the world's trade; this aisle of the seas brings us nearer than one-third of the distance around the globe to new races, commercially speaking, new markets, and an unexplored field for the spread of our American civilization. With this change in the route of travel, for not only ourselves, but for all Europe comes new political conditions as well as new trade conditions. We would not if we could, and we can not, possibly, if we would, divorce the canal and our interests in it from its international features, which, in my opinion, irrespective of its ownership, will always be supreme and paramount to our individual rights, as a new element in facilitating the world's trade. These are the aspects that lead to this inquiry, namely, Shall the canal be fortified, so as to be a strategic point in time of war for our absolute benefit and control, or shall it be neutralized, open for the passage of ships of all nations in times of war as well as in times of peace, under international treaty limitations of neutrality, without regard to sovereignty, except for its protection?

For the purpose of a fair statement of the subject of discussion and as a basis of what I shall have to say, I incorporate here the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] on the 17th day of May, 1910:

Concurrent resolution expressing the opinion of Congress against the necessity of fortification to defend the Panama Canal when completed and requesting the President of the United States to negotiate an international treaty to guarantee its safety, the entrances thereto, the vessels therein, and the commerce thereon, in times of peace as well as in times of war and otherwise.

This is the preamble of the resolution. I incorporate herewith the entire concurrent resolution No. 40:

Whereas the time is approaching when the Panama Canal will be completed and opened for navigation by the ships of the maritime nations of the world; and

Whereas the said canal and the entrances thereto can be protected and safeguarded more certainly and adequately through a proper international treaty among nations of the world interested in its safety and maintenance than by fortifications at the termini and along the line thereof, although constantly manned and supported by large military and naval forces; and

Whereas it is now deemed inexpedient, unwise, and unnecessary to provide such fortifications and the armanent therefor and the military and naval forces requisite to secure and protect said canal, the entrances thereto, and the vessels and commerce thereon, also against blockade: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America (the Senate concurring) (being of the opinion expressed in the foregoing preamble), That the President of the United States, by and through the treaty-making power vested in him by the Constitution of the United States, be respectfully but earnestly requested, as soon as practicable, to initiate, negotiate, and conclude a treaty with such nations of the world as may be willing to join the United States in guaranteeing the proper preservation, protection, and safety of said Panama Canal and the entrances thereto, including protection from danger of blockade and the protection of vessels entering or desiring to enter therein, and the commerce thereon, in times of war as in times of peace, and also including in such treaty all other stipulations and provisions deemed necessary to protect the United States in its ownership, possession, control, sanitation, right to police, and to perpetually maintain said canal and the entrances thereto for the uses and purposes for which it is being constructed, or may be adapted, and especially to guarantee at all times to the signatory powers to such treaty the full and free use of said canal upon such terms and under such rules, regulation, and government as may be prescribed by the United States.

To this resolution, now before Congress for several months, the President makes reply in his annual message sent to the House in December in the following language. I quote from page 36 of the message:

Among questions arising for present solution is whether the canal shall be fortified. I have already stated to the Congress that I strongly favor fortification, and I now reiterate this opinion and ask your consideration of the subject in the light of the report already before you made by a competent board.

If, in your discretion, we believe modern fortifications to be necessary to the adequate protection and policing of the canal, then it is our duty to construct them. We have built the canal. It is our property. By convention we have indicated our desire for, and indeed undertaken, its universal and equal use. It is also well known that one of the chief objects in the construction of the canal has been to increase the military effectiveness of our Navy. Failure to fortify the canal would make the attainment of both these aims depend upon the mere moral obligations of the whole international public—obligations which we would be powerless to enforce and which could never in any other way be absolutely safeguarded against a desperate and irresponsible enemy.

Following this recommendation to Congress, the President on January 12 sends a special message to this body in the following:

I forward you herewith a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing the report of the board of officers of the Army and Navy appointed by him to consider the subject of defense of the Panama Canal. A preliminary report of this board, together with a letter of the Secretary of War, a resolution of the joint board, and estimates of cost were forwarded to Congress by me by letter dated April 29, 1910. No appropriation, however, has yet been made for the initiation of work on the proposed defense. The canal when completed will afford the only convenient route for water communication between our Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and virtually will be a part of the coast line of the United States. Its assured possession and control will greatly contribute to our peace, safety, and prosperity as a Nation. In my judgment it is the right and the duty of the United States to fortify and make capable of defense the work that will bear so vital a relation to its welfare, and that is being created solely by it and at an expenditure of enormous sums. I have authorized the submission, through the Secretary of the Treasury, of the revised estimate for appropriations referred to in the accompanying letter of the Secretary of War, which estimate is less than the original estimate by approximately one-third, and I urgently recommend that an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the initiation of work on the proposed defenses be made at the present session of Congress in order that these defenses may be completed by the date of the completion of the canal.

I have purposely incorporated the messages and resolutions in this matter so that the Members of the House and the country may have a definite understanding of the attitude of the President and those Members who are in sympathy with the views expressed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] on this engrossing question.

It is not improper to inquire, as a basis of what shall be said, into our uniform national policy prevailing for more than a century of our national life, which long-established policy appears to be wholly antagonistic to that sought to be initiated by the proponents of fortification. A policy that not only kept us at peace with the entire world, a policy of absolute neutrality, that has been more potent than all other agencies in demonstrating the force of precept in establishing a great national policy. This policy of ours has made friends for us everywhere, stimulated our trade, and courted respect for us by all the great powers. It would be suicidal for us to consider any other than a pacific policy, for what we want is trade. We are essentially a business people, and commerce and trade only thrive in times of profound peace. The first President of the United States laid broad and deep a policy from which we shall never depart, and which has been uniformly and consistently adhered to through the entire period of our national life. Washington, in his first inaugural, said:

The duty and interest of the United States requires that they should with sincerity and good faith adopt and pursue a conduct friendly and impartial toward all belligerent powers.

Mr. Jefferson, following the example of Washington, said:

Honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none, was the basis of our success * * *. Cultivate the friendship of belligerent nations by every act of justice and candor.

Mr. Madison, to quote from his message:

It is our policy to cherish peace and friendly intercourse with all nations having a corresponding disposition; to maintain a strict neutrality toward all belligerent nations; to prefer in all cases an amicable discussion and reasonable accommodation of differences to a decision of them by an appeal to arms.

President Monroe, with the strong force of his personality, touching this national characteristic, said:

A virtuous people may and will confine themselves within the limit of a strict neutrality; it is of the highest importance to our national character and indispensable to the morality of our citizens that all violations of our neutrality should be prevented.

Mr. Monroe further said on January 30, 1824:

If a system of universal and permanent peace could be established or if in war the belligerent parties would respect the rights of neutral powers, we would have no occasion for an army or a navy. The expense and danger of such establishments might be avoided. The whole movement of our Government from the establishment of our independence to this hour has been guided by sacred regard for peace.

Let me quote in substantiation of this policy from President Van Buren, who said:

We have faithfully sustained the foreign policy with which the United States, under the guidance of the first President, took their stand in the family of nations—that of regulating their intercourse with other powers by the approved principles of private life; asking and according equal rights and equal privileges, rendering and demanding justice in all cases; advocating their own and discussing the pretensions of others with candor, directness, and sincerity; appealing at all times to reason, but never yielding to force nor seeking to acquire anything for ourselves by force.

President Polk in his annual message said:

Our Government is a confederation of independent States whose policy is peace with each other and with all the world. The world has nothing to fear from military ambitions in our Government * * * and it can not be otherwise than pacific.

I quote a paragraph from President Tyler's message:

Peace with all the world is the true foundation of our policies, which can only be rendered permanent by the practice of equal and impartial justice to all.

President McKinley, as late as 1899, in affirmation of the policy so long maintained by the Government, said:

We want no wars of conquest; we must avoid the temptation of territorial aggression. War should never be entered upon until every agency of peace has failed. Peace is preferable to war in almost any contingency. Arbitration is the true method of settlement of international as well as local differences.

Along these stated intervals of our national life have the most profound statesmen spoken in approving terms of our fixed course toward the nations of the world. No party shall be permitted in the future to violate the pledge of our faith we have given to the races in the confidence we have in our policy that has given us our standing in national councils. Our peace policy, steadily adhered to for more than a century and a quarter, is as fixed and absolute as the predominant principle of our national life as any principle of the common law in English jurisprudence. Let us inquire into the legal status from an international standpoint, where we have placed ourselves with relation to the canal by treaty and convention, and ascertain whether there is authority of law for our proposed action of fortification. The President of the United States has vested in him the power to make treaties by the concurrence of the Senate; he is authorized—by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present shall concur (Const. U. S., art 3, sec. 2).

And when they are made they have the binding force of law as other statutes have.

The Constitution and the laws of the United States and all treaties made or which shall be made shall be the supreme law of the land (Const. U. S., art. 6).

Pursuant to the powers fixed by the Constitution we began making treaties very early in our history with the several powers, both to regulate commerce and to fix our status on political questions, and have continued to do so to this day. Well-defined principles originally having their initiation in treaties and conventions, when long adhered to by the signatory powers, take to themselves the force and effect of international law and become binding after such acquiesence in them by neutral or nonsignatory powers, even though they may not directly subscribe to them by official recognition. More than 75 years ago, to be specific, March 3, 1835, the Senate of the United States passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to consider the expediency of opening negotiations with the governments of other nations, and particularly that of the Governments of South America and New Granada, for the purpose of protecting, by suitable treaty stipulations with them, such individuals and companies as may undertake to open a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by the construction of a ship canal across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and of securing forever by such stipulation the free and equal rights of navigating said canal to all nations on the payment of such reasonable tolls as may be established to compensate the capitalist whom we engage in such undertaking and complete the work.

We put at the very foundation of the thought of this great international highway that other correlative thought that it was to be for the use of the world—a gift to the commerce of the future—but that it could not be kept open and enjoyed by the nations unless it was under strict neutrality by treaty. It is antagonistic to the very conception of its importance—that of unrestricted use to the commerce of the world without distinction of "country or flag"—that this use must be subject to the wars and revolutions of different powers. Our aim has always been to act as the trustee of this waterway, to stand in a fiduciary capacity for the tradesmen of all nations in keeping for them the unlimited and unrestricted use of the canal in times of war as well as in times of peace. We have, by treaty obligations, established a neutrality of the Canal Zone. As early as April 19, 1850, the United States and Great Britain concluded what is known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty for facilitating the building and protecting the construction of the ship canal between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. I only refer to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty to show what we conceded to be our rights and duties then as one of the world powers in constructing this highway of commerce for the use of the world. And from the fact that I shall have occasion to discuss the provisions of this treaty somewhat in detail before I conclude I herewith incorporate articles 1, 2, 3, and 6:

ARTICLE 1. The Governments of the United States and Great Britain hereby declare that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship canal, agreeing that neither will erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same, or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume, or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America; nor will either make use of any protection which either affords or may afford, or any alliance which either has or may have, to, or with any state or people for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any such fortifications, or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same; nor will the United States or Great Britain take advantage of any intimacy or use any alliance, connection, or influence that either may possess with any State or Government through whose territory the said canal may pass for the purpose of acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, for the citizens or subjects of the one any rights or advantages in regard to commerce or navigation through the said canal which shall not be offered on the same terms to the citizens or subjects of the other.

ART. 2. Vessels of the United States and of Great Britain traversing the said canal shall in case of war between the contracting parties be exempted from blockade, detention, or capture by either of the belligerents, and this provision shall extend to such a distance from the two ends of the canal as it may hereafter be found expedient to establish.

ART. 3. In order to secure the construction of the said canal the contracting parties engage that if any such canal shall be undertaken upon fair and equitable terms by any parties having the authority of the local government or governments through whose territory the same may pass, then the persons employed in making the said canal and their property used or to be used for that object shall be protected from the commencement of the canal to its completion by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain from unjust detention, confiscation, seizure, or any violence whatsoever.

ART. 6. The contracting parties in this convention engage to invite every State with which both or either have friendly intercourse to enter into stipulations with them similar to these which they have entered into with each other, to the end that all other States may share in the honor and advantage of having contributed to a work of such general interest and importance as the canal herein contemplated. And the contracting parties likewise agree that each shall enter into treaty stipulations with such of the Central American States as they deem advisable, for the purpose of more effectually carrying out the great design of this convention, namely, that of constructing and maintaining the said canal as a ship communication between the two oceans for the benefit of mankind, on equal terms to all, and of protecting the same; and they also agree that the good offices of either shall be employed, when requested by the other, in aiding and assisting the negotiation of such treaty stipulations; and should any difference arise as to right or property over the territory through which the said canal shall pass between the States or Governments of Central America, and such differences should in any way impede or obstruct the execution of the said canal, the Governments of the United States and Great Britain will use their good offices to settle such differences in the manner best suited to promote the interests of the said canal and to strengthen the bonds of friendship and alliance which exist between the contracting parties.

These three general principles are recognized in this treaty: First, that neither party would either erect or maintain any fortification commanding the canal or in the vicinity thereof; that no right or advantage in regard to commerce or navigation should accrue to one of the contracting parties that did not accrue to the other; second, the canal should never be subject to the exercise of the right of blockade, and should the contracting parties be at war with each other, the vessels of neither belligerent should be subject to capture or detention in said canal, and that this provision should extend to the maritime distance of 3 miles from each end of the canal; third, the general principle of complete neutralization is recognized and established as its chief feature.

This treaty was superseded by what is known as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of November, 1901; superseded for the purpose of giving the United States the right to own the territory over which the canal was to be constructed, and to construct the canal and regulate its use, the right to police the canal, and the further right to protect it from lawlessness and disorder, and establish a system of tolls, but not to limit the neutrality established in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty or to abandon the right of nonblockade, or to confer upon the United States, as I think we shall see, the right of the United States to fortify the canal for strategic purposes. I quote from the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, now in force, relative to the three general principles established in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as follows (sec. 2, art. 3, Right of Blockade):

The canal shall never be blockaded nor shall any right of war be exercised or any act of hostility be committed within it.

I quote from the introduction of article 3, "General principle of neutralization:"

The United States adapts as the basis of neutralization of such ship canal the following rule substantially as embodied in the convention at Constantinople, signed October 28, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal.

Article 1 of the Suez maritime canal convention, to which reference is made in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty on the question of neutralization, is as follows:

The Suez Maritime Canal shall always be free and open in time of war as in time of peace to every vessel of commerce or war without distinction of flag.

Consequently the high contracting parties agree not in anyway to interfere with the free use of the canal in times of war as in times of peace. The canal shall never be subject to the exercise of the right of blockade. I quote now from section 2, article 3, of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty on the right to blockade:

The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised, nor any act of hostility be committed within it. (The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.)

The language entered in parentheses is so included to put in direct contrast with the language used in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850, which is not incorporated in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, namely:

The Government of the United States and Great Britain hereby declare that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship canal, agreeing that neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same or in the vicinity thereof, etc.

Because this language is not included in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty in the face of the expressed provision for neutrality in time of war as in time of peace, and against the specific provision that there should never be a blockade, it is contended that the United States has power under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to fortify. It may be fairly assumed that if there is any right for fortification whatever, the right is lodged in the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in the respect above set out, and nowhere else. To give us still more light upon the question of neutralization, I shall call your attention to sections 4 and 5 of article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901, and now in force, namely:

No belligerent shall embark or disembark troops, or munitions of warlike material, in the canal except in cases of accidental injury of transit, and in such cases the transit shall resume with all possible dispatch.

Section 5, article 3:

The provisions of this article shall apply to waters adjacent to the canal to within 3 miles of either end, etc.

The contention is that the right to fortify and maintain the canal as a strategic point of either defense or offense in times of war, if based upon the police reservation without restricting the use of the language to its original intent, is inconsistent with the theory of neutralization; that both of the provisions can not be operative in the treaty, either correlatively or individually, and if it is assumed that they do both so exist in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, one or the other of the provisions must fail. It can not be questioned but that it is the clearly expressed purpose of the United States, viewed not only from the instrument itself, but from the policy of the Government as expressed in its conduct and treaties for many years, to maintain complete neutralization. It is a canon of interpretation in determining the legal effect of the provision in an instrument, if any ambiguity exists, that the court will consider the intention of the parties in its execution, their purpose, as discovered by the fair intent of the language used in the instrument, and this intention may be aided by the circumstances under which the parties were acting in such execution. Where there is no ambiguity there is no necessity for construction. The right to fortify, so far as the treaty is concerned, rests in the construction to be given to the second section of article 3 of the treaty. It is also a rule of law that the meaning of words may be restricted or limited, to avoid any repugnancy. The meaning of the words used in the reservation of the United States, "maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder," need not be limited or restricted to harmonize all the provisions of the instrument. Violence is only done when the meaning of this phrase is enlarged and unlimited so as to predicate a right not otherwise provided, to thereby fortify. Enlarged so as to permit the Government to erect fortifications, maintain an immense navy, enlist a large standing army for what? To "police the canal and to prohibit lawlessness."

Let us look into the history of the ratification of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901. There was a prior Hay-Pauncefote treaty made February 5, 1900, which by clause 7 stipulated as follows:

No fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or waters adjacent.

The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against "lawlessness and disorder." This treaty was not approved by Great Britain and I quote here the provisions to show that both powers clearly distinguished between the right to fortify and the right to police the canal. The theory of fortification was not confounded with the proposition to police it. The former was prohibited and the latter allowed in the treaty of December 16, 1901. Let it be definitely understood that if any right on the part of the United States to fortify the canal exists, it is a right growing out of the failure to incorporate it in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901, and a right not directly conferred. Are we to adopt a new "exegesis" of these extraordinary engagements and assert that they permit and authorize what they do not directly provide? How does this treaty of 1901 deal with the subject of fortifications? I quote in part from the opinion of a distinguished authority:

After the treaty of 1900 failed of confirmation, it must be assumed that the matter was carefully negotiated between the parties, with the result that on the one hand the United States made no assertion or claim of a right to fortify for strategic purposes, and that on the other hand Great Britain acknowledged a right "to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder." If in this regard there had been any intention on the part of either party to this engagement to go back on this principle and policy of previous treaties, of the treaty of 1850 and draft of February 5, 1900, can there be any question but the right to fortify the canal would have been conceded and expressed in direct terms, and that right not left to a negative interpretation of the instrument that contained no mention and no reference whatever to the subject of fortifications?

Nor can it be fairly argued that the United States has a right in its discretion to determine fortifications an element and part of the military policing of the canal and to fortify it under those assumptions accordingly.

Fortifications mean solid, permanent, and expensive structures manned with a suitable artillery and continuously garrisoned by considerable bodies of troops. Things that by no fair construction could be included in the military policing of the canal against lawlessness and disorder. There is no possible ground for fortifications contained in the treaty of 1850 and proposed treaty of February, 1900, that was omitted from the last Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

But that implication, if adopted, must be fair enough to evolve the conclusion that by failing or omitting to secure permission to fortify the canal the United States, in fact, procured both the right to fortify and the right to maintain military police on the canal, a conclusion, as before stated, so extraordinary as to be inadmissible. The just and fair construction of the treaty, as already intimated here, is that the parties dropped the subject of fortification altogether and substituted the liberty on the part of the United States—to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

Nor is that view merely speculative. It is supported by all the surrounding circumstances. When this treaty was ratified parties had in mind the case of the Suez Canal as a precedent to be followed, and, indeed, expressly, as I have heretofore shown, adopted as a basis of neutralization of the Panama Canal the rules applicable to the Suez Canal under the Constantinople convention of 1888.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield at that point? Is the Suez Canal fortified?

Mr. CLINE. No; the Suez Canal is not fortified, and never was fortified. It has been under absolute neutrality since 1888.

Those rules do not reserve or give to the owner of the Suez Canal any right to fortify it, or any right to treat it as main line or coast line, as held in absolutely and unqualified sovereignty and to be defended, or otherwise dealt with accordingly. Such owner is, in effect, constituted a trustee of that international water highway for the use and benefit of all nations, and is thus left without any inducement and without any necessity to fortify the canal. It is not too much to contend and conclude, indeed it honors the United States, to assume the position it meant to assume, substantially the same fiduciary position with respect to the Panama Canal and by noninsistence upon anything more than the right to maintain military police upon the canal, to assure and satisfy the world that it meant to hold the control of the canal as a trustee in the interest and for the benefit of all nations. [Applause.]

To show that I am intrenched in the position I assume, namely, that it was not the purpose of the United States to fortify the canal, I shall quote from the record on the adoption of the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty. This treaty was sent to the Senate by President McKinley, and contained these definite propositions:

SECTION 1, ART. 2. The canal shall be free and open in times of war, as in times of peace, to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect to the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise.

SEC. 2, ART. 3. The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility committed within it.

SEC. 7, ART. 3. No fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

First, absolute and unconditional neutralization; second, that the canal should not be subject to blockade, but open to all nations on exact equality in times of peace and in time of war; third, that no fortifications should be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent. What did the Senate of the United States do with President McKinley's treaty? It left in every one of these propositions. (See S. Doc. 85, 57th Cong., 1st sess.) When the treaty was before the Senate for consideration Mr. Butler offered an amendment proposing to strike out section 7, article 2. This section provided that no fortifications should be erected on the canal or on the waters adjacent, and Mr. Butler's amendment to strike out this section was defeated by a vote of 44 to 26. Mr. TILLMAN offered to amend the treaty and incorporate the following language at the end of article 2:

It is agreed, however, that none of the foregoing conditions and stipulations of this article shall apply to measures which the United States may find it necessary to take for securing by its own forces the defense of the United States and the maintenance of order.

This amendment was lost by a vote of 43 to 27, showing conclusively that the Senate of the United States was opposed to converting the canal into a stragetic point of defense in the time of war.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLINE. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. May not an explanation of some of that vote be found in the fact that men believed that the terms of the treaty as then submitted gave power to the United States to fortify?

Mr. CLINE. Why, that was the very question raised by the Butler amendment directly and was decided by a vote of 44 to 26.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the point is this: If a man believed that the treaty did give the power an expression reiterating it might be opposed as unnecessary or as imperiling the treaty by changing it and opening up the whole matter again?

Mr. CLINE. But an affirmative vote upon the proposition squarely put would have removed all ambiguity.

It shows that the United States in the ratification of that treaty, which, however, failed of ratification by the English Government, was for neutralization, for the free and equal use of the canal to all nations, and opposed to creating war fortifications. I now desire to incorporate at this point articles 3 and 4 of the second Hay-Pauncefote treaty, sent to the Senate for ratification by President Roosevelt on December 4, 1901, and ratified by the Senate December 16, 1901:

ART. 3. The United States adopts as the basis of the neutralization of such ship canal the following rules, substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople, signed the 29th day of October, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal, that is to say:

1. The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

2. The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

3. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not revictual nor take any stores in the canal, except so far as may be strictly necessary; and the transit of such vessels through the canal shall be effected with the least possible delay in accordance with the regulations in force and with only such intermission as may result from the necessities of the service. Prizes shall be in all respects subject to the same rules as vessels of war of the belligerent.

4. No belligerent shall embark or disembark troops, munitions of war, or warlike materials in the canal, except in the case of accidental hindrance of the transit, and in such case the transit shall be resumed with all possible dispatch.

5. The provision of this article shall apply to waters adjacent to the canal, within 3 marine miles of either end. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not remain in such waters longer than 24 hours at any one time, except in cases of distress, and in such cases shall depart as soon as possible; but a vessel of war of one belligerent shall not depart within 24 hours from the departure of a vessel of war of the other belligerent.

6. The plant, establishments, buildings, and all works necessary to the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal shall be deemed to be part thereon, for the purpose of this treaty, and in time of war, as in time of peace, shall enjoy complete immunity from attack or injury by belligerents and from acts calculated to impair their usefulness as part of the canal.

ART. 4. 1. It is agreed that no change of territorial sovereignty or of international relations of the country or countries traversed by the before-mentioned canal shall affect the general principles of neutralization or the obligation of the high contracting parties under the present treaty.

When this treaty was being considered on the 16th day of December, 1901, Senator CULBERSON, of Texas, offered the following amendment:

It is agreed, however, that none of the immediately foregoing conditions and stipulations in sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of article 3 shall apply to measures which the United States may find it necessary to take for securing by its own forces the defense of the United States and the maintenance of public order.

This amendment was lost by a vote of 62 to 15—as complete and decisive a vote against constituting the canal a strategic point of defense as cou'd be well desired. This proceeding showed the controlling purpose of the Senate to be that it was to continue in line with our history—a complete neutrality in the Canal Zone. Is there any provisions by fair construction that will write into this treaty by any sort of implication, in the face of the overwhelming defeat of this amendment, the right to fortify? Why did not the United States Senate reserve the right by amendment at this very point in the discussion to fortify, and adopt Senator CULBERSON'S amendment, if that was the essential purpose of the Senate? We have a right to demand of the promoters of this scheme the unquestionable source of their authority to vote away an unlimited amount of money when they seek to do so without apparent authority of law.

It is easy enough to declare the old treaty abrogated and in lieu thereof that the present treaty confers authority, but it is more satisfactory to point out the particular section that authorizes it. On this same day Senator McLaurin, of Mississippi, proposed the following amendment, namely, to strike out of article 3 the following:

Substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople, signed the 28th day of October, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal.

Mr. McLaurin's amendment was determined in the negative, and the provisions for neutralization contained in the convention of 1888 were written by implication into the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901. The Senate of the United States refused to recognize any abatement whatever of the complete neutralization of the canal as provided for in the Suez Canal treaty.

I call your attention to another fact standing in the forefront of this ratification by the Senate. The United States provided that—

The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations.

It shall never be blockaded.

No right of war shall be exercised.

No act of hostility shall be committed within it.

That vessels of war shall not revictual nor take any stores into the canal, except so far as may be strictly necessary.

No belligerent shall embark or disembark troops, munitions of war, or warlike materials in the canal, except in case of accidental hindrance.

Neutralization shall apply to the waters adjacent to the canal within 3 marine miles of either end.

Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not remain in such water more than 24 hours at any one time.

A vessel of war of a belligerent shall not depart within 24 hours of the departure of a vessel of war of the other belligerent.

The plants, establishments, buildings, and all works necessary to the construction, maintenance, and operation of the canal shall be deemed a part thereof for the purpose of this treaty, and in times of war, as in times of peace, shall enjoy complete immunity from all attacks or injury by belligerents.

No change of sovereignty shall affect the general principles of neutralization.

These are the salient features of the treaty, and, taken as a whole, are absolutely at fatal variance with the theory of a right to fortify.

The power to make a treaty is classified in the Constitution as the very highest function of government. Ratification of a treaty constitutes the most solemn and binding obligation the Government can assume. That the right guaranteed to the world in this compact with Great Britain, the privileges accorded to all nations, are incompatible with a right to fortify, embarrass, menace, and seriously affect the accrued rights of those who may turn their ships of trade this way, at the mere caprice of the Government, is too patent to discuss. If the nations of the world are not to be protected in the enjoyment, uninterrupted, of the conditions above set out, why enter into a sacred compact to observe them? Why provide for complete neutralization if it is a mere profession, a mere declaration, to be violated with immunity? Why declare against a blockade if we are to emplant fortifications and invite belligerency, and thus paralyze the commerce that we hope to see passing through the canal? Why profess to the world that not even a change of sovereignty shall change the provisions of the treaty as to complete neutralization if we are to willfully disregard the compact ourselves?

I have heretofore stated that this hysteria for fortification is a new malady in the history of the construction of the canal. From the very earliest inception of the idea of building a waterway across the Isthmus to this time no thought of fortifications was ever indulged in or connected with the construction of the canal. I could call no stronger witness to make that statement secure than President McKinley, who, following along the line of his illustrious predecessors in the uniform enforcement of a national policy, and who from his very nature was opposed to war, himself the apostle of The Hague conference, seeking universal peace, sent to the United States Senate the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

That, as you will remember, contained the provisions of absolute neutrality, nonfortification, that the canal should never be blockaded, and should be open to vessels of all nations, without regard to "country or flag," in time of war as in time of peace. He not only had confidence in men and nations, but the deepest faith in his country's policy and in the sacredness of its pledges. Volumes might be quoted to show the uniform consistent attitude of the whole people of the Republic. I content myself with the strong words of President Cleveland:

Whatever highway may be constructed across the barrier, dividing the two greatest maritime seas of the world, must be for the world's benefit—a trust for mankind to be removed from the chance of domination by any single power, nor become a point of invitation for hostilities or a prize of warlike ambitions. * * * What the United States wants in Central America, next to the happiness of its people, is the security and neutrality of the interoceanic route that leads through it.

In this connection I will call attention to the basis of the claim made by those who assert a right to fortify. The President of the United States, for whom I have the very highest respect, and to whose aid I would willingly come with my vote to defend the integrity and the rights of the United States, under any and all lawful and proper circumstances, discussed the subject of fortification of the canal in New York on the evening of the 21st of January. If he is correctly reported in the public press, he bases the right to fortify upon two conclusively legal grounds and upon two grounds of public polity. The legal propositions are:

First. The right to fortify is secured to us under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901.

Second. The right to fortify is also conferred in the Spooner Act of 1902, giving us authority of law to construct the canal.

The public policy propositions are:

First. The canal could be defended by fortifying it without an increased Navy; therefore it ought to be done.

Second. The expense would be trifling compared with the amount we have invested in the canal and the security it would afford.

We are told by the President that there is no comparison to be made between the Suez and the Panama Canals. The Suez Canal being under complete neutralization, an admission of grounds of comparison would be fatal to the theory of fortification. The statement that no comparison can be made is based upon the fact that the character of the soil through which they are constructed differs; the topography of the country is not the same; the sovereignty over these twin intercontinental waterways not the same. How could these facts in any manner affect the question of practical neutrality? No person opposed to fortification ever laid a comparison on these grounds or either of them, but upon the grounds that the Suez Canal and the Panama Canal show the original design and purpose of each to be the same, their uses identical as great international projects; and hence, not only capable, but of necessity ought to be operated by the nations of the world under similar agreements. Indeed, we have so recognized their similarity of purpose and identity of use that we have never made a treaty respecting a waterway across the Isthmus, either with Panama, Nicaragua, or any other government but what we made the basis of the neutralization of the Suez Canal, either directly or indirectly, the basis of the neutralization of the canal across the Isthmus.

We are to understand that the right to fortify from a legal standpoint is not claimed as an inherent right of sovereignty, but because of the terms of the treaty of 1901 and the Spooner Act of Congress. We are informed that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was modified for the very purpose of securing the right on the part of the United States to own the land through which the canal was to be constructed, "to construct the canal itself," and, to use the President's language, "to regain the power to fortify the canal which we had parted with in the treaty of 1850." It is sufficient to say that the United States never had a right to fortify a canal across the Isthmus prior to 1850, when the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was made; it could not therefore have parted with such right nor have regained such right by its abrogation. We did not own a foot of territory in all Central America and there was never conferred upon the United States by any Government of Central America the right to either establish a blockade in the construction of the canal or to fortify it, so that we received no additional grant under the new treaty that abrogated the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. No power ever existed in the United States to fortify a way across the Isthmus.

The thirty-fifth article of the treaty of 1846 compelled the United States—to guarantee positively and efficaciously to New Granada by the present stipulation the perfect neutrality of the before-mentioned Isthmus, with the view that the free transit from the one to the other sea may not be interrupted or embarrassed in future time while this treaty exists.

As late as February 26, 1903, in the treaty with Panama, and a year after the Spooner Act was passed, that treaty provided that—the canal when constructed and the entrances thereto shall be neutral in perpetuity.

And written into this treaty, section 1 of article 3 of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, declaring that—the canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations, observing these rules on terms of equality so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation—and the canal shall not be blockaded, nor any right of war be exercised, or any act of hostility be committed within it.

The protocol with Nicaragua for the construction of an interoceanic canal, concluded December 1, 1900, by President McKinley, recited this condition, viz, That the provisions of the treaty pending in the Senate December 1, 1900—the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty—should be incorporated into the new treaty with Nicaragua when the course of the canal should be determined. That treaty contained every necessary element of complete neutralization.

The Spooner Act of 1902, giving authority to the President to build the canal, limited the powers of the President as follows:

And he shall also cause to be constructed such safe and commodious harbors at the termini and make such provisions as may be necessary for the safety and protection of the canal and harbor.

This limitation was in the act authorizing the construction of the canal and in the very nature of the surrounding circumstances could not have been intended as creating a strategic point of defense in a national contest. (57th Cong., 1st sess., sec. 3, chap. 1302, 32 Stat. L., p. 482, June 28, 1902.) How can it be assumed by any implication that the Senate of the United States, within six months after it had refused to authorize the fortification of the canal by defeating the McLauren and Culberson amendments by an overwhelming majority in ratifying the second Hay-Pauncefote treaty, now confer that authority in the Spooner Act that provided only for the construction of the canal?

Why should the subject of fortification engage the Senate when a very reasonable doubt existed whether the canal would ever be constructed; the feasibility of the routes was yet undetermined; the plan of construction not fixed? The authority conferred in the Spooner Act was merely to safeguard the approaches and the body of the canal during the construction, and not at that time to erect a national strategic defense against a foreign foe. I come to the discussion of the two grounds arising out of wise public policy. The defense of the canal with simply fortifications at the entrance of it and without the aid of a navy to anticipate the attack is at variance with the history of the defense of fortifications. This theory is also not in harmony with prominent officers of our own Navy, who, speaking through the Navy in its last issue, indorsed the proposition of very vastly increasing the Navy for the purpose of defending the canal. Nor does this theory coincide with the views of former President Roosevelt, who demanded a greatly increased Navy because we were constructing the canal Are we to leave the canal to the mercy of a belligerent foe, without naval protection if me must fortify? Fortification is an invitation to hostilities. What chance would we have for its preservation if it was confronted with a powerful fleet of Dreadnoughts, any one of which would have as great and effective firing capacity as the fort? If the canal is fortified, it must at all times be protected by a fleet of battleships that would meet the enemy in the open sea and repel the attack. It is also said that the cost of fortifications would only be $12,000,000, a trifle more than 2 per cent on the amount invested. This does not take into consideration the vast increase in naval armament, supplies, increased enlistment and equipment of men both in the Army and Navy, and the constant necessary expenditure along the entire length of the canal. This twelve millions accounts simply for the emplacement of the fortification defenses. Let us make a comparison more easily understood. We spend more than 10.3 per cent of our appropriations for the Navy. The fortifications, with the increased Navy—for I shall show before I conclude that this fortification means a two-ocean Navy, with all the collateral expense—on the best of authority, means another one hundred millions. This would increase the percentage of the appropriations for the Navy to almost 20.2 per cent of the appropriations.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations estimates that we spend 72 per cent of our appropriations in "preparing for war and on account of past wars." It is now proposed to increase this amount, so that 80 per cent of our vast volume of expenditures shall go to this one source, leaving less than 20 per cent to administer the Government in all its branches and develop our internal resources.

I come to the question of our right to fortify from another standpoint. The Panama Canal is an object of concern to the diplomacy of all maritime powers. Its legal position, together with that of the Suez Canal, could not well have been defined prior to the conference of all the great powers except those of the United States and Japan in 1888 at Constantinople. This convention developed the principle that will hereafter govern both of these ways from one hemisphere to the other. In fixing these principles the powers did not wholly evolve them out of the new conditions. They applied analogous established principles governing natural narrow waterways between open seas. As a general principle of law, straits connecting free seas are open to the navigation of all States subject to the reasonable jurisdiction of a territorial power. The claim to exclusive jurisdiction of narrow straits because of territorial sovereignty has long since been abandoned. Why? Because of the supreme right of every state to travel the open seas, and that right carries with it that concomitant right of egress and ingress through the narrow channels connecting straits that no individual power of right shall deny. Does that apply to artificial straits? Not to the same extent, because of the right of the territorial power through which it runs to reimburse itself or take tolls, for the purpose of creating a dividend upon its capital investel, and a further right to protect it in its entirety as in investment. But even before the neutralization of the Suez Canal, and while it was used by the nations of Europe indiscriminately, while De Lesseps had the contract right to take its tolls to reimburse himself, and before there was any neutrality sanctioned by the signatory powers, in 1888 Great Britain intimated to the Russian ambassador that any attempt to blockade the canal would be considered by the English Government as a menace to India and an injury to her commerce.

The Russian Government disavowed any purpose to blockade the canal, declaring that it was an international enterprise in which the commerce of the whole world was interested and no belligerent attack should interfere with it. That correspondence established the principle that a work which the "constructive genius of man after many vain efforts at last accomplished in the interest of both hemispheres should not be at the mercy of the destructive genius of any belligerent power" under the pretext of belligerency, even though that power may own it. We have invoked this very principle for our own protection. In 1858, before the marked development of international law along these lines and now generally accepted, President Buchanan in a message to Congress referring to difficulties with certain Nicaragua transportation companies who were interfering with the free use of transporting men and merchandise, said:

It is over these transits that a large proportion of the trade and travel between European and Asiatic continents is destined to pass—all commercial nations have a deep and direct interest that these communications should be made secure from interruption. While the rights of sovereignty ought to be respected, it is the right of other nations to require that this important passage shall not be interrupted by civil war and revolution. Its neutrality and protection for the common use of all nations is their only project—they insist that it must never hereafter be closed by any arbitrary desire of that Government. This is our whole policy, and it can not fail to be acceptable to other nations.

Suppose a natural arm of the sea penetrated through the Isthmus of Panama, that our sovereignty inclosed the territory on both sides, would it be seriously contended that by virtue of that sovereignty alone we could halt the commercial nations of the world in their passage through on their way to the Orient? Or, suppose we should conclude by virtue of our present sovereignty, to close the canal against all commercial competition and force our rivals in trade to detour around the continent of South America, a distance of 12,000 miles, before they could enter the markets of the Far East with us, is there authority for such an arbitrary act in our sovereignty?

If we may fortify we may blockade the canal, for the lesser right is always comprehended in the greater. It is now held by respectable authorities that canals connecting large open seas have been regarded in most respects subject to jurisdiction similar to that of straits. Can it be doubted that if the maritime powers under the treaty providing for neutrality and declaring against a blockade that if they accept the dedication of the canal by use of the same that it is not within the power of this Government to interfere with the peaceful uninterrupted use of the canal?

Passing the question from a legal standpoint, assume that we have the right to fortify—which is not granted, however—is it a wise policy to exercise this right? We have invested in the Canal Zone one-half billion of dollars, confined this immense sum in the smallest possible scope, congested it into a strip of land 10 miles wide and 40 miles long, constructed canal termini, projecting into the two great oceans of the globe the open, free, unrestricted highway of all nations of the world. Flanked on each side of the canal by a feeble State, over whose territory a belligerent nation could march thousands of men without resistance to attack and destroy it, our property in the canal is of a delicate nature. Its use and value could be destroyed by a hundred men in an hour, its locks and dams, into which we have put scores of millions, wrecked, and our route of travel from our eastern to our western coast line destroyed. It will be, when finished, the most strategic war point on either continent and the property invested subject to a greater hazard of complete destruction than it could have been at any other point on the American shores. It is the one vulnerable point that an enemy has more opportunity to reach than the most strategic point that any other Government possesses. It is the one against which the combined and allied forces would immediately pit, because its destruction, its annihilation, would be the severest blow that could be rendered. Its defense would require the immediate investment of every Dreadnought, every battleship, every armored cruiser, every destroyer deployed at each end of the canal to protect it, while the enemy could mass its naval strength at one end or the other for our destruction.

This would effectually strip our coast cities of protection and leave more than 3,000 miles of actual inhabited coast line absolutely without defense, without a navy, and our forces more than 2,000 miles from the seat of government—as far from our home as our possession of Hawaii—the entire transport service engaged in bringing troops to a distant land to defend a property that could be protected by an international treaty of absolute neutrality without the price of a dollar or the loss of a single life. Not only that, our Navy, heretofore consisting of a single fleet, must now be a two-ocean navy, each more complete and better equipped than the one we now have, for fortifications without an advance line of battleships to repel the advancing foe, to contest in the open sea the right of the enemy to advance upon our fortifications without resistance would be an unheard-of folly in national warfare and unwarranted by the experience of nations. Does the alarmist count the cost? The recent publication, The Navy, in a lengthy editorial on the fortification of the canal, commits itself to the proposition of a two-ocean navy and declares that to be the universally "accepted dictum." Speaking, as it assumes, for this department of the Government, it may be interesting to note that it says there are many reasons that make it desirable and expedient to vest the entire direction of the canal and its defense in the Navy alone. This same publication approvingly says, editorially:

The Admiral of the Navy personally is credited with having suggested that the minimum strength of our battle fleet should be 50 capital ships, and it is assumed that he means battleships and battle cruisers, if we are going to the latter type to replace our present armored cruisers. This vital suggestion from a high authority and informed source is warmly applauded and thoroughly indorsed as being a reasonable expression of the naval energy we shall have to call into being or quit the game of playing at being a world power; besides, we must have flotillas of destroyers and submarines, with necessary parent ships, scouts—if that particular type justifies the perpetuation—a proper quota of colliers, ammunition-supply, repair, and hospital ships, tank oilers, which, together with the necessary mine vessels, fleet tenders, and a number of navy yard tugs, will furnish the requisites and imperatively demanded auxiliaries of an efficient and up-to-date force afloat.

To this increased material for the defense of our fortifications we must add an additional enlisted force of men to raise the strength to at least 75,000 on a peace basis, which, if hostilities were actually commenced, would of necessity be very largely augmented. This is the prospect simply as to the initial cost of fortifying the canal. This expense necessary for the increased naval armament and its upkeep, estimated by competent authority to be one hundred millions, is astounding. Must this vast amount and the necessary contingent expenses to follow be taken from the pockets of the people on the mere possibility—not the probability—of a contingent event? I am far within the lines of rational statements when I say that the complete protection of the canal, except by international treaty of neutrality, is impossible by a two-ocean naval force unless it shall have greater strength than the British Navy. This naval power must be reenforced by manned forces and kept constantly in command, for if the theory of fortificationists is correct this war may come "as a thief in the night," without warning; and if it comes we are too far away to reach the scene of action to protect effectually our rights after hostilities begin. If this canal shall be attacked, it will be destroyed, not held as a prize of warlike ambitions, because it would be the most fatal blow that could be struck by an enemy. We are more interested in its preservation than any other power could be, not because we built it and own it, but because it is the gateway of our trade, the pathway of our future commercial greatness, the route that gives us vantage ground over other powers in reaching a market to South America and the Far East. Why imperil it with the destruction of war when our commanding place in the association of sovereign nations could negotiate terms of absolute and perpetual safety?

The American people believe in the eventuality of peace, not in the eventuality of war. From the very earliest conception of the canal it has been a commercial problem and not a problem of constructing a strategic point of defense. The trend of this whole civilization of ours, wrought by a complex case of races, is not to destroy, but to build; to rival in trade all our predecessors in exchange of the productions of our soil and the genius of our mechanism.

The alarmist pushing this propaganda for fortification, that if successful will lead to entangling alliances, seeks to influence the public mind to the conclusion that the purpose has always been to fortify. The idea of fortification is a very new feature in connection with the canal work. The controlling, predominating thought has been to constitute it a highway for trade, without distinction of "flag or country;" to sustain this proposition I call two witnesses to testify:

We want no wars of conquest; we must avoid the temptation of territorial aggression. War should never be entered upon until every agency of peace has failed. Peace is preferable to war in almost every contingency. Arbitration is the true method of settling international or local affairs. (William McKinley.)

So believing, he sent the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty to the Senate in 1900 containing provisions for absolute neutralization in this:

1. The canal should be free and open in times of war as in times of peace, and to vessels of commerce and war of all nations on terms of equality.
2. The canal shall never be blockaded.
3. No fortifications to be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent.

This is the expression of the attitude of this modern apostle of peace on the question of fortification. Does any man assume that President McKinley would have advocated the investment of five hundred millions in the construction of the Panama Canal, with the chief and ultimate purpose of making it a strategic point of defense in the time of war when he could have forever sealed its safety and protection by an international treaty?

I quote from the annual message of President Fillmore, December 2, 1851, referring to the transit across the Isthmus, he said:

In negotiations upon this important subject this Government has had in view one object, and only one; that object has been and is the construction or attainment of a passage from ocean to ocean, the shortest and best for travelers and merchandise and open equally to all the world. It has sought to obtain no territorial acquisition nor any advantage peculiar to itself.

In the very earliest consideration of this question, the Secretary of State to President Adams, in 1826, in arranging for representatives to a Panama congress, said:

That vast project, if it shall ever be accomplished, will be interesting, in greater or less degree, to all parts of the world; if the work should ever be executed so as to admit of the passage of vessels from ocean to ocean, the benefits of it ought not to be exclusively appropriated to any one nation, but should be extended to all parts of the globe upon the payment of reasonable and just tolls.

This House, in 1839, passed a resolution expressive of the uniform purpose of constructing the canal, saying:

For the purpose of ascertaining the practicability of effecting a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by the construction of a canal across the Isthmus and of securing forever, by suitable treaty regulations and stipulations, the free and equal rights of navigating such canal to all nations.

The treaty of 1846 between the United States and New Granada contained this important stipulation:

In order to secure to themselves the tranquil and constant enjoyment of these advantages and for the favors they have accrued, do guarantee, positively and efficaciously, to New Granada, by the present stipulation, the perfect neutrality of the before-mentioned Isthmus, with a view that the free transit from the one to the other sea may not be interrupted or embarrassed at any future time.

Quoting again from Mr. Cass, Secretary of State, in correspondence, representing this Government with Lord Napier, minister of Great Britain, on this important subject used the following language:

While the rights of sovereignty of the local governments must always be respected, other rights have arisen involving interest of great magnitude to the commercial world and demanding its careful attention, and, if need be, its efficient protection. In view of these interests, after having invited capital and enterprise from other countries to aid in the opening of these great highways of nations, under pledges of free transit to all desiring it, it can not be permitted that these governments should exercise over them an arbitrary and unlimited control, and close them or embarrass them without reference to a loss of commerce or to the intercourse of the world. Equally disastrous would it be to leave them at the mercy of every nation which in the time of war might find it advantageous for hostile purposes to take possession of them and either restrain their use or suspend it altogether.

Secretary Blaine, in 1881, calling attention to the treaty of 1846, undoubtedly expressed the opinion of President Garfield when he said:

By the thirty-fifth article of that treaty, in exchange for certain concession made to the United States, we guaranteed positively and efficaciously the perfect neutrality of the Isthmus and of any interoceanic communication that might be constructed upon or over it for the maintenance of free transit from sea to sea.

President Hayes, in 1880, discussing the beneficial effects arising from the construction of the canal, said:

That it would be transforming the Isthmus from a barrier between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans into a gateway and thoroughfare between them for the navies and merchant ships of the world, and should receive the approval of this Government as being compatible with the discharge of these obligations on our part and consistent with our interests as the principal commercial power of the Western Hemisphere.

What, then, do they mean by neutrality, so guaranteed by the United States? I quote the concise statement made by President Roosevelt in his messsage of January 4, 1904:

Under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty it was explicitly provided that the United States should control, police, and protect the canal which was to be built, keeping it open for the transit of all nations on equal terms. The United States thus assumed the position of the guarantor of the canal and of its peaceful use by all the world. The guaranty included, as a matter of course, the building of the canal.

The enterprise was recognized as responding to an international need, and it would be the veriest travesty on right and position to treat the government in possession of the Isthmus as having the right, in the language of Mr. Cass, to close the gates of intercourse on this great highway of the world and justify the act by the pretension that these avenues of trade and travel belong to them, and that they choose to shut them.

I make these references, and they could be greatly multiplied, for the purpose of showing that the course of the present régime to fortify is an absolute departure from the unselfish and patriotic purposes of the promoters of the canal from its very earliest inception. It has been the ambition of the people of this continent to make it the greatest highway of trade on the globe and not a prize of war—to dedicate it to American civilization when constructed, the greatest adjunct for its perpetuity and its all-embracing purpose. Not a single treaty negotiated by this Government with any other, not a protocol concluded with reference to the canal, was ever made that did not provide for unconditional neutrality.

It has been openly stated by proponents of fortifications that we can not rely upon treaty stipulations of neutrality; that a strong temptation even by a signatory power to possess strategic and important points in times of hostilities in derogation of their high contracts would not be resisted. This declaration is not in accord with either the law or history. Treaties entered into in conformity with vested authority are binding upon all the signatory powers and continue in force, even though there is a change of sovereignty, as was illustrated in the treaty with New Granada. The inviolability of these treaties, even when not especially guaranteed, is the first law of nations. They are always regarded as the most solemn obligations of a civil State.

I quote Vattel, volume 2, chapter 20:

The faith of treaties, that firm and sincere resolution, that invariable constancy in fulfilling our engagements of which we make profession in a treaty, is therefore to be held sacred and inviolate between all nations of the earth whose safety and repose it secures, and if mankind be not willfully deficient in their duty to themselves infamy must ever be the portion of him who violates his faith.

In 1817 we entered into a treaty with Great Britain to neutralize the Great Northern Lakes, so that not only warships would be unnecessary, but that fortifications on their shores would be unnecessary. Not for a single moment in nearly a century has either the spirit or the letter of that compact been violated—a most splendid monument to the integrity of the greatest maritime and commercial power of the world. Great cities upon the banks of those inland seas are resting securely in the faith pledged in that contract between the now two great nations of the world. That treaty of neutrality includes more than 2,000 miles of coast line between Canada and the United States. This uninterrupted peace has bred a warm mutual friendship, kindly cooperation, destroyed racial prejudice, and started us upon a course that will eventually take down the commercial wall between us, and for the purpose of our mutual advancement and prosperity make of us one people. [Applause.]

The Suez Canal, neutralized in 1888 by the six great powers of Europe, in which, however, we did not participate, but whose binding force we now acknowledge, has remained the open door of eastern Europe to the Orient and has never been closed for an hour. Not a man or a vessel in a quarter of a century has been necessary to preserve absolute neutrality and the complete observance of all the provisions of the treaty. We meet the charge that these great nations can not be trusted to respect their solemn compacts with all the force of history and unimpeached integrity of the high contracting powers. The concert of Europe, involving the six great nations, that act in unison on all questions touching their continental interest, have never violated a conventional agreement.

The opening of the canal will induct into that compact not alone this Republic, but likewise the Government of Japan, constituting a concert of world powers. Swept into the arena of commercial and humanitarian affairs of international importance in the solution of whose complex questions our voice will be heard and heeded, the canal will bring the commercial world face to face with new international conditions, and with the same policy she has marked her imperishable history—a policy of peace—she will solve the problems that confront us.

There are but two great powers with whom there is even the possibility of war—Japan and England—and both are friendly. The Japan war cry is due again. Let the alarmist who wants to fortify the canal against the Japanese contain himself. Give the Japanese credit for having some political and business sense. Is there insanity enough in any Member of this House to assert that Japan would ever pass through the canal to engage us in battle on our eastern seaboard; that she would even attempt to bombard the canal from our western coast, knowing, as she must, that her complete destruction was imminent in that event? As well suppose that she would have abandoned Port Arthur and Manchuria at her very door and crossed the Indian Ocean and Red Sea, threaded her way through the Isthmus of Suez into the Mediterranean, through the Bosphorus into the Black Sea, and engaged Russia at Odessa or Sebastopol, as to expect that power to cross 10,000 miles of open sea to contest her rights or to redress a fancied wrong with one of the strongest nations. [Applause.] Japan has eight coaling and supply stations, but not one on this hemisphere. Standing fifth in sea strength, she will continue to remain in that position even when all the war vessels are completed that are now ordered. The tonnage of our warships is 824,000 tons; that of Japan 493,000 tons. She will have two Dreadnoughts to our 10 when builded and one battleship to our 25. When her present authorized armament shall have been completed she will have made a smaller percentage of tonnage gain than any one of the six great powers of Europe except Austria. When Japan attacks the United States she will invest a new Manchuria, a new Port Arthur, and compel us to maintain the honor, dignity, and rights of this Government 10,000 miles from home. She will not do so, because she would not strike a fatal blow at her commerce, so closely allied with our trade in preference to that of any European power, and because politically she can claim the friendship of the Republic that she has always courted.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will my colleague yield again——

Mr. CLINE. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman does not take kindly to the doctrine or the argument which has been advanced here that we will have a war with Japan within the next 10 months?

Mr. CLINE. No; I do not. I have passed over a complete solution of that question, I think.

Why should the British Empire involve herself in war with us when war and its preparedness has crushed her to the earth with debt? Why fortify the canal to escape an attack by England, that Government which, through the victory of Nelson, became the maritime mistress of the seas in trade; that by her commerce has colonized the globe; that by her two and a half billions of export trade outstripped her two greatest rivals, whose future supremacy lies in the Eastern Hemisphere through our new gateway between the oceans. The markets of South America, English India, South Africa, and Australia wait for American and European merchantmen to cast an anchor in their friendly harbor. We are England's only dangerous rival for the trade of the world. Her great possessions in every zone, in every sea, on every shore demand the perfection of diplomacy to keep her two and one-half billions of foreign trade.

I invite your attention to another world-wide movement for peace—The Hague International Conference. This body, now recognized as an international parliament by the consent of nearly all the powers to establish such rules of conduct in war and such courts and tribunals to settle differences between nations, has received the official sanction of well-nigh every state, and in a very large majority of instances the acts of this body are ratified and given the force of international law by the powers that were represented in the conference. In all history no more efficient organization has ever been formed. At the last conference, held in 1907, the United States was well represented, our delegation being headed by Ambassador Choate. I quote from the proceedings. Appendix. International declaration concerning the laws and customs of war:

ART. 15. Fortified places alone are liable to be seized. Towns, agglomerations of houses or villages, which are not open, or undefended, can not be attacked or bombarded.

On April 17, 1908, the Senate of the United States, acting under the constitutional authority before quoted, in executive session advised and consented to the ratification of this section, giving it the same binding force as the ratification of a treaty would have. As the canal now exists there can be no bombardment, no attack. What we are asked to do is to take away from the people the pledge of the 44 powers represented in that conference, that the canal in its unfortified condition is absolutely safe from bombardment and attack. If we fortify the canal, we relieve these nations from this engagement and from the protection they offer. To expose the canal to invited hazards by fortification is a most extraordinary request. If such wise and timely international compact or declarations are not to be kept in good faith, why indulge ourselves in the farce of making them? Why do the meaningless act?

With the evolution of trade comes the evolution of peace. This is the condition toward which the whole world tends. Every act of intelligent manhood speaks for peace and all those blessings that peace possesses. Let the concert of nations wipe out national jealousies and military suspicions by an international agreement of complete neutrality and the end is reached. I have faith in the ultimate triumph of our increasing purpose to solve all difficulties by such mutuality. The Republic whose policy, inaugurated by its first President and consistently and faithfully followed by all of his illustrious successors, will not fail. A Republic that never shed a drop of blood in territorial conquest nor drew its sword in alliance with one that did, will ultimately become so powerful in its own personality that wars will cease. Wanton waste, repression of individual pursuits, destruction of national unity and power are the results of war. Peace begets industry, conserves wealth, and makes for national happiness. The potentiality of our national life and the self-reliant spirit of our citizenship urges us to peace. Because we are courageous and heroic, with a lofty patriotism, we have resisted territorial aggression for more than a century, when it would have been so easy to have swept under our flag two-thirds of this hemisphere. We made the States of this continent our friends and allies, not with the sword but by that equity and justice with which we encircled and protected them. We are not for war. Our great cities, dotting 3,000 miles of coast line and on Lake and Gulf, shall not become smoldering heaps from the bombardment of a foreign or domestic foe. Our great States, springing into existence by the enchantment of soil and stream, shall not again be blackened and scourged by war. May the flag we revere and love never lead a conquering host to a field of carnage, but turn it to the haunts of the Prince of Peace. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill this year carries a total of $4,056,372.41. This is a decrease of $59,709 from the amount carried last year. It should be stated, however, that this decrease is apparent rather than real. For the last year the bill carried an appropriation of $250,000, which is the annual amount we are bound to pay to the order of the Republic of Panama for our concessions in connection with the Canal Zone. It seems wise that all appropriations in connection with the construction of the canal should emanate from one committee, and for this reason the bill this year does not include that item. The bill shows a slight increase over the amount carried last year for the support of our foreign service. There is only one large item, and that is for $50,000 for additional clerk hire in our consulates. The purpose of this increase is to enable the Department of State to carry out the policy which is approved by Congress and by the American people of Americanizing these consulates. In the days gone by a very large number of our consular clerks were foreigners, and to-day quite a proportion of the clerks in our consulates where the salary is $800 or less are foreigners.

In this connection I want to call the attention of the committee to an interesting fact indicating the care and wisdom with which this service is being administered by the State Department.

The total gross cost of our Consular Service for 1910 was $1,928,561.77, but the total amount of consular fees covered into the Treasury during the same time was $1,762,132.72. So the net expense of the Consular Service for the fiscal year 1910 was $166,428.05. The net expense of the service for the fiscal year 1909, the preceding year, was $249,030.92, and for the fiscal year 1908, $296,356.61.

From these figures it appears that the net expense of the service for the year 1910 was $129,228.56 less than it was in 1908, and $82,612.87 less than it was in 1909. This is due to the new system which has been inaugurated by which the fee system in connection with the compensation of our consuls has been entirely abolished. Our consuls are required to keep a very careful and accurate statement of all fees received, and these fees are paid over into the Treasury of the United States, with the result, as I said before, that for the fiscal year ending the 30th of last June our Consular Service cost us less than $167,000, and more than $80,000 less than the year before, and nearly $130,000 less than two years ago. If this method keeps on, although we are adding each year a reasonable sum to this necessary fund for Americanizing the clerks of the consulates, the time is near at hand when this very important branch of the public service will cost less than $100,000.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. When did this new system begin in its operation?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It started about five years ago, I think, when we passed the bill reorganizing the Consular Service. To be exact, that law was enacted in the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Approximately, what was the net cost of the Consular Service at that time, just before the new system went into effect?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I have not the figures here, but it was very nearly the amount of the gross cost to-day.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I see.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We have increased the salaries of some of the consuls and we have increased the salaries of some of the clerks, but there is no very great difference between the gross cost of the service to-day and the gross cost of the service before this change went into effect.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman would consider, then, that probably as a result of the new system a saving of at least a million dollars a year has been thus far effected?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Undoubtedly so. You can understand how that was. Our consul in London was given a fair salary and all the fees he could collect, and it was generally understood the annual income from those fees amounted to $40,000, at least.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In the personnel of the service, and in the satisfaction with the men engaged in the service, has there been any loss to the Government under the new system?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I think, on the contrary, that there has been a steady improvement in the personnel of the service. You can see how reasonable this statement is. We now have these different classes of consular officers: First, consular clerks; second, consular assistants; and, finally, consuls. The consuls are divided into nine classes, based upon the importance of the position and the salary carried. The salaries of these different classes vary from $2,000 to $12,000 per year. Before one is appointed to a consulship he is required to pass a rigid examination. Such of the successful candidates as receive appointments are appointed to fill vacancies occurring in the lower classes of consulships. They are then in line of promotion through all the various classes to class 1, which affords positions carrying $12,000 per year. The candidate must be able to use one language in addition to his own. Next below the consuls come the consular assistants. These are really high-grade clerks. The candidates for these positions are required to pass the same rigid examinations as are required of candidates for consulships. The successful candidate is given a position in some one of the more important consulates, like London, Paris, or Berlin. His salary at the start is $1,000, and he is given an increase of $100 a year until his salary reaches $1,800. In the meantime, if he shows himself qualified and efficient, he may be appointed without further examination to a consulship in one of the lower classes.

Then he has before him a prospect of promotion from grade to grade and from rank to rank in the consular classes until he reaches the highest, with a $12,000 salary. So that to-day, in consequence of this system, we are getting into the service young men of a higher grade and of better education and better ability than we were able to get under the old system, where a new consul was given a position of $2,000 or $3,000 or $4,000, with the understanding that it was to be held only for a short time, and probably not longer than the then existing administration.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In practice has it not resulted in a longer tenure of service and in greater stability in the personnel?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; very much more so.

Mr. KAHN. The new system practically insures to a man an attractive career?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; when he is fit for it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. A gentleman was appointed in the Consular Service from one of the Dakotas, Mr. Gabriel Bie Ravndal, a very superior officer, who was in the Consular Service at Beirut, and recently there was a vacancy in the position of consul general at Constantinople on the death of Mr. Ozmun, and instead of a new man's being sent from the United States to fill that place, Mr. Ravndal, who was familiar with the language and customs and manners of the country, was made consul general at Constantinople, and another gentleman was brought up to fill the vacancy at Beirut. I know of another case, where a gentleman was consul at Bagdad, and the same thing happened to him. Since June, 1906, there has been only one appointment in the Consular Service which has not been in strict accordance with this merit rule.

Mr. AUSTIN. What exception was that, may I ask?

Mr. BENNET of New York. That of Mr. Crowninshield, who was appointed consul at Naples in accordance with a promise made some time before the new system went into operation.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Of course I am quite familiar with the cases the gentleman refers to, but I may say that we have in the consular service a gentleman from our State, Mr. Edwin Young, who has had quite a career, and it was for the purpose of bringing the matter before the committee and showing the opportunity afforded for advancement to young men in this service by the new system that I asked the gentleman my question.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman from Vermont spoke a moment ago about the allowance for clerk hire in the consular service. I would like to ask him if the committee has carried into this bill the full amount of the estimates submitted by the State Department for clerical allowance in the consulates?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; we have.

Then there is one other class of consuls who may be called consular inspectors. These are five in number. Before the new régime went into effect it was too often the fact that our consuls were sent abroad to remote positions, where the salary was small, and to all intents and purposes they became lost to the Government. There was no close connection between them and the State Department. The State Department had no method of keeping in touch with them or keeping itself informed as to how they were succeeding. Now we have the world divided into five districts, and each of these consular inspectors is given a district, and he is expected to make frequent inspections and to keep the department informed as to consular conditions in his district. And this has brought about a much higher grade of efficiency among our consulships than before that time existed. I do not say that this is true of all our consulships, but it is true of many of them.

In this connection I want to call attention very briefly to the fact that there is a bill now pending before the House for the purpose of further increasing the efficiency of this service. It is a bill which goes just as far as the Constitution will permit us to go toward enacting into law the executive orders which have done so much toward placing this service under the merit system. That measure was unanimously reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I hope to see favorable action taken upon it before this Congress adjourns.

Then there is another bill pending which I hope will receive favorable action before Congress adjourns, which modifies somewhat the classification of the consulships which was effected by the legislation had in the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

Mr. MANN. Are the provisions of that bill carried in this bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. I mean, is this bill made on the theory of that one?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Not at all. That bill has passed the Senate with eight changes—changes which I do not approve. The bill was reported out from our Committee on Foreign Affairs unanimously.

Mr. MANN. The House bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The House bill. The House bill is now on the calendar, and I hope to see it passed. Of course, when we come to say in which class Bagdad should be, for instance, we must rely very largely upon the facts reported to the State Department by this inspecting consul. Bagdad is one of the changes that the Senate made in the bill. We increased the salary of the consul at Bagdad. The Senate cut out the increase. Perhaps the sound of the name had something to do with this. But Bagdad is one of the worst places to which we could send a man to act as our consul. The thermometer ranges around 120 all through the summer, and it goes down to zero in wintertime.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It strikes a good average.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It is an expensive place for the consul to live, and in my judgment the change made in the Senate was not well founded.

I have caused to be sent to every Member of the House a copy of this bill, together with a copy of the letter from the State Department transmitting it, showing just what changes are proposed and the reason for them; and I want to say to the committee that I sincerely hope every Member of the House will examine the bill and this letter and be prepared to vote upon it in case we succeed in getting consideration for the bill. It is an important measure. It is one that was prepared with great care. Of course it had to be prepared very largely by the State Department. Your chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs cooperated somewhat, but it was prepared principally by the State Department after very careful consideration of all the returns and all the reports from these inspectors and all the information that could be had from other sources. Your committee considered the bill very carefully and are unanimously of the opinion that the bill should pass. Of course it would require considerable time to take up each item of that bill and go through in detail the reasons for the changes, but when the bill comes up for consideration we will be prepared to answer any questions that any Member of the House desires to ask.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further general debate, the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Chargés d'affaires ad interim, $50,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee the necessity for the increase of this item. I notice it is increased about 20 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That is the amount that is found necessary for the payment of the salaries of the chargés d'affaires ad interim, where the minister is absent. It is fixed by law. No more can be used than the law permits, and this is the estimate of the department for the ensuing year. We felt, upon careful investigation, that it was likely to be all needed.

Mr. MACON. There will be more absentees, perhaps, this year than last.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We have been rather niggardly in allowing for this, and I can assure the gentleman from Arkansas that I do not believe there is the least danger of any extravagance in connection with this very moderate increase. It will be noticed that we have increased but slightly the various sums carried by the last bill.

Mr. MACON. But this is a 20 per cent increase.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; it is one of the largest increases, and yet the amount itself is not large.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Most of the salaries, perhaps all the salaries, of ambassadors and ministers and consuls are fixed by statute?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Absolutely.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This bill appropriates a sufficient sum of money to meet the salaries provided by law?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That is exactly correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

Japanese secretary of embassy to Japan, $3,600.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. Why has the secretary of embassy to Japan a higher salary than the secretary at Austria-Hungary or Great Britain or France?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It is because he is a man who speaks Japanese. That accounts for it. We changed the language a little; he is now known as the Japanese secretary of the embassy. That is because we desired to follow the practice there.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The reason he has $600 above the other corresponding secretaries is owing to the fact that he has to speak the Japanese language?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That is the fact.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CURRIER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills and joint resolution of the following titles,

S. 574. An act to authorize J. W. Vance, L. L. Allen, C. F. Helwig, and H. V. Worley, of Pierce City, Mo.; A. B. Durnil, D. H. Kemp, Sig Soloman, J. J. Davis, S. A. Chappell, and W. M. West, of Monett, Mo.; M. L. Coleman, M. T. Davis, Jared R. Woodfill, jr., J. H. Jarrett, and William H. Standish, of Aurora, Lawrence County, Mo.; and L. S. Meyer, F. S. Heffernan, Robert A. Moore, William H. Johnson, J. P. McCammon, M. W. Colbaugh, and W. H. Schreiber, of Springfield, Greene County, Mo., to construct a dam across the James River, in Stone County, Mo., and to divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the said river again to create electric power.

S. 8457. An act to restore to the public domain certain lands withdrawn for reservoir purposes in Millard County, Utah;

S. 9443. An act providing for the naturalization of the wife and minor children of insane aliens making homestead entries under the land laws of the United States;

S. 10011. An act for establishing a light and fog-signal station on the San Pedro Breakwater, Cal.;

S. 10015. An act for rebuilding and improving the present light and fog signal at Lincoln Rock, Alaska, or for building another light and fog-signal station upon a different site near by;

S. 10596. An act to authorize the Rainy River Improvement Co. to construct a dam across the outlet of Namakan Lake at Kettle Falls, in St. Louis County, Minn.; and

S. J. Res. 132. Joint resolution authorizing the delivering to the commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans of one or two dismounted bronze cannon.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10177) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Establishment, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bill of the following title:

S. 10318. An act authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant further extensions of time within which to make proof on desert-land entries, with an amendment, page 1, line 2, strike out "the" where it occurs the first time and insert "any."

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Quarters for the student interpreters at the embassy to Japan: For rent of quarters for the student interpreters attached to the embassy at Tokyo, Japan, $600.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Why should we leave off the language carried in the last bill, "or so much thereof as is absolutely necessary?"

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Because it is absolutely superfluous. We tried to make this bill as concise as possible. I found that phrase used in connection with some paragraphs and not with others. There is no sense in it. They can use only what is necessary, anyway.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I wanted to know if it had any significance in leaving it out all through the bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I cut it out because it was wholly unnecessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, foreign missions: To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreters, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, $375,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman explain what proportion of the $275,000 goes to pay rent, as specified in the paragraph?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I have not the figures here and have not that information at hand. I will say to the gentleman, however, that the report of the department as to the expenditure of this fund last year is in the possession of each Member of the House, and it can be readily ascertained as well as every other fact in connection with the use of this contingent fund. I think about one-half of it went for rent.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman know whether the rent is paid only for chancelleries or for dwelling quarters?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. My understanding is that it is only for the chancelleries and no rent for dwelling quarters.

Mr. HARRISON. Then does the gentleman expect that an appropriation will be asked for this year to construct the embassy and legation buildings authorized to be built?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I hope so.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, inasmuch as these new buildings will contain not only the dwelling houses but the chancelleries, it is to be expected that the amount of contingent expenses will be reduced eventually by one-half of this sum, and therefore that much will be taken out of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman is absolutely right.

The Clerk read as follows:

International (Water) Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico: To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884 and 1889 and 1905, $50,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman of the committee explain to us whether this paragraph is inserted by reason of the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Mexico?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Absolutely so.

Mr. HARRISON. Does this refer to the same work which is sometimes described as eliminating the bancos of the Rio Grande?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. How many years has it been going on?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I can not tell exactly. I have not the date of that, but quite a number of years.

Mr. HARRISON. How many years is it expected to continue?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Unless some new method of fixing the boundary line between the two countries is agreed upon it will go on just as long as water runs in the Rio Grande.

Mr. HARRISON. Are not the bancos of the river constantly shifting, so that this is likely to be indefinite?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It is likely to be a permanent, indefinite appropriation.

Mr. HARRISON. Has this any relation to the agreement arrived at between the Government of Mexico and our Government to protect the rights of Mexicans from diverting the water supply of the Rio Grande by our people?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do not understand that it has. This is simply the commission that has to do with the boundary line between the two countries.

Mr. HARRISON. And the gentleman has no hope that it will ever come to an end?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Well, I was talking with the special ambassador from Mexico, who visited this country recently, upon this subject. He raised the query whether it would not be better for the two nations to agree that the center line of the Rio Grande should be the dividing line, no matter where that line chances to be from day to day.

Mr. HARRISON. No matter whether it shifts or not?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Whether it shifts or not. Of course, that would result, as it frequently does now for that matter, in an American waking up in the morning and finding himself a Mexican, and vice versa. Now, as the gentleman from New York understands, when one of those sudden changes is made, this commission gets together and determines where the line shall be with reference to the particular banco. Mexicans as well as Americans who have studied the vexatious problem have asserted that the present method is the only feasible one.

Mr. HARRISON. How do they spend this $50,000 a year?

Mr. MANN. And why is it necessary to increase it by $15,000 this year over what it was last year?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We asked the chairman of the commission, Gen. Anson Mills, about that last year. He said that he saw no particular reason for believing that this appropriation would vary very much from year to year. This year he stated that, first, because of several unexpected bancos, their work would be increased during the next year; secondly, they have been called upon to do some measuring of the water of the Rio Grande for our Government, which increased the expense; and then, thirdly, this commission, together with the Mexican commission, together with an umpire, has been assigned the work under the treaty of arbitrating the title to what is known as the Chamizal tract, and that this would increase somewhat the expense of the commission proper.

Mr. HARRISON. There is another appropriation for that in this same bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; there is an appropriation for the arbitration, but the chairman said that in the preliminary work the commission itself would be put to some expense.

Mr. HARRISON. What proportion of this $50,000 would go in salary and what proportion in engineering work?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It nearly all, practically all, goes for engineering work.

Mr. HARRISON. How many persons are employed on a salary?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I think the employees are as a rule paid by the month. The number varies from time to time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The chairman of the Commission indicated that a larger portion of this money goes for the employment of engineers.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How many does he employ?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Well, we have a statement here.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He employs different numbers at different times.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the average a year?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Sometimes two or three and sometimes—well, only a few on a permanent salary.

Mr. COX of Indiana. On the appropriation last year of $35,000, what would it be?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Just a word; I will read. This question was asked the chairman of the commission:

What salaries do you pay, General? What rate of salaries do you generally pay your employees?

Gen. MILLS. We pay the consulting engineer, Mr. Follett, $400, and we pay his assistants from—I think the highest is $200, down to $125.

Mr. GARNER. Per month?

Gen. MILLS. Per month; yes.

So these engineers get from $125 to $400 per month.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman answer this question, if he can? What amount of money did Mexico appropriate for this purpose last year?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I am unable to say. I have no figures here on that.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If the gentleman will permit me, Mexico spent just the same amount as we did.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Did Mexico appropriate last year $35,000 for this purpose?

Mr. BENNET of New York. If that appropriation was made by us. By the provision Mexico pays half.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is it a treaty agreement?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is a treaty agreement, and if the chairman will permit me, one of the members of the committee who is from that section of the country has looked into this matter with a great deal of care with an idea of seeing how this money was going and whether it was being properly expended, and he came to the absolute conclusion—this is Mr. GARNER of Texas, who is not extravagant in his ideas—that this entire sum is necessary.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then both Governments have to pay the same amount of money?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield to me, I understood the gentleman from Vermont to state during the past year, with an appropriation of $35,000, some of the fund was used for work in connection with the determination of the title to the Chamizal tract.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; I did not mean that. I said that the chairman of the commission stated that some of this $50,000, for which they are asking for next year, would be used by the commission in preliminary work preparatory to the sitting of the arbitration board for the hearing of the questions involved in the problem of the Chamizal tract.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, under the provision, as carried on page 19 for the expenses with reference to the Chamizal tract, there is an appropriation of $50,000 which is to be immediately available and to continue available. Wherein is the necessity then to call upon this fund for any such purpose, and wherein is the need of increasing the present item from $35,000 to $50,000?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That very question was put to the chairman of the commission, Gen. Mills, by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and this is what he said:

Gen. MILLS. I can explain that matter, giving two or three reasons for the unexpected larger appropriation than was asked last year. In the first place, the Department of State has organized a larger commission to settle the Chamizal case, which you probably understand something about. There is to be a third member added to the commission for the consideration of that case only, and that will entail some additional expense on the Boundary Commission proper.

The CHAIRMAN. That is to say, this arbitration treaty provides for the consideration of the matter by your commission, increased by an additional member from each nation; is that it?

Gen. MILLS. No; an additional member from Canada.

The CHAIRMAN. An umpire?

Gen. MILLS. Yes; an umpire.

The CHAIRMAN. An umpire from Canada?

Gen. MILLS. Yes; and that will entail some additional expense. We do not know what it may be.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, we provide for that in the other item.

Gen. MILLS. You provide for it so far as the salary and general expenses of this new commissioner are concerned, but I have already been called on for a good many maps and other matter that necessitates a good deal of work on the part of my own and the Mexican engineers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to how many comprise this commission, and what are their salaries?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. There is one American commissioner and one Mexican commissioner.

Mr. STAFFORD. What salary do they receive?

Mr. COX of Indiana. We do not pay the Mexican, do we?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We do not.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What salary do they receive?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I think Gen. Mills is on the retired list now. I do not think he draws any salary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think the item will be reduced next year to $35,000?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I think so. The committee was reluctant to raise it, but we thought that Gen. Mills made out a good case.

The Clerk read as follows:

International Prison Commission: For subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission, and the expenses of a commissioner, including preparation of reports, $2,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] has served on the Committee on Foreign Affairs and he is undoubtedly familiar with the purpose of this item. I think it is unfortunate for him to raise the point of order. It is not a new matter. It has been carried since 1894. I believe that this International Prison Commission is doing a grand and good work, and I believe this great Nation of ours should be a party to it. This is only a small item, and I sincerely hope that the gentleman from New York will recall the excellent meeting we had in Washington last fall when this whole subject was under consideration. Perhaps some of the members of the committee may have been present at that time.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Who is our commissioner?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I can not give the name of our present commissioner.

Mr. MANN. The commissioner recently, I think, is Dr. Henderson, of the University of Chicago. It used to be somebody in New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] insist on his point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Chair wish to hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has already been conceded, and——

Mr. HARRISON. I will be very glad to be given an opportunity of arguing the point of order, inasmuch as the remarks of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] were directed to the merits of the case and not to the point of order.

My objection lies not in any respect to the merits of the appropriation for the International Prison Commission, but, as I stated in a previous debate upon this subject in the House, my objection lies to the method of the Department of State in negotiating agreements or conventions with foreign countries, which agreements or conventions are not subsequently ratified by the Senate of the United States, so that they do not attain the dignity of law. There is, therefore, no check upon the Department of State in calling upon us for appropriations for international bureaus or commissions. The proper method, in my opinion, would be either to present a joint resolution here in the House and have the International Prison Commission established by law, or else to submit to the Senate of the United States the convention under which the different nations are carrying on their International Prison Commission and have that convention ratified by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to inquire if there was such an agreement offered to the Senate and they failed to ratify it.

Mr. HARRISON. No agreement has ever been submitted to the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Who made this agreement?

Mr. HARRISON. The agreement was entered into by the Secretary of State with the premiers or secretaries of state of various foreign countries.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Without any authority of Congress?

Mr. HARRISON. Without any authority of Congress. That is the basis of my objection to this and similar appropriations. The Department of State should come into this House and get authority for entering into these agreements, or else have these agreements submitted to the Senate for ratification, so that they may attain the dignity of law.

Now, in this bill there are some 18 international bureaus or commissions, for which there is appropriated a total of more than $158,000. Most of these international bureaus or commissions have become a law by either one of the two methods which I have suggested, but some of them have not; and I suggest, with all due deference to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] and others of his committee interested in these appropriations, that they are not authorized by existing law, and the Chair must rule them out of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to agree entirely with the gentleman from New York on the general proposition; but does he not think it might be considered a little ungracious—I do not mean ungracious on his part—to strike this out when we have just recently had this International Prison Congress here—when we had it here on our invitation only last year?

Mr. HARRISON. I think it is my duty as a Member of the House to point out where appropriations are not authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. I am not referring to ungraciousness on the part of the gentleman from New York at all; but would it not seem ungracious on the part of our Government in the first year after we had entertained the International Prison Congress to strike out this appropriation?

Mr. HARRISON. The ungraciousness, if there be any, extends further back than the proceedings here to-day.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman; but does he not think that it would be ungracious on the part of our Government to withhold the appropriation now, under the circumstances?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not believe in all this policy of mystery and halo and hands off with respect to the affairs of the State Department. The State Department should be subject to the will of Congress just the same as any other department of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Just one word in reply to what the gentleman has said. Of course, upon the general proposition the gentleman from New York is perfectly right, but it is not best to rush into a treaty over some of these matters until they have grown to the right proportions.

Now, further on in the bill there will be found an item carrying an appropriation for an organization for investigating deep-sea fisheries. The Government had nothing to do with the organization of that bureau. It was organized, and it seems to some of us that that organization is doing a great work, and it seems to us that we should be a party to that work, and if it grows to the right proportions we will have a general international treaty. But in these international matters it is a good deal of work for the United States to get a general treaty entered into. When the International Institute of Agriculture was organized, our American representative in that body, Mr. Lubin, succeeded in negotiating a general treaty. We ratified it.

Now, we have on the American Continent the International Scientific Congress. It is a new organization. It is doing a great work. A congress was held down in South America within two years, and now they want to come here. We are not a party to the organization. The institution has not yet reached the proportions which would justify any international treaty.

There is no desire and no intent and no purpose on the part of the State Department to conduct its affairs respecting these concerns and these organizations in the way that the gentleman from New York would seem to indicate. But who is going to take the initiative for a general international treaty?

Mr. HARRISON. I would suggest to the gentleman that if those matters and similar matters have not reached the stage where they could properly be treated as a treaty or convention by the Senate, a course similar to that adopted by the friends of the International Geodetic Association for the Measurement of the Earth could be pursued, in which case a joint resolution was adopted, February 5, 1889, or in the case of the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, where a joint resolution established the law upon which as a basis the appropriation might be made.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do not want to appear offensive to the gentleman from New York, because I know his motives are always of the highest, but in a case of this kind, which is rather an important matter, it seems to me to be rather a reflection on the Committee on Foreign Affairs to have this provision stricken out here on a point of order, only to have it inserted again in the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. How much is the amount involved?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Two thousand dollars, and there are two or three other similar cases.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe in making conventions or treaties without authority, yet I can see that there may be some advantage in not having a treaty or convention which binds us to make an appropriation, so that when the question is raised as to whether we ought to make the appropriation it will be urged, "Oh, we are bound by the treaty or the convention."

There are cases where it is much better, it seems to me, if we wish to make a contribution and do the work, to make that contribution and do the work from year to year without any binding obligation on our part, so that if at any time we choose to stop, as the gentleman may choose to have us stop now, we can do so. There are some provisions in this bill where we make appropriations in conformity with existing treaties that ought to be abolished because there is no excuse for them, yet we find ourselves bound to make the contribution by reason of a treaty or a convention and we do not feel authorized to quit.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Have we not the right to abrogate a treaty?

Mr. MANN. We have the right, but that is quite a different proposition.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. If we are making useless appropriations under any treaty, ought we not to abrogate that treaty and get rid of it?

Mr. MANN. Wherever there is an obligation carried by a treaty, the appropriation is made as a matter of course and without much, if any, investigation. They say, "There is the treaty, and we ought to make the appropriation."

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman on that; but if it is a useless expenditure, it seems to me that we might abrogate the treaty.

Mr. MANN. We do not investigate far enough to see whether it can well be abolished or not.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. We have had a very good Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. MANN. There is no reflection at all on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is not the fault of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is their duty ordinarily to bring in a bill providing for an appropriation, if it is required by a treaty. I suppose they would be criticized if they did not.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Government of the United States to pay, through the American embassy at Berlin, its quota as an adhering member of the International Geodetic Association for the Measurement of the Earth, $1,500.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee about how long it is thought it will take this association to measure the earth? They draw $1,500 a year.

Mr. MANN. It will take a long time to reach the North Pole. [Laughter.]

Mr. MACON. Twenty-three years at least.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We had before us a year ago several persons representing this work, and I can assure the gentleman from Arkansas that it is a very important scientific work in which this association is engaged. It doubtless will be some years before the work is completed.

Mr. MACON. How long have we been contributing to it?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We have been contributing to it since February 15, 1889.

Mr. MACON. Twenty-two years. One thousand five hundred dollars each year?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman know how far the work has progressed, and how much of the earth has been measured up to this time?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; I can not tell. It is impossible to tell. It is a progressive work. They are making corrections all the time.

Mr. MACON. Does not the gentleman think they ought to report to somebody?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; and their reports are accessible. I will send the gentleman a report on the subject.

Mr. MACON. Showing how much they have measured up to this time?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; I will send their reports to him. They make good reading, instructive reading, and I assure him that if he will go through one of these reports carefully he will appreciate what I say to him now—that this is a very important scientific work, in which this great Government of ours is a party. Of course, when we read the title, the International Geodetic Association for the Measurement of the Earth, the committee all laughed, but after we had the gentlemen before us who were engaged in the work we became convinced of the importance of it.

Mr. MACON. Seriously, I think that if we are to contribute $1,500 a year to this matter, as we have done for 22 years, we ought to know something about how much of the earth has been measured.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I will see that the gentleman has that information promptly.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The gentleman from Arkansas ought to promise to read it.

Mr. MACON. I think that those charged with the duty of measuring the earth ought to make some estimate as to how long it will take to complete it so that Congress may know about the expense and can determine whether it wants to continue the work.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We will endeavor to give the gentleman the information.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pan American Union: Pan American Union, $75,000: Provided, That any moneys received from the other American Republics for the support of the union shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit, in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the Secretary of State for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the union: And provided further, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print an edition of the Monthly Bulletin, not to exceed 5,000 copies per month, for distribution by the union every month.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The proviso was not in the bill when it passed the House last year, but was inserted, I understand, by the Senate. Is it in the nature of an additional appropriation? Was not this work originally done at the expense of the Bureau of American Republics?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; and it is done now at the expense of the bureau, or union, as it is now called.

Mr. HARRISON. The Monthly Bulletin is a new publication?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The Bulletin as it exists to-day is really a new institution.

Mr. HARRISON. Was not there heretofore a bulletin published at the expense of the Bureau of American Republics?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; and there is now. That is printed in English and Spanish and Portuguese.

Mr. HARRISON. How much expense will it entail on the Government?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. None at all.

Mr. HARRISON. $50,000 or $100,000 or $10,000,000?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It is simply for the printing.

Mr. HARRISON. Is not this a method to increase the appropriation to the Pan American Union?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. In addition to the $75,000?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It comes out of the $75,000.

Mr. MANN. There is no appropriation here made for it.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. This is paid for by the bureau, or union. The $75,000, together with the quotas of the 20 other Republics, goes into the treasury of the union to pay this and all other bills.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman tell the committee how much money has been paid into the Treasury as the result of this proviso tacked on by the Senate last year?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; I can not tell about that. I know the Government is reimbursed for this printing, for this work.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I see the gentleman from New York on his feet.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that some authorization is necessary to enable the Public Printer to do this printing, as the Pan American Union is not a department of our Government.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. All this is for is to give the authorization.

Mr. COX of Indiana. This proviso says that any moneys received from the other American Republics for the support of the union shall be paid into the treasury as a credit. My query was whether or not any money had been paid into the Treasury from the other countries?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I can not tell you how much, but nearly all the Governments have paid their full quota. There is a regular amount levied on each of the 21 Republics. Ours is $75,000. The amount was fixed at the last Pan American conference.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman does not know what the quota of the other Republics is?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; I can not tell. It is based on population.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman to say that the amounts contributed by other countries was included in the $75,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; I did not say that. If I did say so I did not intend to do so.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wanted to direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it says "in addition to the amount," and so forth.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I think we pay just one-half; I think the whole amount is $150,000 received from all countries.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salary of one member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture, for the calendar year 1912, $3,600.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the item. It seems to be new in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, we did not appropriate for it last year. This is one of those institutions that have grown up in recent years, and last year we simply appropriated our quota as a constituent member of the institute. It seems to me that this is clearly a treaty obligation.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the chairman report to the committee the terms of the treaty, and indicate whether it covers not only the appropriation in the first paragraph, but an appropriation for $3,600 additional for a salary of a member of the permanent committee?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It seems to me that this matter is a treaty obligation. I will read from the treaty:

The International Institute of Agriculture is to be a government institution in which each adhering power shall be represented by delegates of its choice. The Institute shall be composed of a general assembly and a permanent committee, the composition and duties of which are defined in the ensuing articles.

This is the article to which I wish to direct attention:

Article VII. The permanent committee shall be composed of members designated by the respective Governments. Each adhering nation shall be represented in the permanent committee by one member.

We are given no choice; we shall be represented in the committee by one member, and we have been so represented all these years. David Lubin, of California, has been patriotic enough to live there and give his time and services to the task of serving us as our member of the permanent committee without a salary.

Mr. MACON. And that is why the bill has not heretofore carried an appropriation for a salary?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; that is not why. We have not done it before because there was some misgiving as to whether this institution was going to prove of sufficient importance to justify our going forward and continuing to be a member of it.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman think now, after investigation, that it is of sufficient importance to this country to warrant this appropriation?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do, and the committee does, and our Department of Agriculture, which has heretofore had some doubt about it, believes this appropriation should be made. I can say that the National Grange and some of our State granges have taken it up. The London Times had a very admirable editorial on the subject only recently. It seems to me that we are simply doing our duty in making this appropriation—our duty under the treaty.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How long has this man been a member of this committee?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. From its organization. It was organized in 1905, I think. The treaty was negotiated in 1905 and the organization was perfected immediately after. There are 47 Governments parties to this institute. The King of Italy took enough interest in it to build a palace for it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. He occupies a unique position, in that he has never come to Congress to ask for a salary heretofore.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I renew the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. This is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to get some information. Does this man give his entire time to this?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. His entire time.

Mr. COX of Indiana. For the last five years.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Oh, no.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I ask the gentleman if he has given his entire time for five years.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. He has given his entire time. He is a very enthusiastic man. I will tell the gentleman something about him. He came over here from northern Europe, and worked for some time in a watch factory in New England. Then he went to California and became interested in agriculture. He made some money, and he conceived the idea of a great international institute of agriculture.

He went over to Rome and interested the King of Italy in the movement, and it was through the impetus given to the movement by the King of Italy that he was able finally to secure this general treaty and the organization of the institute. He has given all his time to it since that time and has paid his own expenses and has labored incessantly for the success of the institute.

Mr. COX of Indiana. He must be a man of some considerable wealth.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; he is a man of considerable wealth, but the time is now coming, or rather he feels that the time is now at hand, when he should be permitted to lay down the work. He was here a year ago.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does he want to give up the job?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. He wants to give up the job and he wants an appropriation made, so that some one can be found to take his place over there, with his enthusiasm, and do the work which he has been doing.

Mr. BUTLER. Can we get such a man as that for $3,600?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, just a word, to follow what the gentleman from Vermont has stated. I desire to state that Mr. Lubin is a man of wealth. He has given his time to this institute as a matter of public interest. He is a very public-spirited man, and the reason why he desires to retire now is not because——

Mr. COX of Indiana. Where does he live when he is in the United States?

Mr. HAYES. He lives in Sacramento, Cal., when he is at home. The reason why he desires to retire now is not because he has lost any interest in this institute or because he would not under other circumstances desire to continue to represent this country at Rome, but because of the condition of his health, on account of overwork, if you please, which compels him to retire. Therefore it becomes necessary, as the chairman has pointed out, for us to make an appropriation to pay another man to represent this country. Now, I desire to ask unanimous consent that I may insert in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a resolution of the National Grange and an extract from the London Times on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the articles referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The articles are as follows:

Resolution passed by the National Grange at its forty-fourth annual session, Atlantic City, N. J., November 16–25, 1910.

The National Grange, profoundly interested in the cause of international fraternity and cooperation and in the commanding movement for its promotion which is the distinguishing mark and glory of our age, feels peculiar pride and satisfaction in the fact that it is in the field of agriculture that the work of international organization has achieved one of its broadest and most beneficent results.

We rejoice that the International Institute of Agriculture, the conception and in great measure the creation of one of our American fellow citizens, and a member of our own order, has now won the confidence and support of almost all the great governments of the world and become one of the chief servants of all agricultural peoples. Its scientific investigations and invaluable publications promise to put a stop, at no distant day, to all disastrous and demoralizing speculation in agricultural products. We urge our own Government to that conspicuous support of its activities which befits the greatest of agricultural nations; and we urge more generous and practical provision for the wide spread of its regular bulletins and various publications among the farmers of the United States.

We recommend the appointment by the administration of the National Grange of a special committee to promote the interests of the International Institute in this country and to make its work of greater and more constant service to our people.

[The Times (London), Dec. 27, 1910.]

THE INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE—ITS AIMS AND ACHIEVEMENTS.

The chief objects of the International Institute of Agriculture are well known—namely, to procure and disseminate information concerning the crops, yields, and market prices in all countries and trading centers of the world. It needed no prophet to foretell, when it was formally opened some two and a half years ago, that its first steps would be beset with difficulties; but, though it has met with many obstacles—mostly of a kind which was inevitable to its international character—its progress has been such as to satisfy even its most ardent supporters and more than justify its existence. Were the International Institute of Agriculture abolished to-morrow it is almost certain that the nations who now take part in it would speedily agree to replace it by some other similar institution. Everyone would acknowledge that equity in exchange, arising out of a correct knowledge of the world's agricultural staples and of their value, is the most important economic factor in the commercial, industrial, and agricultural life of a country. The institute has shown that knowledge can be obtained and has proved the possibility of obtaining it. It has demonstrated this so clearly that already all the most important of the producing and consuming countries are now engaged in creating a uniform system of crop reporting which will enable the institute, as their center, to issue periodically a summary of the world's supply.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I did not make the point of order upon the paragraph, although it has been twice ruled out of order on the point of order, notwithstanding the argument of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Was not that because it coupled with it each time an appropriation for paying our delegates? I have always understood that was the reason why it would make it subject to the point of order in the view of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me and permit me to say a word, I will be very much obliged to him.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman generally gets an opportunity in spite of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. MANN. The only work this institution has ever pretended to do as I have ever heard of, and I have seen, I think, everything they have issued, is it pretends to gather the world's statistics on agricultural crops, and they have made a great advertisement about that during the past year.

They managed to fool the London Times, which probably was not a very difficult thing to do [laughter], because a newspaper is permitted to be fooled one day in order to retract the next, and we constantly see how the newspapers are fooled here and elsewhere about news. I have been told a good many times by gentlemen who are familiar with the gathering of crop statistics, because in the city from which I come people on the board of trade and elsewhere have to know what the world's crop statistics are, that there never was a greater fake on earth than this agricultural institute and its gathering of crop statistics.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand a monument has been erected by the King of Italy to this fake in the form of a palace?

Mr. MANN. Well, the King of Italy has constructed a building in which to house this institute, and that is to his credit. I am not complaining about that. I did not make the point of order upon this item which has been heralded so widely and so many claims made about how they were going to gather crop statistics and get them before the world quicker than they are now. I am willing to let the institute try it, but if our people who are interested in the sale and production of grain had to wait on this institute to know the statistics in reference to crops, they would all go out of business.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would it not be a good thing if this stock and wheat gambling would go out of business?

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of the wheat gamblers. I am speaking of the men who actually buy the wheat and put it in the warehouses, who warehouse it not only in the cities, but throughout the country, and who have to know what the production of wheat is, and who do not wait for information as gathered in a particular country to be sent to Rome and collated there, and then sent out to the world, not by wire, but by a bulletin.

But, if they can accomplish anything, very well. I am not complaining at this time. If it is subject to a point of order it will be just as much subject to a point of order another year as it is now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I have known Mr. Lubin for many years, and I know the motives which actuated him in undertaking this great work. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is entirely mistaken if he thinks the sole purpose of the International Institute of Agriculture is gathering the world's statistics on the subject of wheat. Only recently the almond growers of California wrote me a letter asking me to intercede with the Secretary of Agriculture with the view of having statistics on the world's crop on the subject of almonds gathered and reported by this International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. And the Agricultural Department at Washington gave instructions of our country's delegate at Rome to gather such statistics.

Now, I apprehend that this great department of our Government, which is constantly doing magnificent work, would not attempt to send to the delegate of this Government at Rome a request to gather statistics if it believed the institution to be a fake. The best evidence of the fact that the institute has the approval of the Government is the fact that the Secretary has requested the institute to gather these statistics. It is only within the past year that the institute has commenced to issue its bulletins, and the bulletins are in demand all over the world, even as the crop reports of our own country are eagerly awaited by the people interested in the various commodities that are reported.

I am glad that no point of order has been made against this item. I know the public-spirited character of Mr. Lubin, and I only hope that if he ever retires his successor may be equally as vigorous in carrying on the good work.

The Clerk read as follows:

International Railway Congress: To pay the quota of the United States as an adhering member of the International Railway Congress for the year ending April 15, 1912, $400.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the paragraph is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boundary line, Alaska and Canada: To enable the Secretary of State to mark the boundary and make the surveys incidental thereto, between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, in conformity with the award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal and existing treaties, including employment at the seat of government of such surveyors, computers, and draftsmen as are necessary to reduce field notes, $200,000, to be immediately available, together with the unexpended balance of the previous appropriation for this object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MACON. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to obtain some information from the chairman of the committee as to the distinction that the Committee on Foreign Affairs makes in providing in this bill for expenses of commissions under treaty stipulations and not making provision for other commissions provided by treaty arrangement. There is on the calendar of the House, which was a few days ago objected to when on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, a Senate bill providing for the establishment and expenses of the International Joint Commission under the waterways treaty of January 11, 1909. That is a treaty obligation between this Government and Great Britain——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; and this is a treaty obligation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Wherein does the committee differentiate in not including a provision in the appropriation bill providing for the execution of that treaty?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I would say to the gentleman that the matter referred to in that bill came up after our appropriation bill had been passed, otherwise it would have been included. In order to carry out that treaty some legislation was necessary, and ordinarily where there is need of legislation we do not carry it in the appropriation bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recognize the value of the treaty that had been entered into between this Government and Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman is entirely right. We make no difference where simply an appropriation is required. Ordinarily, if something more than an appropriation is required, if general legislation must be had, then we provide for it by special bills. But in the case referred to the matter came up after the committee had acted upon the appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman makes a clear explanation of the distinction, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. This is a treaty obligation.

Mr. MACON. I see that the appropriation has been increased 100 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I will say to the gentleman on that point that last year we had the representative of this work before us, and he told us that for this year the appropriation would necessarily be much larger because of the fact that he would have to keep his force in Alaska the year around. These gentlemen, I may say to the gentleman from Arkansas, traveled 500 miles on foot through the snow before they came to the place where they are working. We were told last year that while the sum carried in the last appropriation bill was all that would be required for the current year, the larger sum called for here would be necessary in order to enable them to carry on the work.

Mr. MACON. Now, you make this amount immediately available, and yet you reappropriate the unexpended balance. What is the necessity of making it immediately available if you have an unexpended balance that you want to reappropriate?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Well, as I say, those people are up there. We want them to have the money as it is needed. That is the whole purpose in making it immediately available. I am satisfied, I can assure the gentleman from Arkansas, that this work is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible under the direction of the two Governments. From time to time we give just what money seems to be necessary in order to enable our American force to continue their share of the work.

Mr. MACON. About how long has this work been going on?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. This work has been going on about three years.

Mr. MACON. Has the gentleman any idea how long it will take to complete it?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. About eight years.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman mean eight years from now?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; eight years from the start.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the actual expenses of the judge of said court, not to exceed $10 per day, and of the district attorney, not to exceed $5 per day, when sessions of said court are held at other cities than Shanghai, so much as may be necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will not reserve the point of order. I move to strike out the last word. Would the chairman of the committee have any objection to inserting, after the word "actual," the words "and necessary," in order to conform to the language usually employed in these measures with respect to the judiciary? I may say that there is a bill now pending in the Senate having in view a similar purpose, and we had under debate a few days ago a measure affecting the district and circuit judges, and the language was "actual and necessary expenses."

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We framed this language after due consideration, and it seems to me it would be difficult to improve upon it. When you speak of the actual expenses of a judge of the court, not to exceed $10 a day, it seems to me you have a concise statement of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. It seems to me that I might have been able to obtain a greater concession from the chairman of the committee if I had reserved the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do not think this is subject to a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is new.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it has been in for years.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The language here is the exact language of the bill establishing the court, and if this should now be amended in accordance with the gentleman's suggestion next year it would be subject to a point of order, because the present provision is in the exact words of the statute.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I do not care to press the suggestion. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] withdraws the pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

International Seismological Association: For defraying the necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association and the expenses of the United States delegate in attending the meetings of the commission, $1,300.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this paragraph is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained by the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration: For contribution by the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration, $2,500.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the same point of order against this paragraph, but I would like at the same time to ask unanimous consent that the point of order may be considered as withheld until the return of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], who wishes to express some views upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Let the paragraph be passed over temporarily.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ninth International Conference of the Red Cross: To meet the expenses of the Ninth International Conference of the Red Cross, to be held at Washington in 1912, $20,000.

Mr. HARRISON. I make the point of order that this paragraph is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I shall have to concede the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] if he will not withhold his objection to this paragraph? It is the Red Cross item, is it not?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman if he does not think it is a meritorious item, and that it ought to be taken care of?

Mr. HARRISON. Probably the gentleman was not in the Chamber at the time I made my original statement concerning all the paragraphs of the bill which are subject to a point of order. I stated that the objection did not lie, in any case, to the merits of the object covered by the paragraph, but to the method by which the appropriation was asked for, without due authority of law.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I think there is such a well-defined and earnest demand in this country for the recognition of the Red Cross and its work that this item will undoubtedly be placed back in the bill by the Senate, and eventually will become a part of the appropriation bill, and I do not see any objection to the House retaining it in the bill now.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall be very glad to see the sum of $20,000 or $100,000, if necessary, appropriated in a proper and orderly manner for this very meritorious purpose, but it is not done in that way in this bill, in my judgment.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that some recognition of this society has been carried in other appropriation bills. Will the gentleman not consent to let it be submitted to the House on a vote, instead of striking it out on a point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the gentleman that I have no power to do that. I would be very glad to vote for the appropriation.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Then do not make the point of order, but make a motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no such intention or desire. I only desire to call attention to a paragraph which is inserted in the bill out of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It seems to me that the gentleman is not discriminating.

Mr. MANN. This is not a convention.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The Red Cross does not belong to the class to which the gentleman from New York objects. This is a great international organization. The Government will not send delegates to or participate in the conference. The American branch has arranged for the ninth international conference of the Red Cross to be held here. It is a worthy cause. It does much for our Nation; not only the American branch of it but the foreign branches, for the Japanese Red Cross contributed largely to the city of San Francisco at the time of the disaster there. So great are the benefits that accrue to our own Nation that our American branch has asked our Government to contribute this $20,000 toward the necessary expenses of the conference. So it seems to me that if the gentleman from New York reflects he will see that it does not come within that class of cases to which he objects.

Mr. HARRISON. I will ask the gentleman if the meeting of the Red Cross here is not on the invitation of our Government to other governments?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do not understand it so. It may be that our National Government transmits the invitation, because that sometimes is done as a matter of etiquette. But, as I understand, this is the organization itself that is holding this conference. There is no invitation about it. The American branch at its last conference succeeded in getting the congress to vote to hold its next congress here.

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman states to me that the Government has not initiated these proceedings and is not responsible for them, he has differentiated this case from the others, to which I have made the point of order, and I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

International conference to promote uniform legislation concerning letters of exchange: For the participation by the United States in the adjourned meeting at The Hague, in 1911, of the international conference for the purpose of promoting uniform legislation concerning letters of exchange, including compensation and actual necessary traveling and subsistence expenses of an expert delegate and a secretary, $9,000, to be made immediately available.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this paragraph that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word by way of an appeal to the gentleman from New York. I think he should make another exception here.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the gentleman assured me that I was not making an exception of the other.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That is what I do mean; my language was inaccurate. We have participated in this conference. Its work was not completed, and it was determined to hold an adjourned meeting this year. It is strictly an adjourned meeting. It seems to me that in this case it would be awkward for us not to appropriate this $9,000, which is necessary for the traveling and subsistence expenses of the expert delegate. The delegate lives in the city a part of which the gentleman from New York has the honor to represent. He is an expert on this subject. He has completed his work and is prepared to return to the conference if this amount is given to him. Now, it seems to me that this does not come within the class to which the gentleman is so much opposed. For that reason I respectfully, but urgently, request him to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. This is a new item, is it not?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; we made an appropriation for this conference two years ago. The conference was held, but the work was not completed. I have not at hand the document showing why, or for what purpose, an adjourned meeting of the conference is to be held. It is an important matter that is involved, and the conference adjourned to meet again next autumn. This is a continuation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I am unable to find the item in the bill of last year.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It was in that of two years ago, and this is for a continuation of the conference.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why was not it put in last year's bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Because we did not need any appropriation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What good was accomplished in the item carried in the bill two years ago?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We do not know yet, for they have not completed the work. We believe that the result is going to be good.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Have not they made any report whatever?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. They have not made any report to us. I have no doubt that our representative who lives in New York, and who is an expert, has made his report to the Treasury Department. This appropriation is asked by the Treasury Department. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw the point of order?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Permanent International Council for the Exploration of the Sea: For the share of the United States in the administrative and other expenses of the Permanent International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, $7,156.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order on that.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate paragraph, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, to come in after line 18, page 20.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a separate paragraph the following:

"That the Secretary of State is hereby authorized and directed to secure, by purchase or otherwise, a suitable building for an embassy building in the City of Mexico, and $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for that purpose."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a law has been passed authorizing the State Department to expend $500,000 a year for embassy buildings, and that is the existing law. This is simply a direction to the State Department to select Mexico City as the first site for the purchase of an embassy building. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman say that that bill providing $500,000 for the purchase of buildings has been passed and enacted into law?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman a copy of the act?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that it would be better not to have the point of order ruled upon. The act that passed the other day, and which is now a law, and a copy of which I hold in my hand, provides that the Secretary of State is authorized to acquire diplomatic and consular establishments for the United States, and so forth, suitable buildings and lands, and that not more than $500,000 shall be expended in this fiscal year under the authorization herein made, and then contains this proviso:

Provided further, That in submitting estimates of appropriations to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to the House of Representatives the Secretary of State shall set forth the limit of cost for the acquisition of sites and buildings and for the construction, alteration, and repair, and furnishing of buildings at each place in which the expenditure is proposed, which limit of cost shall not exceed the sum of $150,000 at any one place, and which limit thereafter shall not be exceeded in any case except by new and express authorization of Congress.

The purpose of that proviso was to secure Congress against improvident appropriations which would not be subject to points of order in the House, and the clear contemplation of the act was that the Secretary of State, in making his annual estimates or special estimates, would transmit to Congress a limit of cost as to each building or site to be acquired, and that is clearly expressed; so that if the Secretary of State had now transmitted an estimate with limit of cost $100,000 for a site and embassy building at Mexico City, that limit of cost could not thereafter be exceeded. There is, however, no provision in the act which would cover the offering of an amendment in either House of Congress.

The act provides that not more than $500,000 shall be expended in any one year, and that sum has not yet been reached in this appropriation bill, so that that limit of cost would not strike out the paragraph.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman believe that the act which he quoted from a moment ago gives Congress the power to make any appropriation until the Secretary of State makes his estimate as to what it is going to cost?

Mr. MANN. That is just what I prefer not to have decided.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I doubt very much whether Congress has the right to do it until the Secretary of State determines it.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly hereafter the policy will be for the Secretary of State to send in his own estimates, and those estimates will be followed; but I question whether the act requires the Secretary of State to send in an estimate. The act could not require that. What we provide is that the Secretary may acquire the buildings; that the amount in any one year shall not exceed $500,000; and then there is a provision directing the Secretary of State to put in a limit of cost when he does send in his estimates, and when that limit of cost is included in that estimate it can not be exceeded. Probably the occasion will not often arise hereafter. I would be very sorry to see a ruling of the Chair now which would authorize amendments offered on the floor of the House probably for new sites and buildings.

That likely will not occur hereafter, because I take it hereafter the committee then in making reports will confine itself to those cases where estimates have been sent in. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order in order to have a ruling on that, as it might be just the reverse of what we would like to have.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois direct his attention to the Chair for a moment? Does the gentleman argue that the act which directs the Secretary to submit an estimate of cost and which limits that cost, subject to subsequent authorizations of Congress, is a barrier to an amendment on this bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I skillfully avoided the subject. I do not wish to express an opinion on the subject, and I hope the Chair will not be called upon to express an opinion on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it not be up to the Chair if it were insisted upon?

Mr. MANN. I hope the Chair will not feel at all that he is required to rule, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. In regard to the question of whether the point of order is pressed or not, when this bill was under consideration in the House, though I opposed it by my vote, I thought that it was the purpose to safeguard the interest of the Treasury and the Government so that there would not be any lavish expenditure of the public funds for embassies and legations. I thought it would be left to the discretion of the State Department to determine the places where those embassy and legation buildings should be established. If I read this act correctly, I think the act, if it shows anything, shows that the discretion is vested in the Secretary of State to determine the places where these embassy buildings should be established. That is not only indicated in the body of the act but also in the proviso, and the whole purpose of the act is predicated upon the idea that Congress will not proceed with the building of these embassies and legations until the Secretary of State makes investigation and recommends the places where they should be established. Believing that it was intended to vest discretion in the Secretary of State to determine the places where these buildings should be located, and not leaving it to the whim of the committee or of the House to determine any certain place, I think, unless some other reason is advanced why I should not press this point of order, that I will be compelled to do so.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the suggestion was made when the bill was under consideration that probably the first embassy building to be acquired or purchased would be in Mexico. I think that was the general understanding when it first came up.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me to ask the chairman of the committee a question? I simply want to ask the chairman of the committee whether the State Department has taken any action in this regard since the law was passed?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It has not. It has not been practical in the time since the bill was passed for them to do anything in the matter.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I would suggest to the gentleman this would be the only opportunity to make it possible for the Secretary of State to do anything in this regard.

Mr. MANN. He could send in the estimates in time for the House or Senate.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. After the bill is passed it is too late, unless it should be carried as a rider upon some other appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to say anything further on the point of order?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Not on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order. The existing law, act of February 17, 1911, provides that the Secretary of State shall submit estimates of appropriations to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to the House of Representatives, and it establishes a limit of cost for those buildings contemplated by the act and provides a method of establishing that limit. In the light of existing law fixing a limitation of cost, and the method of procedure by the Secretary of State, the amendment presented by the gentleman from Virginia is clearly not in order. It is new legislation and therefore unauthorized by existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Relief and protection of American seamen: Relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries, and shipwrecked American seamen in the Territory of Alaska, in the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, the Panama Canal Zone, and the Philippine Islands, $30,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to an apparent error in describing Alaska as the "Territory of Alaska" instead of the "District of Alaska." I wish to substitute the word "District" for "Territory."

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, five years ago I made a similar error and was corrected by our good friend, now unfortunately deceased, Mr. Cushman. Alaska is a Territory in all the descriptions in the statutes of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say that there are committees acting under the misapprehension that it is a district, and considerable legislation describes it as a district. I am very thankful to the gentleman for correcting me in that particular.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am only handing out the information I got myself on the floor of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the opinion of a number that it is a district.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

Contingent expenses, United States consulates: Expenses of providing all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, signs, rent (allowance for rent not to exceed in any case 30 per cent of the officer's salary), postage, furniture, including typewriters and exchange of same, statistics, newspapers, freight (foreign and domestic), telegrams, advertising, messenger service, traveling expenses of consular officers and consular assistants, compensation of Chinese writers, loss by exchange, and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may think necessary for the several consulates and consular agencies in the transaction of their business, $471,600.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I see that there is quite a reduction in the appropriation in this item?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; $50,000.

Mr. MANN. I compliment the gentleman and his committee.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I thank you. If the gentleman from Illinois will some time look over the report of the expenditure of this fund by the State Department, he will appreciate the care with which that fund is appropriated. Really, it is a large sum for a Congress, with its policy, to hand over to a department to be disbursed in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now return to page 18, for the consideration of a paragraph which was passed without prejudice, and which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration: For contribution by the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration, $2,500.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, in that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I concede that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 32866, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the bill to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

THOMAS SEALS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 16268, an act for the relief of Thomas Seals, with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

BRIDGE ACROSS MOBILE RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill H. R. 31538, an act to authorize the Pensacola, Mobile & New Orleans Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across the Mobile River and its navigable channels on a line opposite Mobile, Ala., with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments, with an amendment striking out the semicolon after the word "mouth," on page 1.

The Senate amendment as amended was concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9221. An act for the relief of James Jones; and

H. R. 19756. An act for the relief of Michael J. Ryan, son and administrator de bonis non of John S. Ryan, deceased.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

West, of Monett, Mo.; M. L. Coleman, M. T. Davis, Jared R. Woodfill, jr., J. H. Jarrett, and William H. Standish, of Aurora, Lawrence County, Mo.; and L. S. Meyer, F. S. Heffernan, Robert A. Moore, William H. Johnson, J. P. McCammon, M. W. Colbaugh, and W. H. Schreiber, of Springfield, Greene County, Mo., to construct a dam across the James River, in Stone County, Mo., and to divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the said river again to create electric power; and

S. 10596. An act to authorize the Rainy River Improvement Co. to construct a dam across the outlet of Namakan Lake at Kettle Falls, in St. Louis County, Minn.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 21613. An act for the relief of Francis E. Rosier;

H. R. 23695. An act to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the northern district of Mississippi at the city of Clarksdale, in said district;

H. R. 26150. An act to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of the Charles River in the State of Massachusetts; and

H. J. Res. 146. Joint resolution creating a commission to investigate and report on the advisability of the establishment of permanent maneuvering grounds, camp of inspection, rifle and artillery ranges for troops of the United States at or near the Chickamauga and Chattanooga Military Park, and to likewise report as to certain lands in the State of Tennessee proposed to be donated to the United States for said purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 9874. An act to refund to the Gate of Heaven Church, South Boston, Mass., duty collected on stained-glass windows; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 10095. An act to provide for the acquisition of a site on which to erect a public building at Gilmer, Tex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 8047. An act for the relief of Clement A. Lounsberry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HERMAN GAUSS AND JOSEPH M. M'COY.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report (No. 2223) from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 991, in lieu of House resolutions 971 and 973.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Herman Gauss $1,200 and to Joseph M. McCoy $750, for extra and expert services rendered to the Committees on Invalid Pensions and Pensions, respectively, during the third session of the Sixty-first Congress, as assistant clerks to said committees by detail from the Pension Bureau, pursuant to law.

Mr. MANN. This is the usual resolution?

Mr. CURRIER. It is an increase of $200 over the resolution passed at the last short session of Congress. It is the same amount as was given at the last long session.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

GEORGE CHADSEY.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 990; H. Rept. 2222) from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 990, in lieu of House resolution 956.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to George Chadsey the sum of $37.50, for clerical services rendered the late Representative W. P. Brownlow, of Tennessee, from July 1 to July 9, 1910, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELEANORA THOMAS AND OTHERS.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I also submit the following privileged report (No. 2221) from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 989, in lieu of House resolutions 922, 942, 951, 981, and H. R. 32818.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House amounts equal, respectively, to six months' compensation of the following-named employees of the House, now deceased, at the rate of compensation paid them at the time they died, and a further amount, not exceeding $250 in each case, to defray the funeral expenses of said employees, namely:

To Eleanora Thomas, widow of Alexander B. Thomas, late a laborer;

To the widow of David M. Gardner, late a private on the Capitol police force;

To Elizabeth Welch, widow of Andrew J. Welch, late an official reporter of debates;

To the widow of George H. Morisey, late a messenger on the soldiers' roll; and

To John D. Fahey, administrator of the estate of Charles W. Rogan, late a messenger.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend that by striking out the words "Andrew J." and inserting "A. C.," so that it will read "widow of A. C. Welch."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

LAURA E. ALLEN.

Mr. CURRIER. I also submit the following privileged report (No. 2224) from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 992, in lieu of House resolution 988.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Laura E. Allen, clerk to the late Representative AMOS L. ALLEN, of Maine, the sum of $125 as clerk-hire allowance for the month of February, 1911.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERK, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I also submit the following privileged report (No. 2220) from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 968.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an additional clerk to said committee, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per day from this date.

With the following amendment:

In line 5 strike out the words "from this date" and insert "during the remainder of the present session."

Mr. MANN. How much is that?

Mr. CURRIER. One for the present session. Two were given the last time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MAKING BIRMINGHAM, ALA., A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up as a privileged matter the bill (H. R. 29708) to constitute Birmingham, in the State of Alabama, a subport of entry, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Birmingham, in the State of Alabama, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Mobile, and that the privileges of section 7 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the said subport of Birmingham, Ala.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes from the Committee on Ways and Means with a unanimous report.

Mr. MANN. I doubt whether it is a privileged matter, but I hope it will pass.

Mr. AUSTIN. It ought to pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent to withdraw a report on a certain bill that we have reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in which a mistake has been made, and have it corrected. It is a bill to establish a fish hatchery in Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. This request was made on yesterday and submitted by the Chair, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] objected until he could communicate with the gentleman from Illinois about it. Has the gentleman from Illinois seen the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. No; I have not seen him since. I will withdraw the request.

PERMISSIBLE EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to print as a House document Miners' Circular No. 2 on permissible explosives. I asked it the other night, and the gentleman from New York objected. He did not understand what the request was. He has withdrawn his objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTILLED SPIRITS—FRUIT BRANDY.

Mr. LONGWORTH, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 28626) to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and with the accompanying report (No. 2219) ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—JOSEPH W. HAWKINS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. HAMLIN, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Joseph W. Hawkins (H. R. 30431) without leaving copies, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, to meet on Thursday, February 23, 1911, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of an act for the relief of Cooper Walker, with recommendation thereto (H. Doc. No. 1400); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Attorney General submitting an estimate of appropriation for rent of quarters (H. Doc. No. 1401); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for reimbursement of the State of Idaho (H. Doc. No. 1402); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for claims of citizens of Hawaii (H. Doc. No. 1404); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a recommendation as to the disbursement of appropriations for certain emergency work in connection with the care of public buildings (H. Doc. No. 1403); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. PRAY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 10761) to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of May 1, 1888, and extend the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to certain lands in the State of Montana embraced within the provisions of said act, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2215), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr VOLSTEAD, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 10313) to provide for an enlarged homestead entry in Nevada where sufficient water suitable for domestic purposes is not obtainable upon the lands, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2217), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Revision of the Laws, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 281) to create a joint committee to continue the consideration of the revision and codification of the laws of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2218), which said resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BENNET of New York, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 239) authorizing the President to instruct representatives of United States to next International Peace Conference to express desire of United States that nations shall not attempt to increase their territory by conquest, and to endeavor to secure a declaration to that effect from the conference, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2216), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. McCALL, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the resolution of the Senate (S. J. Res. 145) providing for the filling of a vacancy which will occur on March 1, 1911, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2214), which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 32878) to refund certain tonnage taxes and light dues, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GRIEST: A bill (H. R. 32893) to extend the penny-postage rate on local delivery first-class mail matter to post offices where the system of free delivery is established; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A bill (H. R. 32894) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of Clerk, Sergeant at Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster of the House of Representatives, respectively, in case of the death or resignation of the incumbent during the interim between sessions of Congress; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 32895) to provide for the erection of a monument to the signers of the Declaration of Independence; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. PARKER (by request): A bill (H. R. 32896) to amend section 915 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) relating to alien deportations; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 32897) to remove the charge of desertion against the military record of Robert Burns; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: A bill (H. R. 32898) granting an increase of pension to Horatio B. Baker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 32899) granting a pension to Adelia Converse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 32900) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Webster; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DWIGHT: A bill (H. R. 32901) granting an increase of pension to Marcus W. Dewitt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 32902) granting an increase of pension to L. J. Richardson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 32903) granting a pension to Emily A. Ballard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENDALL: A bill (H. R. 32904) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Porter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 32905) granting an increase of pension to Joseph G. Long; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER of New York: Petition of Gerhard Lang Council, No. 298, Catholic Benevolent Legion, Buffalo, against increase in the postal rates on magazines; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ANSBERRY: Petition of H. M. Higginbotham, of Antwerp, Ohio, against a local rural parcels-post service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. NELSON. I submit a conference report on the river and harbor bill and move its adoption.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28632) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 18, 28, 47, 61, 80, 87, and 91.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 14, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 62, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72, 73, 77, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 88, 89, 90, 92, 93, 94, 96, and 98, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Improving Weymouth Fore River, Mass.: Completing improvement below the Quincy Point Bridge in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 1334, Sixty-first Congress, third session, $140,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Provided, That the project for improvement below said bridge may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be so modified as to allow the widening of the channel of the river at bends wherever considered desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation: Provided further, That no additional work shall be done under this authority which will increase the total cost of the project given in report submitted in House Document No. 441, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the language proposed strike out the words "to the Carolina Beach Pier" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and the Carolina Beach Pier"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following between lines 22 and 23, page 15, after the provision for the Coosa River:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contract with the Ragland Water Power Co., its successors or assigns, hereinafter designated 'the contracting party,' to complete the dam heretofore partially constructed by the Government at Lock No. 4 on the Coosa River, the work to be done under his supervision and control, and in accordance with the present adopted project and any modification thereof that he may deem proper: Provided, That the contracting party shall furnish all materials, of every character, and pay for all labor required in the construction of said dam, which, upon completion, shall become the property of the United States, free of all costs, claims, or charges of any kind whatsoever: Provided further, That the terms of this act and any stipulation which the Secretary of War may deem necessary to safeguard the interests of navigation and other interests of the United States shall be embodied in any contract entered into as aforesaid. The contracting party shall begin the said work within one year from the approval of this act, and shall complete the same within three years from the date of commencing construction; otherwise the authorization hereby conferred shall be void and the rights hereby conferred shall cease and be determined, the Government reserving the right to commence and finish the work, if deemed advisable, at any time before it is commenced by the contracting party; or, if begun and not carried out in strict conformity to the directions of the Secretary of War, the Government may assume the completion of said work at its option, the cost of such completion to be paid by the contracting party: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall determine from time to time whether the work is being properly done. In consideration of the completion of said dam free of cost to the Government, the contracting party is hereby granted such rights as the Government possesses to use the water power produced by said dam for manufacturing and other industrial purposes for a period of 50 years: Provided, That the plans for the necessary works and structures to utilize said water power shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the right is reserved to the United States to construct, maintain, and operate a forebay and lock for navigation purposes in connection with said dam, and nothing shall be done in the use of the water from said dam or otherwise to interfere with or in any way impede or retard the operation of said lock or the proper and complete navigation of the river at all times, nor in any way to interfere with the use and control of the same by the United States or the maintenance of the water surface above the dam at the established pool level; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations to govern the use of the said water power and the operations of the plant and force employed in connection therewith; and no claim shall be made against the United States for any failure of water power, resulting from any cause whatsoever: Provided further, That the contracting party shall furnish to the United States, free of cost, such electric current as may be necessary for operating the Government lock and lighting its buildings and grounds: And provided further, That the contracting party may have ingress and egress over Government lands in the construction and operation of the plant. The Secretary of War may require the contracting party to execute a bond, with proper securities, before the commencement of the work, in such amount as he may consider necessary, to insure the beginning, prosecution, and completion of the work and compliance with the terms and requirements of this act, and in case of failure to comply with the requirements of said bond the contracting party shall forfeit to the United States the full amount thereof: Provided, That a suitable force of inspectors shall be employed on the work by the Secretary of War, at the expense of the contracting party, to see that the plans and specifications and the terms and requirements of the act and the conditions of the contract are strictly carried out. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the rights and privileges hereby conferred, and the United States shall incur no liability because of the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof: Provided further, That to insure compliance with the terms of this contract, or to protect the interests of navigation and other interests of the United States, the Secretary of War shall have power, at any time, to order a suspension of all privileges hereby granted, and a compliance with such order may be enforced by an injunction of the court of the United States exercising jurisdiction in the district in which the work is situated, and proper proceedings to this end shall be instituted by the Attorney General upon request of the Secretary of War. Nothing herein shall be construed as in any way abridging the exclusive jurisdiction and control by the United States of the Coosa River, and of any structure therein, or as repealing or modifying any of the provisions or laws now existing for the protection of navigation. The contracting party, in consideration of the privileges granted hereby, must, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may require, obligate and bind itself, its successors or assigns, to raise the height of said dam at Lock No. 4 3 feet, and shall stop the leaks above Dam No. 4 by which water escapes under such dam, so far as the same can be done, and to keep said leaks stopped so far as it is possible so to do. In consideration of making said improvements, the said contracting party shall have the right to raise said dam during low water to such a height as may be necessary to give it a storage basin above the dam, in order that it may develop and operate a water power: Provided, That the said storage does not interfere with navigation: Provided further, That the said contracting party shall pay all damages incurred by reason of overflowed lands. Beginning with the year 1925, the contracting party shall pay to the United States for the power due to the natural flowage of the river the sum of $1 per 10-hour horsepower per year: Provided, That in case the natural flowage of the river is increased at this point by storage reservoirs above this point, the power company shall have the right to lease, for a period not exceeding the life of this authorization, the increased power due to said storage, and shall pay on all power above that due to natural flowage of the river, as increased by local storage at Dam No. 4 the sum of $1 per year for the first five years, $2 per year for the second five years, and thereafter $3 per year for each 10-hour horsepower sold or used, or in lieu of above payment may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, pay its equitable share toward the construction of said reservoir or reservoirs, such share to be determined by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may readjust such rate of compensation at periods of 10 years."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "appropriated," in the twelfth line of the language proposed, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided further, That no part of the amount herein appropriated and authorized to be appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that the interests of the general public are duly protected in the use of said harbor, and that no terminal monopoly will be possible: And provided further, That the title or easements in any land needed in connection with the construction of the dike proposed as a part of this improvement shall be vested in the United States free of cost."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "maintenance" insert the words "by dredging and repair of the jetties"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the second paragraph of the language proposed insert the following:

"Such changes and diversion shall be shown by plans and plats to be prepared by the city of St. Paul, which shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers before any work shall be done thereon, and any change therefrom shall be unlawful unless a plan and plat thereof shall have been previously filed with and approved by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers: Provided, That the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall submit to Congress an estimate of the amount, character, and cost of any work deemed proper to be done by the United States in connection with the improvement herein authorized, the expense connected with the preparation of such estimate to be paid from the appropriation for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors: Provided further, That neither this act nor any action taken thereunder by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall be construed as in any way committing the United States to any expense or obligation without the further direction of Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the beginning of the fifth line of the language proposed omit the words "Siuslaw River, Oreg.," and the colon immediately following, and insert a quotation mark; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "New York Harbor, N. Y., with a view to securing increased width and depth of water from a point at or near Southwest Spit, northwest of Sandy Hook, N. J., through lower New York Bay, Raritan Bay, and the channel between New Jersey and Staten Island, N. Y., to the channel in upper New York Bay;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Creek" insert the words "Craven County"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the fourth line of the language proposed strike out the word "Ceia" and insert the word "Ceiga"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Bayou Lafourche, La., with a view to securing a depth of 20 feet at its mouth"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Mermentau River, La., with a view to the construction of a lock and dam to maintain the level of Grand Lake and the inland waterways of Louisiana"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "Guadeloupe" insert the word "Guadalupe"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the comma after the word "Texas" and all the language following and insert a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the words proposed to be inserted; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words "a harbor of refuge at that point" insert the words "increased harbor facilities"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "Spoon" insert the word "Apoon"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"SEC. 4. That so much of section 7 of the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1909, as provides that the the term of the National Waterways Commission shall expire on March 4, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the said commission, with its present membership and as at present constituted, shall be continued until November 4, 1911, with the powers and duties prescribed in said act. And the said commission shall make a final report to Congress and file the same with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives not later than November 4, 1911. Said commission is also authorized to investigate and report upon the advisability and feasibility of proposed artificial waterways and upon proposed plans for the empounding of flood waters in rivers, by reservoirs or otherwise, including the following: First, the construction by the United States of the proposed canal from the Ohio River, at a point near Pittsburg, to Lake Erie, the expense thereof being borne by local interests affected; second, the proposed canal from Lake Erie, by way of the Maumee River and Fort Wayne, or other direct and feasible route, to the southerly end of Lake Michigan; and, third, the proposed canal to connect the Anacostia River, at some point near the District of Columbia boundary line, with Chesapeake Bay, or some tributary thereof. For the obtaining of the necessary engineering data the commission is authorized to call upon the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and said corps shall furnish said data upon the request of the commission, and the expense of obtaining the same shall be paid from the appropriation made by said act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it and the report is agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I present a statement which I should like to have printed in the RECORD in connection with the report.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The report recommends that the Senate recede from the following amendments:

No. 17, providing for the construction of a lock and dam at or about Pine Bluff, on the Trinity River, Tex.

No. 18, providing for a reexamination of the Jefferson-Shreveport Waterway, La. and Tex., with a view to a modification of the project for a dam at the foot of Caddo Lake.

No. 28, appropriating $150,000 for the improvement of the Missouri River between Le Beau, S. Dak., and Fort Benton, Mont.

No. 47, providing for a survey of Gowanus Bay, N. Y.

No. 61, providing for a survey of Archies Hope River, Va.

No. 80, providing for a survey of Cimeron River, Okla.

No. 87, providing for a survey of Jordan River, Utah.

No. 91, providing for a survey of San Rafael Creek, Cal.

All other amendments of the Senate are agreed to, either in toto or with modifications, which are in many cases merely verbal.

Amendment No 97, providing for the extension of the life of the National Waterways Commission for two years, with enlarged powers, is so modified as to provide for an extension until November 4, 1911, by which time its final report is to be filed. The authorization, given to the commission by the amendment, to investigate and report upon proposed artificial waterways and plans for empounding flood waters, including investigation of the proposed canals from Pittsburg to Lake Erie; from Lake Erie by way of Maumee River and Fort Wayne, or other route, to Lake Michigan; and from the Anacostia River to Chesapeake Bay is retained.

The modified provision for extension of life of the National Waterways Commission is, in full, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That so much of section 7 of the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1909, as provides that the term of the National Waterways Commission shall expire on March 4, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the said commission, with its present membership and as now constituted, shall be continued until November 4, 1911, with the powers and duties prescribed in said act. And the said commission shall make a final report to Congress and file the same with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives not later than November 4, 1911. Said commission is also authorized to investigate and report upon the advisability and feasibility of proposed artificial waterways and upon proposed plans for the impounding of flood waters in rivers, by reservoirs or otherwise, including the following: First, the construction by the United States of the proposed canal from the Ohio River, at a point near Pittsburg, to Lake Erie, the expense thereof being borne by local interests affected; second, the proposed canal from Lake Erie, by way of the Maumee River and Fort Wayne or other direct and feasible route, to the southerly end of Lake Michigan; and, third, the proposed canal to connect the Anacostia River at some point near the District of Columbia boundary line with Chesapeake Bay or some tributary thereof. For the obtaining of the necessary engineering data the commission is authorized to call upon the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and said corps shall furnish said data upon the request of the commission, and the expense of obtaining the same shall be paid from the appropriation made by said act."

The National Waterways Commission was created by a provision in the river and harbor act of 1909, which reads as follows:

"SEC. 7. That a commission be, and is hereby, created, to be known as the National Waterways Commission, to be composed of Members of the Sixtieth Congress, who shall be Members of the Sixty-first Congress as well, as follows: Five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer thereof; seven Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker. It shall be the duty of this commission to investigate questions pertaining to water transportation and the improvement of waterways, and to recommend to Congress such action as it may deem best upon these subjects. Said commission shall be, and is hereby, authorized to employ experts to aid in the work of inquiry and examination, also to employ clerks, stenographers, and such other assistants as may be necessary, all such employees to be paid such compensation as the said commission may deem just and reasonable, upon a certificate to be issued by the chairman of the commission. The several departments and bureaus of the Government shall detail from time to time such officials and employees and furnish such information as may be requested by said commission in its investigations. For the purpose of its investigations said commission shall be authorized to pay the necessary traveling expenses of persons summoned before it for the giving of information upon matters pertaining to the subjects under consideration, and the said commission is authorized to sit during the recess of Congress. The members of said commission or of any subcommission, or subcommissions thereof, may make investigations of waterways and harbors in the United States and elsewhere, and shall be allowed actual necessary expenses for the same and the expenses of necessary employees. The term of the commission shall expire on March 4, 1911. The commission shall report from time to time to the Congress of the United States, and shall at the conclusion of its labors submit a final report: Provided, That a preliminary report shall be made not later than January 1, 1910, which report, with all other reports, shall embrace such material and information obtained in the course of the investigation as shall be of value; also the conclusions reached by said commissions on the several subjects investigated

"The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to pay the necessary expenses of said commission."

The personnel of the commission is as follows:

THEODORE E. BURTON, Ohio, Senate, chairman.
JACOB H. GALLINGER, New Hampshire, Senate, vice chairman.
SAMUEL H. PILES, Washington, Senate.
WM. ALDEN SMITH, Michigan, Senate.
F. M. SIMMONS, North Carolina, Senate.
JAMES P. CLARKE, Arkansas, Senate.
WILLIAM LORIMER, Illinois, Senate.
D. S. ALEXANDER, New York, House of Representatives.
FREDERICK C. STEVENS, Minnesota, House of Representatives.
IRVING P. WANGER, Pennsylvania, House of Representatives.
STEPHEN M. SPARKMAN, Florida, House of Representatives.
JOHN A. MOON, Tennessee, House of Representatives.

Messrs. BURTON and LORIMER were at the time of their appointment Members of the House. These gentlemen being now Members of the Senate, the constitution of the commission has been changed from seven Members of the House and five of the Senate, as provided by the act, to seven Members of the Senate and five of the House.

The commission has expended a little less than half of the $50,000 appropriated and has about $26,000 remaining to its credit. The commission visited Europe in the summer of 1909, examining many of its waterways under the guidance of engineer officers of the various countries visited and accompanied by the present Chief of Engineers.

The commission met at its rooms in the Senate Office Building on nine different days in December, 1909, and several times in June, 1910, and discussed its proposed preliminary report and other matters, subcommittees having been appointed for different phases thereof. Experts have been employed, both to accompany the commission in Europe and in Washington to prepare data for use in connection with the preliminary and final report. Large numbers of documents were collected in Europe bearing on waterway improvement, and one of the experts employed has given much time to arranging and cataloging these and making digests and extracts therefrom.

In the discussions of the commission much attention has been given to the conditions under which water-power rights should be granted, and the provisions of the general dam act were largely based on conclusions arrived at these meetings.

A preliminary report was filed January 24, 1910, consisting of 71 pages, and printed at Senate Document No. 301, Sixty-first Congress, second session.

Eighteen other pamphlets have been printed by the commission, containing valuable information relative to river and harbor improvements, and others are in preparation, these being largely reports of consuls relating to improvements in European countries.

The only changes in appropriations are the two heretofore mentioned, of $25,000 for a lock and dam near Pine Bluff, Trinity River, and of $150,000 for the upper Missouri River, these being yielded by the Senate. In these cases no appropriations have been asked for by the Chief of Engineers for the coming year. In the case of the upper Missouri River nearly $85,000 remains on hand unexpended, and a report on a survey ordered in the act of 1909 has not yet been received.

According to the conference report the bill carries apppropriations amounting to $23,855,342 and authorizations of contracts amounting to $13,101,645, giving a grand total of $36,956,987.

Some questions being raised as to the basis for the appropriations for the mouth of the Brazos River, for the dam at Hidalgo Falls, Brazos River, and for improving the Ouachita River, inquiries were made of the Chief of Engineers, whose reply, under date of February 18, 1911, is appended:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 18, 1911.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
Chairman of conferees on the part of the Senate,
United States Senate.

SIR: 1. Replying to your letter of the 17th instant, which requests an expression from me as to whether there are any objections to favorable action on the part of the conferees on amendments Nos. 15, 16, and 19, now under consideration, I have the honor to say that I know of no objection to their favorable consideration.

2. No. 15 is as follows:

"Improving mouth of Brazos River, Tex.: Continuing improvement and maintenance by dredging and repair of the jetties, $100,000."

No work has recently been done at the mouth of Brazos River, the recommendations of the department being that in the absence of commerce work at this locality should be confined to maintenance of the jetties. But it is understood that since formal recommendation to this effect was sumbitted the railroad has been extended from Velasco to the inner ends of the jetties and a steamer has been purchased by the jobbers of Texas, at a cost of over $225,000, for use at this port, both in connection with a bona fide attempt to utilize the harbor for commercial purposes. Therefore former recommendations by the department should not be considered as a bar to further work at the locality. Moreover, a recent survey indicates that the available depth heretofore reported as 16 feet has been reduced to 13 feet, possibly due to recent breaks in the jetties. Therefore, in view of the expenditures heretofore made on this harbor by the United States and by private interests, it is believed that Congress might, in assisting any serious attempt to utilize the harbor, properly provide for dredging as well as for the repair of the jetties.

3. No. 16 is as follows:

"Improving Brazos River, Tex., from Old Washington to Waco: For completion of lock and dam at Hidalgo Falls, $50,000."

Since the submission of the annual reports and estimates information has been received from the district officer in charge that additional funds are required for the completion of lock and dam at Hidalgo Falls, for which Congress has already made appropriations, deemed at the time sufficient to complete. It is therefore believed to be desirable to provide at this time for the completion of the work rather than to postpone such completion until a later date, with consequent suspension of work and probable increased cost.

4. No. 19 is as follows:

"Improving Ouachita River, Arkansas and Louisiana: Continuing improvement by removing snags, leaning trees, and other obstructions between Camden and Arkadelphia, in the State of Arkansas, $7,500."

This amendment provides for continuing work undertaken in accordance with the requirements of the last river and harbor act. A report recently received from the district officer indicates that additional funds for the work will be required to prevent suspension of operations now in progress. While the amount made available by the proposed amendment may be larger than required in the immediate future, work of the character provided for is, as stated on page 34 of my last annual report, "almost always useful and advantageous to the general public." Any small balances left after the execution of the work now immediately necessary will be available for future work of the same kind, the necessity for which constantly recurs on streams like the Ouachita.

Very respectfully,
W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Before the vote was taken I was on the floor seeking the recognition of the Chair with reference to the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very good.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to state that the report covers a great many important matters, and it seems to me it is only fair to the Senate that it should be printed before it is considered. If my objection to the present consideration of the report is good, I shall ask that the report be printed and that the matter come up for consideration to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Minnesota to agree to the conference report was in order, but the Chair will again put the question if the Senator from Nevada asks it. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Secretary of the Municipal Council of Sagay, Province of Negros, P. I., remonstrating against the public utterances of C. D. Worcester, secretary of the interior of the Philippine Islands, in an address before the Young Men's Christian Association, which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

He also presented a petition signed by the officers of the Electric Railway Employees' Association, praying for the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DU PONT presented memorials of Local Grange No. 5, of Newark; of Local Grange, of Milton; and of Local Grange No. 44, of Coolspring, all of the Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Delaware, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NELSON. I present a resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Messrs. Rockne and Moonan offered the following resolution:

"Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a measure known as the Canadian reciprocity treaty, which, if passed, will in all probability affect the farmers of the Northwest; and

"Whereas the provisions and effect of said treaty are little known in the rural communities of the State: Now therefore be it

"Resolved by the senate of the State of Minnesota, That we recommend that our Senators and Representatives in Congress do use all honorable means to suspend action on said treaty until the reassembling of the next Congress in December, 1911, in order that all parties interested may be permitted to fully investigate and determine what effect, if any, such treaty will have upon the agricultural interests of Minnesota; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be at once mailed to our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

Mr. BULKELEY presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 67, Patrons of Husbandry, of Cromwell, Conn., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Natchang Grange, No. 68, of Chaplin, and of Local Grange No. 67, of Cromwell, Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of a full and complete parcels-post bill, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BURNHAM presented memorials of Local Grange No. 44, of Londonderry; Local Grange No. 11, of Hudson; Local Grange No. 239, of Plymouth; and Oceanside Grange, No. 250, of Hampton, all of the Patrons of Husbandry; Andrew T. Felker, Meredith, N. H., lecturer to the New Hampshire State Grange; Mount Livermore Grange, of Holderness; Charles A. Rollins, deputy New Hampshire State Grange, Lake Shore Park; John A. Edgerly, of Wolfboro; John E. Eastman, of North Haverhill; Roscoe I. Blaisdell, master Winnisquam Grange, of East Tilton; Warren Tripp, of Manchester; E. W. Hopkins, master Newfound Lake Grange, of Bristol; R. S. Cross, of West

Canaan; Ellery E. Rugg, of Keene; Harold D. Merrill, master Rumford Grange, No. 109, East Concord; Cyrus Downing, of Wentworth; Charles H. Brackett, of Greenland; H. B. Worthen, deputy New Hampshire State Grange, of Bristol; David L. Amsden, of Durham; Daniel C. Westgate, of Windsor; Albert M. French, deputy State Grange, of Bilsum; Edward L. Patterson, deputy State Grange, of Portsmouth; W. H. Tripp, steward State Grange, of Short Falls; Charles A. Tebbitts, deputy State Grange, of Rochester; F. A. Rogers, deputy State Grange, of Meriden; of Curtis B. Chils, executive committee State Grange, of Henniker, all in the State of New Hampshire; and of Andros Local Union, No. 15, International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, of Lisbon Falls, Me., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of The Christian Herald, of New York City, N. Y., and memorial of Mary Richardson, of Suncook, N. H., remonstrating against any increase being made in the rate of postage on periodicals and magazines, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BORAH. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 8.

To the honorable the President of the United States, the honorable the Secretary of the Interior, and the honorable the Secretary of Agriculture:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent, that—

Whereas townships 46 and 47 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian, State of Idaho, are included in the Coeur d'Alene National Forest Reserve, and the land in said townships was burned over by the forest fires of 1910 and practically denuded of all live timber, and it clearly appearing that whatever value shall be saved from the burned timber must be saved within the next year; and

Whereas the lands included within the said townships are for the most part settled upon by homesteaders who entered upon the lands prior to the including of the area within the national reserve; and

Whereas the Government is resisting the claim of the homesteaders to the said lands, and by reason thereof the settlers have been forced to incur heavy expense and are in uncertainty as to their rights; and

Whereas the settlers have suffered heavy loss by reason of the fires of 1910, which swept over these lands:

We therefore pray that townships 46 and 47 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian, be eliminated from the Coeur d'Alene National Forest Reserve, and that they be made available for homestead entry at once.

Be it resolved, That the secretary of state transmit a copy of this memorial to each of the following officers: The President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and to each member of the Idaho congressional delegation.

This memorial passed the house of representatives on the 15th day of February, 1911.

CHARLES D. STOREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This memorial passed the senate on the 15th day of February, 1911.

L. H. SWEETSER,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within house joint memorial No. 8 originated in the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Idaho during the eleventh session.

JAMES H. WALLIS,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Wilfred L. Gifford, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint memorial No. 8, by Black and Bell, relating to the elimination of townships 46 and 47 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian, from the Coeur d'Alene National Forest Reserve, and that they be made available for homestead entry (passed the house February 15, 1911; passed the senate February 15, 1911), which was filed in this office the 17th day of February, A. D. 1911, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State.

Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 18th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1911 and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-fifth.

[SEAL.] WILFRED L. GIFFORD, Secretary of State.

Mr. BORAH. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint resolution No. 14.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Idaho:

Whereas on account of the arid conditions existing over a great part of this State, which effects great hardship and suffering upon the settlers upon the public lands of the State by reason of the fact that it is impossible for settlers upon said arid land to raise crops or other products, either vegetable or animal, for the support of themselves and families for the residence term of five years now required by the law of the United States; and

Whereas the act of the United States requiring a five-year residence upon a homestead was enacted many years ago, when conditions were different from what they are now, and time and experience have proved that this residence period, whether required upon arid, semiarid, or other lands, is too long and productive of too much hardship and retards the settlement and development of new countries to a great degree; and

Whereas if this period of a residence aforesaid could be lessened to a term of three years much of the hardship now entailed upon settlers by the existing law of the United States would be removed, the finances and revenue of the State would be greatly increased, and settlement upon public lands would be encouraged: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Representatives of the State of Idaho in Congress be directed, and they are hereby directed, to use every effort within their power to secure the enactment of a law by Congress changing the term of residence upon homestead lands of the State of Idaho from five to three years; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish and provide each Representative of the State of Idaho in Congress with a copy of this resolution.

This resolution passed the house of representatives on the 6th day of February, 1911.

CHARLES D. STOREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This resolution passed the senate on the 16th day of February, 1911.

L. H. SWEETSER,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that this house joint resolution No. 14 originated in the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Idaho during the eleventh session.

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Wilfred L. Gifford, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint resolution No. 14, by Davis, relating to changing the term of residence upon homestead lands of the State of Idaho from five to three years (passed the house February 6, 1911; passed the senate February 16, 1911), which was filed in this office the 17th day of February, A. D. 1911, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State.

Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 18th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1911 and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-fifth.

[SEAL.] WILFORD L. GIFFORD, Secretary of State.

Mr. BORAH. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial No. 3.

Good-roads memorial, memorializing the Congress of the United States to transfer 1,000,000 acres of the public land now held by the United States within the boundaries of the State of Idaho to this State for the purpose of creating a fund for establishing and maintaining good roads in the said State of Idaho.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Idaho (the house concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas good roads are one of the great first needs of every State and also one of the surest means of aiding the material prosperity and advancing the settlement thereof, this being especially true in Idaho, where the country is not thickly populated and where the means of communication between the several parts of the State are not numerous: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to transfer 1,000,000 acres of the public land now held by the United States within the boundaries of the State of Idaho to this State for the purpose of creating a fund to be used by the State of Idaho solely for the establishment and maintenance in good repair of the system of public roads within its borders; be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this memorial be sent to each of the members of the congressional delegation from this State in Congress with a request that they employ their best efforts to secure action in the premises.

The above senate joint memorial No. 3 passed the senate on the 6th day of February, 1911.

L. H. SWEETSER,
President of the Senate.

The above senate joint memorial No. 3 passed the house of representatives on the 11th day of February, 1911.

CHARLES D. STOREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the above senate joint memorial No. 3 originated in the senate during the eleventh session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

CHAS. W. DEMPSTER,
Secretary of the Senate.

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Wilfred L. Gifford, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of senate joint memorial No. 3, by Macbeth—good-roads memorial—relating to the transfer of 1,000,000 acres of the public land now held by the United States to this State for the purpose of creating a fund for establishing and maintaining good roads in the State of Idaho (passed the senate February 6, 1911; passed the house February 11, 1911), which was filed in this office the 14th day of February, A. D. 1911, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State.

Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 14th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1911 and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-fifth.

[SEAL.] WILFRED L. GIFFORD, Secretary of State.

Mr. OLIVER presented a petition of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors into prohibition districts, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DICK presented petitions of Conneaut Lodge, No. 424, International Association of Machinists, of Conneaut; of the Trades and Labor Council of Middletown; and of International Molders' Unions Nos. 27, 218, 303, and 430, of Cleveland, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the construction of United States battleships in Government navy yards, which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Irish Nationalists of Ohio, of Dayton, Ohio, and a memorial of the Associated Irish Societies of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of alliance between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Lorain County Federation of Labor, of Ohio, and a petition of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America, of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against any change in the present laws relative to the printing of United States securities and bonds, etc., which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Trades Councils at Newark, Ravenna, Cincinnati, Hamilton, Coshocton, Norwalk, and Maineville, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of Local Lodge No. 375, of Dayton; of Maple City Lodge, No. 470, of Painesville; of Lake Shore Lodge, No. 84, of Ashtabula; of Local Lodge No. 185, of Delphos; of Local Lodge No. 175, of Columbus; and of Lake Front Lodge, No. 260, of Cleveland, all of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, in the State of Ohio; of Cotton Belt Lodge, No. 204, of Jonesboro, Ark.; of Smoky City Lodge, No. 219, of Pittsburg, Pa.; of Local Union, International Union of the United Brewery Workmen of America, of Cincinnati, Ohio; and of Local Union, Wood, Wire, and Metal Lathers' International Union, of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the admission of publications of fraternal societies to the mail as second-class matter, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

OTTAWA, ILL., February 23.

Hon. S. M. CULLOM, Washington, D. C.:

The Illinois Farmers' Institute forwarded to the President of the United States Senate copy of resolutions protesting the ratification of the proposed Canadian reciprocity treaty, asking to have it read in open Senate.

A. N. ABBOTT, President.
H. A. MCKEENE, Secretary.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a petition of Local Union No. 282, American Federation of Musicians, of Alton, Ill., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, omitting the names, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, omitting the names, as follows:

OFFICE OF LOCAL NO. 282, A. F. OF M.,
114 EAST SECOND STREET,
Alton, Ill., February 14, 1911.

Hon. S. M. CULLOM and Hon. WILLIAM LORIMER,
United States Senators from Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned musicians and members of Local No. 282, American Federation of Musicians, Alton, Ill., are greatly interested in the passage of the Bartholdt resolution (H. J. Res. 143), which has successfully passed the House of Representatives. This resolution, in brief, provides that all enlisted musicians are prohibited from entering the competitive field. We hereby petition and request you to use your utmost influence to secure the passage of this resolution in the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. I present a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee relative to the immigration question, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 27.

Whereas the United States Immigration Commission after four years' investigation and the expenditure of $1,000,000 has made a 40-volume report to Congress; and

Whereas it is being proposed that the immigration evils from which the Northeastern States are suffering be relieved by diverting and distributing the aliens now crowding into and congesting the slums, sweatshops, and city centers of the Northeast; and

Whereas the Immigration Commission clearly points out that this is the only country with any considerable net foreign immigration, our laws and administrative policy are the weakest of any new country, and that "substantial restriction is demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations," and the illiteracy test is recommended "as the most feasible single method for excluding undesirable immigration": Therefore be it

Resolved by the State senate of Tennessee (the house concurring), That we hereby memorialize Congress to immediately enact some such illiteracy test as is recommended by the Immigration Commission, as is law in Australia, New Zealand, and other new countries, pass other needed immigration legislation along the lines of the Immigration Commission's suggestions, and do not pass any legislation looking to the diversion and distribution of the kind of alien population that is now congesting the Northeastern cities and causing so many evils there; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be sent by the secretary of the senate at once to the President of the United States, to our two United States Senators, and each of our Representatives at Washington, D. C., with the request that it be presented to Congress and properly referred.

Adopted, February 7, 1911.

N. BAXTER, Jr.,
Speaker of the Senate.
A. M. LEACH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved, February 9, 1911.

BEN W. HOOPER, Governor.

I, W. D. Scruggs, chief clerk of the senate, hereby certify that this is a true and correct copy of senate joint resolution No. 27, adopted February 7, 1911.

W. D. SCRUGGS,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, requesting the passage of the so-called Sulloway pension bill. I ask that the concurrent resolution lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Twelfth Legislative Assembly, State of North Dakota—A concurrent resolution.

Whereas a bill (H. R. 29346) known as the Sulloway bill, granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico, has passed the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States and is now pending in the Senate: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That we heartily approve all of the provisions of said bill, and we hereby respectfully request our Senators in Congress to vote for and use every honorable means to secure its passage by the Senate of the United States just as it passed the House of Representatives, without alteration or amendment as to benefits provided.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, signed by the respective officers of the houses, be sent to each of the Senators and Representatives from North Dakota in the Congress of the United States.

This certifies that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate of the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota and was concurred in by the house of representatives.

USHER L. BENEDICK,
President of the Senate.
J. M. HANLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GRONNA presented memorials of the Farmers' Club of Larimore and of sundry citizens of Emerado, Fairdale, Brocket, and Pembina County, all in the State of North Dakota, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HALE. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Board of Trade of Eastport, Me., which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

EASTPORT, ME., February 22, 1911.

Hon. EUGENE HALE, Washington, D. C.:

Canadian reciprocity agreement protects American sardines and other preserved fish only when packed in oil. Payne bill and previous tariff protected all such products, in oil and otherwise. Ratification of agreement as it stands containing this clause would annihilate only industry of Eastport and almost every other Maine town on coast. We therefore protest emphatically against passage of agreement and solicit your best efforts and vote against it.

EASTPORT BOARD OF TRADE.

Mr. BURTON. I present a letter from the president of the Chamber of Commerce of Cleveland, Ohio, transmitting resolutions adopted by the chamber of commerce relative to the Canadian reciprocal agreement. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CLEVELAND CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
February 21, 1911.

Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor of transmitting to you herewith resolutions favoring the Canadian reciprocity agreement adopted by this chamber unanimously to-day, as follows:

Whereas a reciprocity agreement has been prepared by representatives of the United States and Canadian Governments and submitted to Congress and the Canadian Parliament; and

Whereas in the opinion of the committee on export trade relations of this chamber the ratification of this agreement would tend to widen, strengthen, and improve commercial relations generally between the United States and Canada: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce hereby records its action in favor of the ratification of the agreement now pending in the United States Senate, and requests the president of the chamber to communicate this action to the Senators from Ohio and other States in the Central West.

Very truly, yours, GEO. W. KINNEY, President.

Mr. DEPEW presented memorials of the Central Labor Union of Brooklyn, N. Y., and of sundry citizens of Brooklyn and Syracuse, N. Y., remonstrating against any change being made in the rate of postage on periodicals and magazines, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present telegrams in the nature of memorials remonstrating against the proposed Canadian reciprocal agreement, which I ask may be noted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be noted in the RECORD, as follows:

Telegram from Warren Tripp, of Manchester, N. H.;

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SCOTT. I present a newspaper article, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the matter was read and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

PLEA FOR THE OLD SOLDIERS.

To the EDITOR OF THE NORTH AMERICAN:

I notice in the columns of the newspapers of February 15 that the Sulloway pension bill met with considerable opposition by some members of the Senate, and also an intimation that if it passed it was the intention of President Taft to veto the same.

Can it be possible that a Senator, who receives from $5,000 to $8,000 for six months' services, and a President, who receives from $50,000 to $75,000 a year, and whose positions and environments are the result, in a great measure, of the soldier, who sacrificed home and comfortable surroundings and risked his life and obtained therefor $14 per month, while the common day laborer received $20 per month at home, with the comforts and privileges that the soldier was deprived of, while the business man acquired a competence and many became rich during the war, must now, in his declining days, when health is broken and many in limited circumstances, be provided with a mere pittance for their reward?

Can it be that our statesmen and those who have control of these things have no gratitude in their hearts for blessings that have been brought to them and this great Commonwealth, and will turn their backs on those who have preserved this country and placed them where they are? God forbid that the heart of any man may be seared and hardened that he would forget his most worthy benefactor.

The old soldiers are dying at the rate of about 100 a day, and the sum that is now needed to reward them will be lessened greatly every year.

C. W. AMMERMAN,
Company E, Two hundred and ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

GREENWOOD, DEL., February 17.

Mr. SCOTT. I present a letter signed by J. H. Brown, of Pittsburg, Pa., an old soldier, together with a newspaper article, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying newspaper article were read and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

PITTSBURG, PA., February 22, 1911.

Hon. Senator SCOTT.

DEAR SIR: I will inclose a clipping out of a Cleveland paper. Please read it to the Senate; ask the gentleman how many of them would like to come to that day to have to offer their bodies for sale after being broke down sleeping on the cold ground and exposed to all kinds of weather and hardships. We hope they will change their minds—those who are fighting against the old soldier.

Yours, truly, OLD SOLDIER J. H. BROWN.

VETERAN TO SELL BODY TO SCIENCE—"WHY SHOULDN'T I GET $50 FOR MY OLD BONES? WE NEED THE MONEY NOW."

CLEVELAND, January 20.

Fred Beach, aged 66 years, Civil War veteran and resident of Nottingham, suburb of Cleveland, offers his body for sale for $50. He is induced to make this offer because of inability to find any kind of work that he can do and want of money to support himself and his aged wife.

Besides, he believes, his body would prove valuable to medical science for dissection because of a peculiar disease with which he has been afflicted all his life and which doctors have been unable to help.

"I've not long to live, and why shouldn't I get $50 for my old bones?" asks Beach. "I'll have no use for them after I am dead, and we need the money now."

His wife approves the offer of sale.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

H. R. 32440. A bill authorizing the Moline, East Moline & Watertown Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the south branch of the Mississippi River from a point in the village of Watertown, Rock Island County, Ill., to the island known as Campbells Island;

H. R. 31652. A bill to authorize the Central Vermont Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the arm of Lake Champlain between the towns of Alburg and Swanton, Vt.; and

H. R. 32213. A bill to authorize the city of Portsmouth, N. H., to construct a bridge across the Piscataqua River.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 10785) to legalize a bridge across the Pend Oreille River in Stevens County, Wash., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1228) thereon.

Mr. PENROSE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 10792) to promote the erection of a memorial in conjunction with a Perry's victory centennial celebration on Put in Bay Island, during the year 1913, in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Lake Erie and the northwestern campaign of Gen. William Henry Harrison, in the War of 1812, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1229) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 4246) for the relief of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Co., reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 32082) limiting the privileges of the Government free bathhouse on the public reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., to persons who are without and unable to obtain the means to pay for baths, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1230) thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 10026) for a flashing light, fog signal, and keeper's quarters at the Point Pinos Light Station, Cal., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1231) thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3202) to authorize the President to place Ensign John Tracey Edson on the retired list of the Navy with the rank of lieutenant, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1232) thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 16th instant, proposing to increase the cost for the United States post-office and customhouse building at Wilmington, N. C., by the sum of $200,000, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 10808) authorizing the Greeley-Arizona Irrigation Co. to build a dam across the Colorado River at or near Head Gate Rock, near Parker, in Yuma County, Ariz., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1233) thereon.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. MARTIN. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 32400) to authorize the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Delaware River from Lower Makefield Township, Bucks County, Pa., to Ewing Township, Mercer County, N. J.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, a bill identical with the one just reported by the Senator from Virginia has passed the Senate and gone to the other House. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill just reported, so that the matter may be disposed of.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the votes by which the Senate ordered to a third reading and passed the bill (S. 10632) to authorize the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Delaware River, from Lower Makefield Township, Bucks County, Pa., to Ewing Township, Mercer County, N. J.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFECTIVE RECORDS IN MILITARY OR NAVAL SERVICE.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 276) modifying certain laws relating to the military records of certain soldiers and sailors, and I submit a report (No. 1223) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 3, after the words "during the," to strike out "year 1910, and" and insert "Sixty-first Congress," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That in all laws approved during the Sixty-first Congress having for their object the removal of disabilities accruing from defective records in the military or naval service of the United States, the words "Provided, That, other than as above set forth, no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to or by reason of the passage of this act" shall not prohibit or prevent the granting of a pension on an application made after the approval of this act, and accruing only from the date of said application.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The House joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

HENRY HALTEMAN.

Mr. BROWN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 20003) for the relief of Henry Halteman, and I submit a report (No. 1226) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 8, after the word "in," to strike out "Company" and insert "Battery," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Henry Halteman, now a resident of Ohio, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Battery F, Second Regiment United States Artillery, on the 18th day of August, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THOMAS C. CLARK.

Mr. BURNHAM. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 18542) for the relief of Thomas C. Clark, and I submit a report (No. 1224) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] to the bill.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Thomas C. Clark, inspector of construction, quartermaster's department at Seattle, Wash., $758.75 to reimburse him for household goods destroyed by a fire which consumed the quartermaster's warehouse at Seattle May 7, 1906, which goods were in the custody of the United States Government for transportation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED LAKE RIVER BRIDGE, MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 32220) to authorize the board of supervisors of the town of High Landing, Red Lake County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red Lake River. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. THORNTON. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands I report back the bill (H. R. 26290) providing for the validation of certain homestead entries, and I submit a report (No. 1225) thereon, with the recommendation that it pass. The report of the House committee is that it pass. The bill has the approval of the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture. It is a bill for the relief of homesteaders in certain States. It involves only Washington, Oregon, and the Territory of New Mexico. The time is limited to next year. Therefore it is important to those interested that the bill should be passed. For these reasons and at the particular request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] I ask that the bill be now considered.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN MARSHALL.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 24153) for the relief of John Marshall, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 1227) thereon.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask that that bill be taken up now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, after the word "April," at the end of line 7, to strike out "twenty-ninth" and insert "twenty-fourth," and after the words "sixty-five," at the end of the bill, to insert "from the United States Navy: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws John Marshall, late of Company F, Sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, the Third Independent Battery New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and the United States Navy, shall be deemed to have been honorably discharged April 24, 1865, from the United States Navy: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

S. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution authorizing the printing of the message of the President, together with the report of the agent of the United States in the North Atlantic coast fisheries arbitration at The Hague.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5912) to establish and disburse a public-school teachers' retirement fund in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BURKETT. Very well. I thought morning business had been concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska withdraw his request for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa submits a resolution and asks for its present consideration. The Secretary will read the resolution (S. Res. 366) for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate a bill for the amendment of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," in so far as it respects the Dominion of Canada, commonly known as the Canadian reciprocity measure: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the Senate, for its use in the consideration of said bill, all the information secured, and the tables and statistics prepared by the board of experts, composed of Henry C. Emery, James B. Reynolds, and Alvin H. Sanders, relating to the various articles and commodities named in said bill, and especially to the following, viz, pulp wood, wood pulp, and paper of whatever value; wool, whether raw or farther advanced in manufacture; woolen thread, cloth, and clothing; cotton thread, cloth, and clothing; carpets, boots and shoes, iron ore, pig iron and manufactured iron and steel, coal, meats, and flour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. I do not rise to object. I think the information would be very valuable. I wish the Senator would add to it—if not, another resolution can be offered—that all papers and documents relating to the negotiations between the experts of the State Department and the Canadian commission resulting in the so-called reciprocity agreement be sent to the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. The suggestion of the Senator from Maine touches an entirely different phase of the subject.

Mr. HALE. It does, undoubtedly.

Mr. CUMMINS. And I should prefer that his suggestion be made the subject of another resolution. I have embodied in this resolution those things which I think the Senate will need in its consideration of this measure. I have asked immediate consideration so that there may be no delay in furnishing the information, to the end that we may be enabled to consider it when the bill comes before us.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Iowa is right about that. I think we should have this information at a very early day, and I desire it all the more because I have reason to believe that the bill which has passed the House and is now in the Committee on Finance, which will very soon make some report on it, was never submitted to the Tariff Board, and that the Tariff Board was not consulted with regard to its provisions and had no knowledge. That is an additional reason why the resolution of the Senator from Iowa ought to be passed, and the sooner the better.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CARTER. Let the resolution be reported again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again report the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. DIXON. I wish the Senator from Iowa would include in the specially enumerated list agricultural implements.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection whatsoever to that suggestion, but it will be observed that the resolution calls for all the information which the Tariff Board has gathered respecting all the articles named in the proposed arrangement with Canada, and agricultural implements being included within that arrangement would be within the terms of the resolution.

Mr. DIXON. The only thing, if the Senator from Iowa will permit, is that certain articles are specifically named and given special prominence. So far as my section of the country is concerned, while the tariff duties are entirely taken off of all of our products, agricultural implements, which our people must necessarily buy, are still left on the protected list. It is only a suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the suggestion will not lead to the general amendment of the resolution I have no objection to the inclusion of the words "agricultural implements" in those specifically mentioned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "iron and steel," in the last line, add "agricultural implements."

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that in the items specifically mentioned there are a number of items that are not included in the Canadian reciprocity agreement. Does the Senator desire the information upon those items with a view of considering them as proposed amendments or does he desire the information for some other reason, because, as I said, there are a number of items mentioned that are not included in the agreement?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah has very accurately guessed my purpose. A great many of the articles specifically mentioned are not included in the agreement at all, and my purpose is to propose such amendments to this arrangement as will permit the free introduction into the United States from Canada of those things which the farmer buys, as well as the things which the farmer sells. Therefore I have included this list of articles, and I desire to know, if the Tariff Board has the information, whether there is any reason for still retaining the duty upon those things. I want, however, the Senator from Utah to fully understand my purpose. I have no intention at the present time of offering amendments that will attempt to change the duties which Canada prescribes upon our exports into Canada, only the duties upon the exports from Canada into the United States.

I desire here to correct what seems to be a very general misapprehension. Under the terms of the arrangement itself it can be changed if we reduce the duties below those which we have agreed to give Canada without consulting Canada at all.

Mr. HALE. Of course, the Senator——

Mr. CUMMINS. One more word. If we allow this opportunity to pass, we can not hereafter independently give to Canada the free importation of these things without at the same time giving to the whole world free trade in these things; and I do not intend to allow this opportunity to pass if I can help it.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly the Senator is right. His design is broad and large. If what he desires is carried out, it carries the whole subject over; it has to be the subject of a new negotiation with Canada. In that regard I sympathize with the purpose of the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not concur in the last statement made by the Senator from Maine. For instance, this agreement prescribes a certain duty upon meat imported from Canada into the United States, and we have agreed by the terms of the bill, if it were to become a law, that we will not increase the duty on meat above that named in the arrangement. But we can reduce the duty on meat from Canada into the United States or take it away entirely without interfering in anywise whatsoever with the arrangement or without incurring the danger, if it be a danger, of another reference to the Dominion of Canada.

Now, I do not say that this is what should be done. I only say that I want the information, and I think the Senate ought to want the information from the board of experts which for now two years has been laboring in this direction to secure information for the use of the Senate and the House whenever our tariff again came into controversy or into dispute. I can not imagine that there could be any objection whatever to furnishing the information.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. ROOT addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield, and to whom?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota, because he addressed the Chair first.

Mr. NELSON. Does it strike the Senator that this discussion upon the duty on Canadian meat is rather academic, when they can bring the cattle across the border without butchering them at all and get them in free?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not attempting to analyze the various mysteries of this matter. I simply know that I want the information the Tariff Board has, and I am well informed that it has collected very valuable information with regard to many of these things.

I now yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator from Iowa if it is his understanding that Congress can reduce the tariff duties on the articles mentioned in the schedule to the agreement below the stipulated point without rendering us liable to reduce those duties to the same extent to all countries with which we have most-favored-nation treaties.

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe, Mr. President, that it can be done. I do not intend to dispute or to enter into a debate on the matter. I had no intention of debating it at all, because I realize that we are trespassing upon the time allotted to the Senator from Indiana. I will not further debate it. I simply ask consent for the passage of the resolution.

Mr. ROOT. I did not intend to debate it. I did not like to allow the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa to pass without notice, for I have very serious doubt whether it is any more competent for us to reduce duties below the schedule figures with immunity from the favored-nation clause than it would be by a separate and independent bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, before the matter passes, I wish to say that from some examination of what has been done by the Tariff Board I agree fully with the Senator from Iowa. Its work has been most admirable. Its methods have been of the very best kind. It has visited through its different members the great establishments in this country and in Canada interested in this whole question of taxation and reciprocity, and has accumulated a valuable mass of testimony that will be of the greatest importance to Congress either now or at some future time in another Congress. I have nothing for that board in respect to its duties but satisfaction and praise for the conduct it has shown in its examinations.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I presume the amendment I am about to propose may not be deemed necessary, but it is in conformity with a form which has heretofore been followed, and I think it should be adhered to in this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, first, is whether there is unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution before any amendment is in order. Is there objection to its present consideration? The Chair hears none. Now amendments are in order.

Mr. CARTER. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "requested," the words——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to suggest——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana has the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CARTER. I will be glad to yield to the Senator, but I think the amendment can be disposed of before a colloquy could take place.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does not appear likely. It is immaterial to me, however.

Mr. CARTER. I move to insert, after the word "requested," the words "if not deemed incompatible with the public interest." I make this suggestion because the resolution calls for correspondence with another country.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "requested" insert the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to; and, without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Saturday, immediately after the morning business, I shall ask permission of the Senate to submit some remarks on the Canadian reciprocity agreement.

MOBILE RIVER BRIDGE, ALABAMA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 31538) to authorize the Pensacola, Mobile & New Orleans Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across the Mobile River and its navigable channels above the city of Mobile, Ala., which was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "mouth," to strike out the semicolon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

H. R. 32865. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 32866. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912.

H. R. 29708. An act to constitute Birmingham, in the State of Alabama, a subport of entry was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 32212. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

KANSAS NATIONAL FOREST LAND.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 32571) to consolidate certain forest lands in the Kansas National Forest.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, that bill was read in full yesterday. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] reported a bill exactly similar from the Senate Committee on Public Lands. He thought when the bill was read yesterday that it changed somewhat the phraseology of the Senate bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, on an examination of the report made upon the Senate bill, I find that the same matter is incorporated in the House bill, and so far as I am concerned it is entirely satisfactory.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 10707 of like title will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection.

POLICE AND FIREMEN'S RELIEF FUND.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 288) for the creation of the police and firemen's relief fund, to provide for the retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such retirement, and for other purposes, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 2, line 6, after the word "Columbia," I move to insert "except such fines and forfeitures as are authorized by law to be paid to the Washington Humane Society."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BATTLESHIPS FOR ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from the previous legislative day, which will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read Senate resolution 364, submitted yesterday by Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In deference to the wishes of the Senator from Indiana, who desires to begin his remarks in conclusion of his speech, I will ask that the resolution go over for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Both resolutions?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Both.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolutions will go over for to-day.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to certain charges relating to the election of WILLIAM LORIMER, a Senator from the State of Illinois, by the legislature of that State, made in obedience to Senate resolution 264.

Mr. BEVERIDGE rose.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Indiana if he will kindly yield to me for just a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, some days ago I gave notice that I would briefly address the Senate on the Lorimer election case. The Committee on Appropriations, of which I chance to be a member, has a great deal of work before it. At the present time I am engaged in a conference on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and will very soon be engaged in considering the naval appropriation bill, which the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has charge of. I see very little opportunity for me to discuss this question without neglecting other important public business. But beyond that, Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary that I should do so, because I feel sure that the resolution will be defeated. For these reasons I will not burden the Senate with any remarks of my own. I beg to thank the Senator from Indiana for his courtesy.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BURROWS. Before the Senator from Indiana commences his concluding remarks, I desire to state that I am advised by the Senator he will be able to conclude what he has to say in two hours, or about that time, after which there will be two or three hours of this legislative day remaining, and——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? I will say that in the course of twelve years' experience here it is the first time I personally recollect any Senator attempting to put another Senator within any definite limit of time. The Senator asked me how long I should take in submitting some remarks to the Senate, and I told him I could not tell; possibly I said an hour and a half or two hours; but I do not know how many interruptions there will be, and I shall base my remarks upon the record and they will be directed to the importance of the case.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not think the Senator will object to my request. That was simply preliminary.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know; the Senator has objected to eight requests of mine. I will hear the Senator's request.

Mr. BURROWS. The request I desire to make is that a vote may be taken upon this matter before the close of this legislative day. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to say it is perfectly uncertain, I suppose, what further debate is to occur on this matter or how long the Senator from Indiana or other Senators may choose to speak; and I can not consent to any agreement of that kind, because I think it is of the utmost importance that the Senate should have another executive session at the earliest possible moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I will ask unanimous consent——

Mr. STONE. I will state——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has yielded to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yielded to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that a vote may be taken to-morrow at 4 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I desire to submit some observations on this case. I have no objection to a vote being had at the earliest possible moment, but I do not care to have a particular hour set for the vote to be taken. It might obstruct the purpose of Senators who would desire to speak. I object to the request.

Mr. BURROWS. Would the Senator object to a vote on Saturday at 4 o'clock?

Mr. STONE. I will not object to a vote on any day, but I do object to fixing an hour for the vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I can not yield further for requests at this time to the Senator from Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri, as the Chair understands, objects to the request of the Senator from Michigan, and the Senator from Indiana now claims the floor, to which he is entitled.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Michigan knows very well there is a proper time within the proprieties to make such a request, and not in the midst of a Senator's remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE resumed the speech begun by him on the 21st instant. After having spoken for some time,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Will the Senator from Indiana be kind enough to suspend for a minute while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business? It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

Mr. BORAH. I will ask the Senate to lay the joint resolution aside by unanimous consent, with the suggestion that when the Senator from Indiana shall have finished I will call for the regular order. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE resumed his speech. After having spoken in all nearly three hours and a half, with interruptions,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to interrupt the Senator if he desires to continue.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I had hoped to conclude to-day, but, as you all remember, I was delayed from beginning for more than an hour this morning, when I had expected to begin early.

Mr. LODGE. I should like very much to have an executive session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall very gladly yield, although I do dislike to continue my remarks from day to day, if it is understood that immediately after the morning business to-morrow I may conclude.

[For Mr. BEVERIDGE's entire speech see Senate proceedings of February 24.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise for the purpose of asking the Senator from Indiana, who almost a month ago was extremely anxious to get a vote on this case, as the RECORD shows, whether or not he can suggest to us when we are likely to get a vote on this resolution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I can not. There are three or four Senators that I know of who intend to address the Senate on this subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is the Senator as anxious to get a vote as he was three or four weeks ago when he importuned us to let him have a vote?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is the Senator from New Hampshire as anxious to get a vote now as he was to delay a vote then?

Mr. GALLINGER. I never in my life undertook to delay a vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the contrary, I said I was ready to vote at any time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The reason I asked the Senator was that the Senator from Michigan asked me almost the same question, and in view of the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire repeats almost the question of the Senator from Michigan I put it that way.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not present when the Senator from Michigan asked that question. But personally I am anxious to vote on this resolution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will tell you what I personally think about this matter. I think this matter ought to be voted upon as soon as the discussion of it is concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have only eight days of the session left.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will bear me out that for weeks I have refrained in this matter, and to-day I was delayed an hour in beginning, as compared with the time I should have begun, or I would have concluded by this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am content, having asked the question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the best answer I can give.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope we may have an early vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Really, I do not know——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator from Indiana yielded to me.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LODGE. I yield for a moment to the Senator from Pennsylvania; but I desire to keep the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. I only want to state that I am unfortunate enough to have charge of quite an important appropriation bill, and I had some hopes of asking the Senate to consider the Post Office appropriation bill to-morrow morning. There are a number of other appropriation bills to be considered. The chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is here now. I should like to ask him whether he will make a request now to get a vote in the Lorimer case before the 4th of March, or have some day fixed so that we may know a little about the business of the Senate in connection with these general appropriation bills that must be passed before adjournment.

Mr. BURROWS. I was out for a moment. I do not know what is the request of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no request.

Mr. LODGE. He made no request. I made a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not know what notice has been given, or I would know a little better where I am at.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall either have to resume to-morrow morning, after the morning business, or go on now. I would have finished to-day if I had been permitted to begin on time.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the Senator proceed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will do as the Senate sees fit.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest that we do not interrupt the logical continuity of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator I can not get through this evening.

Mr. BURROWS. Can not the Senator proceed this evening and conclude his remarks?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How is that?

Mr. BURROWS. Is it not possible for the Senator to conclude his remarks this evening?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; anything is possible that is within the limits of a Senator's strength. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] thinks there is a matter of very great importance for which he wants an executive session. I will say this, which the Senator knows, that I would have proceeded yesterday afternoon for an hour but for the fact that as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee I knew that a matter of very great importance was to be considered, and I yielded to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, who moved, most properly, that we should go into executive session, else I should have taken an hour or an hour and a half yesterday afternoon. And to-day, as Senators will bear witness, I was not permitted to begin for more than an hour after the time I expected to commence.

Mr. BURROWS. How much more time does the Senator from Indiana desire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just as much as is necessary to conclude this case. I do not intend, and Senators will bear me witness, that I never do, to take in the discussion of the case one minute more than the importance of the case and the facts therein justify.

I will say this to the Senator: If the Senator had early in this session agreed that we might all confine this discussion to a day certain, this debate could have been concluded within two weeks. But no, it was strung along, strung along. I did not want to speak at all.

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator from Indiana is prolonging the debate, it seems to the Senate, very unreasonably.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How can the Senator say what it seems to the Senate? Since when was the Senator the Senate?

Mr. BURROWS. When will the Senator be able to close?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will be able to close when I get through, and I think I will get through pretty early to-morrow.

Mr. BURROWS. We are trying——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to suggest, while Senators are discussing the question as to when they are going to vote, that there is one very important matter before the Senate upon which a vote can be taken at any time that suits Senators. That is Senate joint resolution 134. If Senators will agree to a time I will ask that to-morrow, after the Senator from Indiana has finished his remarks, we take up that matter and proceed with it until it is finally disposed of. I make that request—that we take up Senate joint resolution 134 after the Senator from Indiana has concluded his remarks to-morrow, and that we dispose of the joint resolution and all amendments upon that day before adjournment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that when the Senator from Indiana has concluded his remarks to-morrow Senate joint resolution 134 be taken up and proceeded with until disposed of.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not think I shall take very long.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will include in that request the Lorimer case also I will not object, and will use my best efforts to bring about a unanimous-consent agreement or fix another day for a vote on the Lorimer case.

Mr. BORAH. I only desire to take charge of the matter of which I have been in charge in the Senate as a member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. I think it would be more proper for the Committee on Privileges and Elections to control the other matter.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I ask the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections whether he will not add, as an amendment to the request for unanimous consent, that a vote on the Lorimer case to be taken on Monday next.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator from Indiana and the Senate agree to take a vote upon the Lorimer matter at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Indiana before adjournment to-morrow? I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is one request for unanimous consent pending—that presented by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us get that out of the way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. It is disposed of.

Mr. BURROWS and others addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield, and to whom?

Mr. LODGE. I desire to make my motion. I will yield to the Senator from Michigan, however, if he desires to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that a vote may be taken upon the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Lorimer case before the close of the session to-morrow.

Mr. OWEN. I object.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the morning business, I shall resume my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 55 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at 6 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 24, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 23, 1911.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PASSED ASST. PAYMASTER EDWIN M. HACKER.

The SPEAKER. A request was made that the bill S. 10476 should remain upon the Speaker's table, a similar bill being on the House calendar. Inadvertently it was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Without objection, it will be returned to the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. An act for the relief of Passed Asst. Paymaster Edwin M. Hacker.

Mr. MANN. What good would it do to keep it on the Speaker's table? It is a private bill and can not be taken off the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Well, there seems to be a question about it.

Mr. MANN. I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be returned to the Speaker's table.

DISTILLED SPIRITS IN INTERNAL-REVENUE WAREHOUSES.

Mr. DALZELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 29466) to provide an allowance for loss of distilled spirits deposited in internal-revenue warehouses, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 2232), ordered to be printed.

WATER SUPPLY OF SEATTLE, WASH.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. There seems to be but one bill there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 5432 may be read as amended.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be read as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands in township 21 north, ranges 9, 10, and 11 east, and township 22 north, ranges 8, 9, 10, and 11 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington, are hereby withdrawn from all location, settlement, and entry under the public-land laws: Provided, That this withdrawal shall in no way operate to interfere with the right of any settler or other claimant under the public-land laws to complete a claim to any portion of such land heretofore lawfully initiated.

SEC. 2. That upon the deposit, within one year of the passage of this act, by the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, with the Secretary of the Interior, of a sum estimated by him as sufficient to pay the cost of the survey herein provided for, the said Secretary shall cause to be executed a survey defining the limits of the drainage basin of Cedar River within the area withdrawn by section 1 of this act and pay for the same out of the appropriation for public-land surveys, and a sum sufficient to pay the cost of such survey shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the appropriation for public-land surveys, out of the sum so deposited by the city of Seattle, and the remainder of the sum so deposited, if any, shall be repaid to such city, and upon the completion of such survey and its approval by the Secretary of the Interior the lands withdrawn by section 1 of this act not within the drainage basin of Cedar River shall be restored to their present status.

SEC. 3. That upon the deposit with the Secretary of the Interior within one year of the passage of this act, by the city of Seattle, State of Washington, of a sum estimated by the Secretary of the Interior to be sufficient to cover the cost of the examination and appraisal herein provided for, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall each designate one qualified appraiser, and the two appraisers thus designated shall designate a third appraiser, who shall be a resident of King County, Wash., not a Federal officer or employee, who shall be familiar with the stumpage value of timber in the locality to be appraised, and the board of appraisers thus constituted shall proceed to an examination and appraisal of the present commercial stumpage value of the timber on the public lands within the drainage basin of Cedar River in the area withdrawn by section 1 of this act, the cost of such examination and appraisal to be paid out of the appropriation for public-land surveys. Upon the completion of such examination and appraisal and its approval by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture a sum sufficient to pay the cost thereof shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the appropriation for public-land surveys, out of the sum deposited therefor by the city of Seattle, and the remainder of such sum, if any, shall be repaid to said city.

SEC. 4. That within one year after the approval of the survey and appraisal provided for in this act, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to patent to the city of Seattle all of the public lands within the drainage basin of Cedar River in the area withdrawn under section 1 of this act, upon the payment by the said city of Seattle of the sum estimated by the board of appraisers provided for in section 2 of this act as being the present commercial stumpage value of the timber on the public lands within such area: Provided, That if the sum of such estimate shall be less than the sum of $1.25 per acre for all of the lands to be patented the city of Seattle shall pay the sum of $1.25 per acre for said lands

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MORSE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if it is proposed to deed to the city of Seattle these 22,000 acres at the stumpage value of the timber, if it does not amount to more than $1.25 an acre.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If it does amount to more than $1.25 an acre. The Senate bill recommended that the city be permitted to purchase it at $1.25 an acre; but this bill provides that it shall be appraised by a board and the city shall pay what the timber is worth.

Mr. MORSE. If the timber is worth more than $1.25 in the market, the city is to get the land for nothing?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The land is of no value; everybody concedes that.

Mr. MORSE. Why did you not have the land estimated with the timber?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No one claims that the land is of any value. The land all lies above 2,000 feet and is rocky cliffs and not worth anything. What value was attached to it would be for the timber purposes. Even if it was level land, it is so high that it is of no value for agricultural purposes.

Mr. MORSE. The city of Seattle is about to get the water supply from that basin?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They are getting it there now.

Mr. MORSE. And this bill is to protect the water supply?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; so that we can control it. The gentleman will notice that we already have the most of it.

Mr. MORSE. As I understand, the city has 85,000 acres.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. This land is so interwoven with what the city owns that it would be all the time causing us trouble, and the city prefers to control it.

Mr. MORSE. I am not going to object, but I certainly think that the city of Seattle ought to pay for the value of the land as well as for the value of the timber. If the land is not worth anything then there would be no danger in having that put into the appraisement of value.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PARSONS. As the bill came from the Senate there was a nominal price put on the land. There was a report from the Forest Service showing that the timber had considerable value, and therefore the committee thought that it was fairer to put the real value, which is the value of the timber, as the price to be paid by Seattle instead of the nominal value, put in the bill by the Senate, which, of course, was very much less than the real value would be.

Mr. MORSE. It seems to me that the only fair thing would be to pay for the value of both the timber and the land. I do not know what kind of land they have in that State, but if you have 105,000 acres that is not worth a cent——

Mr. MANN. I can assure the gentleman that it is not like Wisconsin farm lands.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. All this land lies at an elevation above 2,000 feet, and when you get above 1,500 feet the land is utterly worthless for agricultural purposes on account of the frost. All of this good land was taken up before this forest reserve was ever established. The gentleman ought to remember that this is to protect the health of 240,000 people, and we are willing to pay all that the land is worth.

Mr. MORSE. I think it is perfectly proper for the city to purchase the land and for the Government to make it easy for the city to buy the land. But there were lands in northern Wisconsin that were appraised at $1.25 an acre for agricultural purposes that are worth thousands of dollars for mining purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no mineral here.

Mr. MORSE. I think the proper thing is to appraise the land and also the timber.

Mr. PARSONS. There is an extensive report from the Forest Service in regard to this land, and there was no suggestion in the report that there was any mineral on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. You would not expect a report on the mineral resources from the Forest Service?

Mr. PARSONS. The Forest Service was opposed to the bill, and had a report made by the supervisor of the Forest Service.

Mr. MORSE. Did you inquire of any department official whether this land contained a mineral deposit?

Mr. PARSONS. I do not recollect whether that inquiry was made or not.

Mr. MONDELL. The report of the Interior Department is clear on that point. I think the report of the Forest Service makes the statement in regard to the nonmineral character of this land. It is notorious, known of all men, that there is no mineral in that country.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report of the Secretary of the Interior on this bill states that there are no mineral deposits upon this land.

Mr. JAMES. But that report made by the Secretary of the Interior does not accompany this report made to the House.

Mr. MONDELL. We had several reports on the subject.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am personally familiar with that land, and most of it is on the top of the Cascade Mountains. There are cliffs there more than 1,000 feet high; much of it is nothing but barren rock. The land that the city wishes to buy does not extend down to the valley at all.

Mr. JAMES. Seattle wants this land for the purpose of water supply.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is for the purpose of protecting her water supply.

Mr. JAMES. Of course she does not want any mineral that happens to be there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. There is none there.

Mr. JAMES. For the purpose of protecting the Government, why would it not be a wise thing not to give to Seattle the mineral rights which are in this land?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is not customary to issue that kind of patent; and I wish to say this to the gentleman, that even if there should be minerals on this land, which I happen to know, not personally, but from testimony of expert witnesses, because I was the attorney for the city in making the condemnation of this land, I know there are no minerals in that section of the country. This was thoroughly investigated at that time. But suppose there should be coal, it is much more valuable to have the water supply protected, and thus protect the health of the people of the city of Seattle, than it is to have somebody prospecting for coal on the tops of those mountains.

Mr. JAMES. That may be all true; but the time may come when you might not need this to protect the health of the people of Seattle, and yet the mineral might be worth millions of dollars.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say to the gentleman I was the attorney of the city when that land was originally condemned and that question was gone into fully.

Mr. JAMES. I am not doubting the good faith of the gentleman——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Let me finish the statement. At that time the question was brought out before the court and experts were placed on the witness stand, and the testimony was at that time conclusive that there were no minerals upon this property.

Mr. JAMES. I am not questioning the good faith of the gentleman. Of course I know he can not see any further into the ground than any of the rest of us.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was quoting the sworn testimony of the experts who testified in that case.

Mr. JAMES. I have seen reports of experts on property that there was no mineral there, and other experts have shown that there was mineral. I think, of course, it would be wise if this mineral right were reserved to the Government.

Mr. MANN. It is not quite like giving this to a private individual.

Mr. JAMES. I admit that, because it goes to the city of Seattle.

Mr. MANN. It goes to a part of the public anyhow.

Mr. JAMES. It goes to a limited part of it, and representing a broader part, that does not get any of it, I think it might be wise to look after our interest.

Mr. MANN. It is not different, I suppose, in that respect from any grant of public land, like a homestead, where we have endeavored to reserve minerals, and yet——

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object to this bill, but I want to say right now, if there are any more of these bills that come in here giving away public land without compensation I am going to object. I do not believe the city of Seattle should be given these 22,000 acres without compensation. I think the city of Seattle is just as well able to pay for its land as the poorest individual in the country. I am not going to object, because I understand what the circumstances are, and I am willing to take the word of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], but I do not believe it is good policy. If we are going to appraise the value of the timber, we should appraise the value of the land, and if we are going to give our land away to anybody, let us commence by giving it away to the poor people who need it, and not to the rich cities that can afford to pay for it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWLAND. I object.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, while I do not propose——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOWLAND] has objected.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 5432 as amended.

Mr. JAMES and Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The amendment has been read, and it is not necessary to read it again. The gentleman from Washington is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky to 20 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] five minutes.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was considered in the committee I was inclined to object to it because it seemed a departure from the policy that we had adopted in regard to public lands that had water supply for cities on them. In connection with Portland, Oreg., we did not grant to the city any land. We simply passed a law prohibiting trespassing on the land and leaving it to the Forest Service, in connection with the officials of the city of Portland, to police the land to prevent the pollution of the water supply. In the case of Seattle it is somewhat different. Eighty-five thousand acres are involved, and the city of Seattle already has 63,000 of those 85,000 acres. It will only acquire 22,000 acres from the Government. Manifestly it is economy for the Government to allow Seattle to police these 22,000 acres and let Seattle be at the expense of caring for it rather than have the Federal Government be at the expense, and the size of the city and the growth of Seattle are such that we are perfectly satisfied it will have the ability and inclination to maintain this land in proper shape for a water supply and to prevent pollution. Therefore I think the bill should be passed. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Does the gentleman desire to use any time?

Mr. JAMES. Yes. We want to be heard over here. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this character of legislation is this: We have had considerable trouble heretofore about public lands in the last few months. We are told now Seattle only wants this land for the purpose of protecting its water supply, but yet we find that 22,000 acres of the public lands is by this bill to be given to the city of Seattle at not less than $1.25 an acre. A board of appraisers is created for the purpose of fixing the value of the timber upon this land, and the least price that can be fixed by them is $1.25 per acre. There is nothing said about the mineral deposit in these thousands of acres, no price fixed upon the mineral, and nothing said about minerals at all. Now, we do not know what Seattle will do with the land, but Seattle may very "generously" with a "kind council" deed it over to some individual at, say, $2 an acre, and some individual or corporation may find this land is prolific in mineral and that it is worth thousands upon thousands of dollars. Now, if the gentleman from Washington is right, and I do not criticize his good faith in the matter, that Seattle only wants this land for the purpose of protecting its water supply, then I would suggest to him that he ought to offer an amendment to this bill reserving to the Government of the United States its right and title to the minerals in this land. To throw this in here at the last hour of the session——

Mr. MANN. Will that be satisfactory?

Mr. JAMES. It will be satisfactory to me. If the gentleman will propose an amendment reserving to the Government all right and title to the minerals, if there be any there, I have no further objection to the bill; but I am unwilling that a bill that is considered at the last hour of the session shall be brought up under a motion to suspend the rules and that it should be passed by this House, when, in a few months from now, perhaps it may be discovered that Congress has given away valuable mineral lands worth perhaps millions of dollars. If the city of Seattle only wants to protect its water supply, it is not necessary to give them the minerals in the land to do that thing. They are asking the Government to be most generous to them in giving them this land at the price paid, which is merely the assessed price of the timber, and I entirely agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that the minimum price is too low, and when you once establish a precedent of this sort you will find this House considering day after day bills to give away Government lands that belong to all the people of this Republic to cities, and then the cities may sell and deed them to private individuals, and you will find valuable mineral lands of this country owned by a few men. Now, if the gentleman will propose an amendment to reserve to the Government of the United States all mineral deposits, and so forth, I have no further objection to make to it; but unless that is done, I believe the House should defeat it. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is remarkable how some gentleman's imagination wanders afield the moment you suggest the sale of a little Government land. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] says if certain things should happen and if certain other things should happen then possibly something would happen which might be unfortunate.

There are 82,000 acres of land in the watershed of Cedar Creek. Approximately 40,000 acres of that is occupied by settlers and has been purchased by the city of Seattle; about 20,000 acres of it belong to the railroad as a part of its grant, and the city has made a contract with the railroad to buy its land at $2.50 an acre. Now, there are about 20,000 acres of Government land scattered through these other lands, largely rock slides, snow banks, mountain tops, and so forth, with here and there some timber on it. On much of the land no individual would pay taxes. That country has been open to exploration ever since the Pacific coast was settled, and no one has suggested that there is any mineral in the country. The railroad would not be selling this land for $2.50 an acre if there was mineral under it; the settlers would not be parting with their land for practically what they paid the Government for it if there was mineral under it.

Now, the objection to the amendment by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is this—that it is not the policy of this Government, and it ought not to be, to issue limited patents where there is no rhyme or reason for so doing. The Anglo-Saxon people have been accustomed to and desire fee patents, and they ought to have them, and because some gentleman imagines that somewhere mineral might be discovered, of which there is no geological indication or surface indication, the presence of which no man has dreamed of, is no reason why we should depart from our immemorial custom and issue a limited patent. The city of Seattle is a city of 250,000 people and soon will be a city of half a million people. They already own three-quarters of the land in the watershed. The remaining one-quarter is the poorest part of it, the part the settlers did not want and would not take, the part not owned by the railroad company, and we are proposing to sell it for whatever the timber on it is worth; and the testimony before the committee is to the effect that the land has little value; that it is not fit for mineral purposes, much of it not fit to grow timber on. But it is area in a watershed.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. JAMES. Is there any provision in this bill that provides that if Seattle undertakes to sell this property that you are now asking the Government to give to the city it shall revert to the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. There is not, and there ought not to be. When the Congress of the United States sells to a municipality of a quarter of a million people, or half a million people, land for the use of the municipality, the Congress of the United States may very properly take it for granted that the municipality is going to retain the land for the purpose for which it obtained it, and if we did put such provision in the bill it would not be more than three or four years before somebody would be here asking to have the limitation taken from the bill. Where we part with land to municipalities and States, it ought to be without strings; it ought to be in fee, providing it is proper to make the transfer. And the committee has gone into this matter in very great detail, has had hearings. Nobody has raised the question of the mineral character of the land. Nobody believes the land has any considerable value. We provide for the appraisement of the timber and that the city shall pay whatever it is worth, but not less than $1.25 per acre.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. JAMES. You take the position that there is no mineral there?

Mr. MONDELL. I do; and that it has been the custom of the Anglo-Saxon people for all time, and has been the custom of all free people who do not believe in the monarchical doctrine that the mineral belongs to the king, it has been the custom of all such people to grant patents in fee, and patents ought to be granted in fee unless you are doing what we did in regard to the coal lands last year, namely, grant surface patents to land known to contain mineral, with reservation of the mineral. In this case a reservation of mineral that is not there simply gives people an excuse to trespass on the pretense of seeking mineral——

Mr. JAMES. I would like to know if it was the doctrine of the Anglo-Saxon people to give mineral in fee to cities when the corporation comes and asks it for only a water supply.

Mr. MONDELL. It has always been our policy, and we have never departed from the policy of granting fee titles unless we were proposing to give surface patents on mineral lands.

Mr. JAMES. Why do you not exempt it, if there is none there, and that will stop the argument?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. JAMES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt the good faith of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] or of the people of Seattle in asking for this transfer; neither do I doubt the statements made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. But it seems to me there is a danger in this kind of legislation that will come from the precedent, if we establish it here, and if we have had a contrary precedent heretofore, it is time, it seems to me, that we should establish a new one.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. We have been selling public lands and disposing of public lands in this way for a hundred years.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; and I think we have disposed of a good deal of public land that we ought not to have disposed of.

Now, here comes the city of Seattle and asks for two or three thousand acres of Government land. They say to Congress, "We want this to improve our water supply." And Congress says, "We will give you that land for the purpose for which you ask it, but we want to put in a provision that any minerals in that land will not be conveyed, but shall be reserved to the United States Government." That does not interfere with the use for which you want the land. If you are honest and fair in what you ask this condition will not interfere with your getting every right that you are here asking for, so that this kind of a limitation can not hurt you. On the other hand, if we do not do this, if we do not put on a limitation, even though there be no mineral in this land—and I presume that there is not—it would establish a precedent of giving away land without this reservation; and we will be sure to meet it time and time again in the future when individuals and corporations and municipalities will be asking for some of the public domain for some specific purpose, when perhaps the real purpose is something that is not known or understood at the time.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; in just a moment.

Now, instead of the limitation suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] I want to suggest a different one. It is a limitation that the land should not be alienated by the city of Seattle without the consent of Congress, or something of the kind. Personally I would not care if the land did have coal under it if the city of Seattle were to get the benefit of it, and a limitation that would prohibit the city from alienating the land without the consent of Congress ought not to be objectionable to the advocates of this measure.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. Is there anything on record to show that any of the land in question contains coal or other valuable minerals?

Mr. NORRIS. I understand there is not.

Mr. SULZER. Then that ought to settle the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. But there can be no objection to safeguarding it by adding this limitation.

Mr. SULZER. That being so, what is the use of arguing about it?

Mr. NORRIS. That being so, what is the reason why we should not put in this limitation, if it does not take anything away from you, if there is not anything to take?

Mr. SULZER. Well, I have no objection to it.

Mr. JAMES. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. NORRIS. It has been customary——

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman from Wyoming has considerable to say about giving a full title in fee, and yet we have passed a law whereby the homesteader, where there is any indication of coal, gets only a surface title.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; not where there is an indication, but where there actually is coal.

Mr. NORRIS. Where somebody says there is; yes. The title is not hurt by making the reservation, and the same is true of the city. It would not injure the city of Seattle a particle to put on here a limitation such as that which the gentleman from Kentucky suggests, or to provide that the city of Seattle shall not alienate this land without the consent of the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman approve of the policy under which we shall reserve minerals in all patents in the future?

Mr. NORRIS. That is not involved here.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; it is. If you do it now, you ought to do it in every case hereafter.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman says the city of Seattle wants it for a specific purpose, and we say we will give it to the city for that specific purpose, and the gentleman refuses to accept it in that way.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, this is for the purpose of protecting the water supply.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If the minerals were reserved, would not anybody have the right to go upon the land and make an examination for the minerals? Would not anybody have the right to prospect on the land?

Mr. NORRIS. What objection would the gentleman from Washington have to an amendment that would prevent its alienation without the consent of Congress?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have no objection whatever to such an amendment, if you can agree on that.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection, but what I am thinking of is the pollution of the water supply. Would not anyone have the right to go on this land and pollute the water supply while searching for minerals?

Mr. NORRIS. It might be that we ought to have some regulation as to that, but simply going on the land to hunt for minerals would not pollute the water supply.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suggest that a limitation be placed upon this bill, providing that the land shall not be alienated by the city of Seattle without the consent of Congress.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that it be so amended.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I would object to that provision for this reason, that it would prevent the Government ever using the mineral if it were found there.

Mr. NORRIS. Let the city of Seattle use the mineral. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Just as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested, we do not want people to go in there prospecting.

Mr. JAMES. I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says that some people's imaginations commence to run wild as soon as there is any talk of the sale of public lands. I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that we are not trying to sell public lands. This proposition is to give away public lands. We provide that the timber on the land shall be valued, and if the value of the timber does not amount to more than $1.25 an acre then that is what is paid for the timber and the land, but if the value of the timber amounts to $1.25 or more an acre the land is given away.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MORSE. If it amounts to $1.25 or more an acre, the land is given away.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said I did not see any reason why the General Government should give away this land to the city of Seattle, or any other city, for less than it is worth. According to the hearings, the railroad company is getting $2.50 an acre for the land in the same basin—land of the same kind and quality. Why should the Government get only half as much as this railroad company is to receive for it? If they wanted to be fair in this matter, why did not they provide that the land and the timber should be appraised and the city pay the appraised value of the land and the timber? I believe that would have been fair. I believe that is all any city can fairly ask of this Government and I believe that is what this bill ought to have provided. If they will appraise the timber and the land and then give a title in fee, I have no objection; but if they are going to give the land then let us reserve what the city does not need.

If there is water power there, let us reserve it. They are only to pay $27,500 for this 22,000 acres of land. If there is mineral there, let us reserve it. Why should we give mineral if we are not going to give timber? Of course, nothing has been said with regard to water power, but this is a valley up in the mountains. There is water there, of course. That is why the city of Seattle is securing this land. Now, what is $27,500 compared to the value of even one little water-power plant. We do not know that there is any there. In fact, we do not know very much about this proposition, and I believe it is the part of wisdom for this Government to reserve what the city of Seattle does not want.

Mr. KITCHIN. Do you not believe it is better and wiser for us to have some idea of its value and to have the land appraised by the Engineer Department, or under its supervision, and then let us know something about its value before we begin to give it away or sell it?

Mr. MORSE. There is a provision in the bill for an appraisal.

Mr. KITCHIN. We give it away on their appraisal by this act.

Mr. MORSE. That is true.

Mr. KITCHIN. Congress ought to know something about the value of it before it passes the title.

Mr. MORSE. We are giving away the title to the land. These appraisers are not called upon to appraise the land at all, they are simply called on to appraise the timber on the land, and it does not make any difference whether the land is worth 10 cents or $50 an acre, we give away the land. It seems to me that the gentlemen who are in favor of the passage of this bill, who want the lands for the purpose suggested, to protect the water supply, ought to be willing to put a provision in the bill at this time reserving the title to whatever minerals there may be on the land.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I offered an amendment, but the gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. JAMES. What is that?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I offered an amendment against the alienation of the land.

Mr. JAMES. I objected to the amendment providing that the land should not be alienated by Seattle, as that would still give Seattle the right to allow the land to be mined.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Would the gentleman from Kentucky object to this amendment at the end of section 4?—

And provided further, That there is hereby reserved to the United States all mineral deposits in said lands and the right to dispose thereof and to use such lands for such purposes.

Mr. JAMES. That is the amendment I suggested long ago; that is satisfactory to me.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be amended as follows: Line 20, page 5, insert:

And provided further, That there is hereby reserved to the United States all mineral deposits in said lands and the right to dispose thereof and to use such lands for such purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the suggested modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 20, after the word "lands," insert: "And provided further, That there is hereby reserved to the United States all mineral deposits in said lands and the right to dispose thereof and to use such lands for such purposes."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to modify his motion as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs that Senate joint resolution 145, providing for the filling of a vacancy which will occur on March 1, 1911, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress be transferred from the Private Calendar to the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the transfer to the House Calendar of this bill having been made, I ask unanimous consent to suspend the rules and pass the Senate joint resolution 145.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to suspend the rules and pass Senate joint resolution 145, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, which will occur on March 1, 1911, by the resignation of the Hon. John B. Henderson, to take effect on that date, be filled by the appointment of Mr. John B. Henderson, jr., of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rule was suspended and the Senate joint resolution was passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 32436) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, and pending that I ask unanimous consent that all general debate on the bill be closed in one hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by myself and 30 minutes by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy bill, and pending that asks that all general debate be closed in one hour, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. DODDS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose to have entered at some length into a discussion of Army matters at the time this bill was taken up, but on account of pressure of time, and on account of lack of voice ability to make a general discussion, I propose to occupy a part of my time now and then, by unanimous consent, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Iowa extending his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it has been asserted on this floor and reiterated elsewhere that the Army of the United States is in a deplorable condition. I am unable to learn what facts justify such statements. When I assumed membership in the Committee on Military Affairs the Army of the United States had the same organization which had prevailed from the days of the colonies. It was the old single battalion with one colonel, one lieutenant colonel, and one major with 10 companies, and the entire Army was limited to $25,000 men.

Mr. WEEKS. How long ago is that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Prior to the Spanish War. When I became chairman of the committee, the total expenditures for the Army were about $25,000,000 a year. It was small in its enlisted force. It was limited in the line to 33 officers for a regiment and in the staff to the lowest possible number. From the close of the Civil War Congress seemed to have but one idea as to the Army, and that was to reduce the complement of officers. The result of the Spanish War enabled the Committee on Military Affairs to reorganize the Army. Without that war I doubt if anything could have been done for national defense. Immediately before the breaking out of hostilities with Spain, just before war was declared, the Committee on Military Affairs reported a bill here to make the three-battalion organization of Infantry, and to secure favorable action it cut down the officers to the point of only providing for one additional major for each regiment, making in all 25 additional majors.

It provided that a lieutenant colonel should command one of the three battalions in time of war, and in time of peace each regiment of the Infantry should have only eight companies, to be increased to 12 companies in time of war, the third battalion to be commanded by the lieutenant colonel. That bill was defeated in the House by an overwhelming majority. It was defeated because the Congress did not believe we ever would have war. So faulty was our organization that when war came governors of States sent telegrams to the Committee on Military Affairs urging us to change the law of the United States so that in time of war the Army of the United States should conform to the organization prescribed by the States for the National Guard. They had a modern organization in the guard. The Federal Government had laws fastening on the Army an obsolete organization, and requiring the militia to conform to this in time of war. That provision enabled the committee when war came to secure a change in the law, and by small changes we improved the Army organization, until in 1901 a modern organization was provided for the Army.

We had the three battalions, and increased the officers from 33 to 50 for each regiment, not counting medical officers in either case. It was believed then that ample provision had been made for all the officers we would ever need for an army, both line and staff, for we at the same time increased and rearranged every staff corps of the Army.

I still think if the Army was not used in so large a measure for purely civil work, the provision then made would have been ample. But with the increase of officers there grew up an increased demand for detail of officers for duties not military, until to-day we have 728 officers absent from their commands and a shortage of officers which threatens to seriously impair the efficiency of the Army.

Army schools have been established on a large scale, and officers have been detached from their commands after passing middle life to pursue their studies, and other officers have been detached to instruct them. Some of the higher schools, like the Army War College, are of great benefit, but in many cases much more benefit would be had by regimental schools and keeping the officers with their companies and regiments. In my judgment, the best school for an officer is service with troops, and I would require all captains to remain with their companies.

To my mind the service would be improved by curtailing the elaborate system of schools and ordering many officers back to their commands. A most excellent article on this subject will be found in the Journal of the Military Service Institution, December 10, 1910, by Col. (now Gen.) George S. Anderson. I invite your attention to the following quotations from the article:

I yield to no man in my appreciation of education, knowledge, culture, and all that these words mean, but I do not believe that they can be attained by compulsory methods, or by recitation from a book. There must be an inborn tendency—a feeling of necessity for knowledge—before it can be stored away. We all recognize the man who "knows it all," and is always ready to impart it; the man who will teach German politics to Bismarck, science to Huxley, or a coyote how to find his way back to his hole; my remarks have no reference to him.

RETROSPECT.

But I wish to go over with you the list of epidemics of wisdom that we have gone through in the last 26 years, and we may from it draw a lesson.

When I first joined my troop I was promptly made post-signal officer—among other honors. For about two years I had signalling all of the time—wand, flag, torch, heliograph, and telegraph; night and day, winter and summer, one eternal grind.

I was proficient in the code and could use it in any way, on any instrument. To-day I hardly remember half the letters, and would be pronounced deficient by any board. Signaling was the disease of the day, and when it had run its course it died and was buried. All the later tendencies in that line have been toward moderation and sense. Now, it is not thought necessary to instruct all of your men all of the time, but a few men for a short season. That is well and proper; a troop should always have a few men fairly instructed—the serious business to be attended to by men who enlisted for that purpose, in the signal corps, and who have nothing else to do or to think of. About two years later the map-making bacillus became active. If one went across his front yard, or his back yard, he had to submit a map. If he went by day or by night, alone or with assistants, over new country, or by the side of a railroad, or over a road that had been known and traveled for years by daily coaches, there was no let up, no reason, no excuse. The map must come. And that is why the old maps, issued from department headquarters, are so unreliable; the men who made them invented them upon their return to the post, and fitted them as well as possible to their reports. That craze also died, and now we find the map making done by a few who are known to be efficient, and their work is good.

Next came the target craze; every man to shoot every day and all the time. But we all know how this incubus has been whittled down of late years.

Then we had the education mania; it seems that it, too, is adjusting itself to reason, and we hope—but for the record of the past we should doubt. A man who is 25 and wants to go to school may be benefited; but if he don't want to go it is far better to leave him at home. All the learned professions hold annual conventions, at which are read valuable professional papers; but if these were prepared "by order" they would be valueless and the professions would become the laughing stock of the world. Our latest disease seems to be the medical profession. All line officers are taught hygiene, pathology, physiology, anatomy, and surgery—and I question when materia medica and gynecology will follow.

Law has had its course and now we are in the beginning of its sensible period—the period of decline. In looking over the field of human learning and endeavor we find but one branch neglected, and that must have its turn next—it is theology. If that does not come within the next year and a half, I fear that I shall be able to miss it—and pass to the retired list; but partially educated at last.

And we have had schools and schools. The Military Academy and the Artillery School date back before my recollection; but since 1871 there have come up, in turn, the Signal School at Fort Myer, the Infantry and Cavalry at Fort Leavenworth, Willets Point (for the line), and Fort Riley. They are good and should be continued for those that want the education, but not for those who only wish, by attendance at them, to escape the routine duties of their station. We are often told that everyone should have some "hobby," some fad by which he shall be known and distinguished. Well, I agree with this, but the fad should be our profession and that part of it which is our daily life, or will soon become so, not the command of an army of millions or its proper organization. Let us think of our men; their daily wants; how to feed, clothe, and care for them; to make them comfortable and contented in barracks and in the field; stimulate them to reasonable and proper activity; find out their wants and their needs; teach them to care for their horses; to keep themselves dry and warm on campaign; to be happy, cheerful, and efficient. This is better than all the learning of all the books. There are, no doubt, many valuable things to be learned by study and reflection. I take it that at the present day the tendency of all the officers of the Army is in that direction. We have all ruined our eyes by a constant tension at the short focus of a book, while our Indian antagonist still can see the battle from afar.

If I were given a choice as to the assignment of a lieutenant to my troop, I had much rather take one who was ready and anxious for field service all the time, one who spent six days of each week in hunting and fishing, than one who spent all of his time in study, whose head was crammed with the sum of human knowledge and who had the intellect of Voltaire.

Do we not know men who can repeat, page by page, all the books of the learned Leavenworth lieutenants, and yet who are helpless on the drill ground under the most ordinary situations?

Quick decision, rapidity of movement, and accuracy of calculation are the essentials, and these are worth more than all the learning their heads can hold.

Our great authors of war literature prior to the past decade were Jomini, Hamley, and Halleck. Not one of these ever won a battle. They were coldly logical in the study, but helpless on the field in the presence of conditions as they did exist, which were so different from the way they had planned them. Wellington said that "Waterloo was won on the playgrounds of Eton and Harrow." The pluck, endurance, alertness, and bravery displayed on the football fields last fall would suggest the members of these teams as the ones first to be called upon in case our country needed officers. They would command and lead and their men would follow. I had far rather command men who had not learned the German way of being killed in scientific battle, but who, like the Greeks at Thermopylæ, or Gen. Jackson's men at New Orleans, died when and where their officers pleased.

The staff of our Army has dictated that the line, and the line only, is in need of education.

The object most carefully considered by all ruling powers is how to utilize for purposes of war all the manhood and resources of the nation; how to be perfectly prepared on shortest notice. This is the duty and function of the General Staff. For this object study and education are necessary, and they are the ones who should be arrayed twice each week on the benches of the schoolroom and be made to "say their lessons."

We have grasped the shadow of German methods, but our staff got hold of it first, and they have thrust its corroding substance upon the line, while the staff has remained an amused spectator.

What we should teach our men are the lowly virtues, not arithmetic and science. Lord Wolseley has said that "fearlessness, daring, endurance, contempt of death, self-sacrifice, readiness to die for country or some other cause," all these are virtues which have often saved nations when at their last gasp. And I will assert that they are not learned from the schoolmaster at the blackboard, nor with a table of logarithms. We should teach them to be honest, truthful, brave, tidy, and punctual, to respect authority and the Government that provides for them.

I maintain that every man that leaves my troop with character "Good" after three or five years' honest and faithful service is a better man than he would have been had he spent these years at a seat of learning; he is better able to care for himself; a better man; a better citizen. I quote again from Lord Wolseley. He says: "We have numberless examples in history of nations steeped in literature and learned in the schools of philosophy which were destroyed, almost exterminated, by hordes of barbarians who knew nothing of letters, and who thought the best thing to do with a library was to burn it."

The virility of the men will be the winning card in the short, sharp, decisive wars of the future. Without active, acute, virile officers the energy of the men will be thrown away or wasted. The officer who burns the midnight oil on the eve of battle studying from the books how to meet emergencies that may not—probably will not—arise, and then loses 15 minutes of valuable time in the morning, is holding the bag for the other man's snipes.

Look at China! Her struggle for learning is now shared by all classes, and it has created a contempt for the hardy, active, fighting man, and with her great wealth and immense hordes she was overthrown in one short campaign by the few small isles of Japan.

The possibilities of any arm of the service can not be learned from books; they must be ground into one by close observation—by the individual training of every man. We should know our men well—where they came from; what their character; of what capable—then we will know what we may expect. This can not be found out during a college detail, or one on the staff of the governor of a State.

It is difficult to overestimate the moral advantage that would accrue to the side that won the first important engagement in a war, and I will wager that the commander of that force will be a man of action and not a man of books and theories. Enter the battle with the thought that you are invincible and the thought will largely influence the fact. The wisest plans are useless unless executed with energy and vigor and forced to a successful issue. The execution of a wise plan is far more difficult than its conception.

But it may be said that a commander should be both a learned man and a man of action. This were most desirable, but history shows very few such, and they were born, not made. Napoleon was eminently a man of action, and personally looked after the most trifling detail of every campaign. When he became old, fat, and inert he lost Waterloo and the throne of France.

The conditions that influence the result of a war are too numerous and uncertain to be made the subjects of textbook calculations; wind, rain, snow, condition of roads, nature of soil, morale of troops, their degree of fatigue—these all affect the calculated results to an unknown degree.

The breaking strain of a line of troops will depend more upon its morale than upon the number of casualities, and its morale will come entirely from its subordinate commanders. Nervous energy will give out, and then comes the effect of sound bodies, held by sound discipline. They will believe there is no difficulty that they can not overcome.

My contention is that the whole system of our education is wrong, faulty, wasteful, and a humbug. There is too much of an effort to "constipate our minds with undigested learning." There seems to be a desire to hasten the millennium by the superior education of us all. It is easy to know every rule of strategy and war and yet not win battles, as it is easy to know that shorter catechism, the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments and yet not be saved. There come times when none of these good guides seem to fit.

Of course we should read, study, and know what is going on, but this we all do without having it forced upon us. Our studies should fit our rank and position and not aim to teach how to organize and equip, control, and maneuver armies of millions. The severe lessons of our late Indian campaigns are worth far more to us than all the campaigns of Napoleon or Moltke.

As suiting my purpose I will make several quotations from a lecture on the "Professional study of military history," printed in the November (1897) number of the Military Service Institution Journal (reprint from Journal R. U. S. I.):

"One purpose is the increase of the personal efficiency, the making the soldier a better soldier, the enabling him to do better the work which lies before him to-day and to-morrow. But since soldiers are of all ranks and of all ages, the work before them is not the same for all. The general in utilizing the experiences will need some of one class; a subaltern those of another; some which are simple and clear to the old soldier are Hebrew to the young one."

"A mere bold catalogue of distances is remembered for examination purposes only, like the arithmetic tables."

"His elder brother had told him that he was learning how great generals had handled armies, and that the principles they followed were called by a very big name, 'the eternal principles of strategy,' and that he was about to buy a thick quarto book in a red cover (Hamley) to learn what they were."

"They are of value to you as practical soldiers, for increasing your worth and power as practical soldiers, and for enabling you to do your duty in the field."

And much more there is in this valuable and interesting paper that I would like to quote, but time forbids.

Let us not overshoot our mark; let us "stick to our lasts;" it is the true secret of any business. Why do we want to be taught a little of everything under the sun? It will make us poor in everything. The sum of human knowledge is now too great for any man to have even a moderate acquaintance with more than a single branch of it. Our branch is the command of troops, and those only in small bodies; let us stick to that.

I had three cousins in the grocery business in New York City, and they all made comfortable fortunes, but they did not call their clerks to recitations and require them to know how eggs were made or butter was laid. Their business was to know how to deal them out, and whom they could or could not trust.

There seems to be with many a widespread tendency or craze to be talked about; to live in the glare of public opinion by voice and by portrait. All this tends to destroy earnestness, originality, and genuine power, which is always solitary. Much of our recent military literature that we are required to study gives us "that tired feeling," which is a sure sign that it has overshot the mark.

The poorest use on earth to which an intelligent lieutenant can be put is to have him go on as officer of the guard once a week during his service as a lieutenant and be eaten by the guardhouse bedbugs. In our Army he will have to serve from 15 to 30 years, or even more, as a lieutenant, and if he has not learned all there is to learn of guard duty after three or four tours, he had better seek other fields of endeavor and usefulness; he is not fit for military life.

Not long since I had a conversation with the man who, perhaps more than any other, was responsible for the original Lyceum order of 1891. He seemed astonished when I expressed much the views that I have here written down. I went further in the matter of the value of out-of-door, free, independent life for men and officers.

I told him that I thought that lieutenants on first joining ought to be made to go out and hunt, study nature, learn to sleep on the ground, be practical even if they did not see the inside of a book for years. He said, "Yes; but can you make them do it?" I replied, "No; you can't make anybody do anything satisfactorily if he don't want to, but he will take more kindly to my medicine than to yours and make less of a face over it." It surely will do him more good; and then if it should have the probable reward of preferment, promotion, soft details, and glory, there will be a bonfire of books and a purchase of shotguns all along the line. No man can perfect himself in both theory and practice at the same time; with us let the practice come first; the man who learns wing shooting solely from the book will have an empty game bag. It may be asked how it was that we completely subdued the Indians, when they were so superior to us in practical things. It is a most simple matter; our recruitment was constant and came from the whole inhabitants of the land, while theirs was suspended during hostilities, and they had but a small tribe to draw from. In spite of all our news bureaus and glowing reports, they ever beat us two to one.

It is time we called a halt in this cramming process, before we merit the reproach of Festus to Paul, "Much learning doth make thee mad."

It is a sorrowful contemplation that many of us have passed the age at which either practice or theory can be of much service; history shows that we arrive at this state before we reach the exemption epoch, 50 years.

Napoleon was not 52 when he died. The great men of our late war were all young; their ages on the breaking out of the war were:

Grant, 39; McClellan, 34; Thomas, 45; Canby, 43; Hancock, 37; Sedgwick, 47; Lee, 55; Early, 44; Longstreet, 40; A. P. Hill, 36; Ewell, 44; Sherman, 41; McPherson, 32; Meade, 45; Buell, 43; Schofield, 29; Hooker, 45; Beauregard, 43; Van Dorn, 40; Stuart, 28; D. H. Hill, 41; Sheridan, 31; Halleck, 46; Rosecrans, 42; McDowell, 42; Ord, 43; Johnston, 54; Jackson, 38; Hood, 30.

In all this long list Lee and Johnston are the only ones as old as I am to-day, and most of them had the advantage of actual service in the War with Mexico. We ancient officers of low rank are simply "military vegetables, without ambition as without hope." What have we to profit by learning, or how will it improve us?

Compulsory education and the doctor's part in war—anatomy, surgery, hygiene, and first aid—are now our hobbies; these will die and many of us will rejoice at the burial of their remains. But some other craze will occupy the field. It would seem that we ought to enter upon the solution of it in a rational way, but all history shows that we will not. Whatever it may be it will hold the boards for a few years before it descends into the grave in the condition of Lazarus after four days' postponed burial. In the meantime essays will be written upon it, without sense, reason, originality, or excuse for being. Books will be written that may bring promotions, honors, and general contempt. But long essays, like this, and ponderous volumes are no surer evidence of learning or ability than the odor of musk is evidence of harlotry. The immortal author of that military classic, the "Peninsular War," closes his history with these words, which will fittingly close my paper:

"Fortune, however, always asserts her supremacy in war, and often from a slight mistake such disastrous consequences flow that in every age and in every nation the uncertainty of arms has been proverbial.

"War is the condition of this world.

"From man to the smallest insect, all are at strife; and the glory of arms, which can not be obtained without the exercise of honor, fortitude, courage, obedience, modesty, and temperance (there is no word here about book learning) excites the brave man's patriotism, and is a chastening correction for the rich man's pride. It is yet no security for power. Napoleon, the greatest man of whom history makes mention; Napoleon, the most wonderful commander, the most sagacious politician, the most profound statesman, lost by arms Portugal, Germany, Italy, Poland, Spain, and France. Fortune, that name for the unknown combinations of infinite power, was wanting to him, and without her aid the designs of man are as bubbles on a troubled ocean."

Let us not know too much, but do more; let what we do fit our present and prospective spheres; we will thereby more surely force fortune to perch upon our banners.

We have details on many lines which we should not expect the Army to shoulder. Army officers are detailed for a vast amount of civil work entirely outside of the river and harbor business which is undoubtedly of benefit to the Government but should not be charged to military expense.

We have a large number of the best of the officers on the Panama Canal. We have a large number detailed in the Philippine Islands, all doing valuable work at less expense to the Government than it could be done by civilian employees. But is it fair? In the popular mind it is charged up to the military establishment, where as a matter of fact it should be charged to the civil establishment. I am not finding fault with the fact that we are doing this work if we had officers enough to do it and also supply the Army. I am only calling attention to the injustice of this constant cry of the great military expense, when the military establishment of the Government in this line of work is saving to the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars. Take, for instance, the man in charge of the Panama Canal. The Government was willing to pay $30,000 a year for an engineer who could do the work, and would have been satisfied to pay $50,000 for a chief engineer who could give assurance of success, and yet the high-priced civilian engineer could not show results in that work and carry it on to the satisfaction of the Government. An Army officer, a lieutenant colonel, with the flat pay of $4,000 a year, took the work, and from the day he took charge of it until the present it has been prosecuted not only with ability but with energy that promises the early completion of the work. [Applause.]

On June 30, 1910, 140 officers of the active list were performing civil or nonmilitary duty. One officer and 54 noncommissioned officers of the active list and 35 officers of the retired list were on duty with the Organized Militia of the several States and Territories and of the District of Columbia, and 64 officers of the active list and 25 officers and 24 noncommissioned officers of the retired list were on duty in connection with the military departments of civil educational institutions. All of these officers and noncommissioned officers receive their pay and allowances from the annual appropriations for the support of our regular military establishment.

The garrison at Yellowstone National Park and the troops assigned to station for about five months of each year in the Yosemite and Sequoia National Parks are engaged exclusively in policing the parks, a duty which is in no sense military, yet the pay and allowances of the officers and enlisted men, as well as the cost of construction and maintenance of the military stations in the parks, are included in the appropriation for support of the Army. The Signal Corps troops engaged exclusively in parks, and in the construction and operation of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system are also paid from Army appropriations, though the cable and telegraph system is used largely for the transmission of commercial and private messages.

The pay and allowances of officers and enlisted men performing civil, militia, and other duty not pertaining strictly to the Army, the cost of maintenance of troops engaged in policing parks, and in the construction and operation of the Washington-Alaska cable and telegraph system, and the mileage and transportation for troops attending military tournaments, expositions, and so forth, amounted to the following for the fiscal year 1910:

	Pay and allowances.	Subsistence.	Transportation and quartermaster supplies.	Total.

Talk about the Army of the United States being in a deplorable condition! Why? The press of the country say it has not ammunition for one battle, and it has been deplored that we were short of ammunition. I am talking at this time only about what the Military Affairs Committee has had jurisdiction of. The ammunition and supplies for the Artillery are supplied by the Appropriation Committee. When the Spanish War closed we were using the Krag-Jörgensen rifle. It was at that time one of the best rifles known. There have been improvements made by the Ordnance Department since then by which we have now an army service rifle much better than the Krag-Jörgensen, but each of them in many respects similar, the later improvements, however, adding greatly to the efficiency of the United States service rifle now being used. As soon as the new rifle was perfected the Ordnance Department commenced the rearming of our troops with the new gun, and the Krag has gradually been withdrawn and kept as a reserve. It does not use exactly the same ammunition and is not interchangeable with the improved gun, but it is a valuable weapon and in an emergency would be of great value to the country.

We have to-day 650,000 of the improved rifles ready for use, and with the 350,000 Krag-Jörgensens now in reserve, which could be used in an emergency, we can arm 1,000,000 men in the mobile army to-day to face any foe that comes to this country. They talk about ammunition. We have accumulated metallic ammunition of small arms ammunition enough to furnish—I have forgotten now, but I will put it in my remarks—within 28,000,000 rounds of the supply the Ordnance Department thinks we ought to have as reserve, reaching up into the hundreds of millions of rounds of metallic ammunition. It is true that in the artillery branch of the Government there is a scarcity of powder. It is true that in time of war we would have to draw on all other reserves we could possibly tap in order to supply ammunition for our artillery, but that comes from another committee, and I regret exceedingly the committee reporting the fortifications bill yesterday did not give to the War Department every dollar they asked for ammunition for the artillery. They should have done it. We have a small army, and we ought not to be niggardly in supply of munitions of war that will enable us to confront an enemy if the time does come when it is necessary. I am not one of those who are preaching the doctrine that we must have war or we will have war in the near future. I am one of those who preach the doctrine that while there is a possibility of war it is criminal negligence on the part of the Congress of the United States not to make reasonable preparation for it. [Applause.]

I hope that we never will have war, but the history of the past does not justify the belief that we never will have war. I believe this Government, Mr. Chairman, should provide a great reserve of the Volunteer forces of the country. One hundred thousand Regulars for taking care of our insular government and for our police protection at home, but in my judgment this Government should enter upon a policy at once of organizing and equipping an army of 250,000 reserve, not Regular soldiers, but men in the different localities trained so that they can be called into action at once, not officered by the governors, but officered by the President of the United States as part of the national reserve; and in my judgment this force could be provided and could be maintained at an expense of not over twenty million a year. The best volunteers we ever had were the provisional regiments organized for service in the Philippines. I believe in the National Guard, but it is a State force. Its first duty is to the State and it can only be called out through the governor. It is officered by the governor, it is independent of the General Government, it is a valuable reserve line of defense for the country, but primarily it is a State force, and my objection is that it is not a force which can be at once put in action. That they have many splendid officers—my criticism on the way it is officered is this: That in nine cases out of ten it is good fellowship that wins their promotion. In too many cases it is good fellowship which wins promotion to field officers. The man who can go around with the best cigars and who is the best mixer is the one who gets to be major in most instances.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Has the gentleman read the amendment of the Steenerson bill that has been reported into this House?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and I believe it will be a great benefit.

Mr. TILSON. Will not that to some extent relieve the gentleman's objection?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It will, if the bill becames a law and the provision is enforced, be of great benefit.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not what he advocates is not substantially embodied in the bill to pay the Organized Militia?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have so stated, and I think that it partially goes in that direction, but it is not officered by the President.

Mr. DALZELL. It is in that direction.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and I think a very valuable advance. The best Volunteer officers we have had, I think, in this country were, as stated above, in the case of the provisional regiments sent to the Philippine Islands, officered by the President largely from men who had seen service and on recommendation of the commanders of the Volunteer forces. They were not in any sense a State force. I know a great many men say we did well enough during the Civil War and all regimental officers were nominated by the governors, but I do not regard our experience then any criterion for now.

It answered then, but the world has made a wonderful advance since the days of the Civil War in the science of military operations.

Mr. TILSON. May I interrupt the gentleman before he leaves that point? Does not he think that this remedy would apply: That although the governors may select the officers, that they may be thinned out and the inefficient ones removed by examinations now required and by schools of instruction, and so on, now required by the department?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, very much; yes. But no matter if the President does appoint, he has to appoint largely from the recommendations from the different parts of the country. However, it makes him responsible for the officers and makes them easier to be removed than if appointed by the governors. Let the governors retain in their control all militia, because it is a State force, but let the Federal Government control the Federal force.

Going back to the Civil War and taking the argument that the militia is all that is necessary, I want to call your attention to the fact that it was militia that fought the Civil War on both sides.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They did not fight like it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They fought like it at first at Bull Run. It was simply a question of which would get panic-stricken first. But when 1865 came there probably never was marshaled in any land at any time in the history of the world such a splendid body of fighting men as was found on the American Continent, both those that wore the blue and those that wore the gray. [Applause.] If at that time we had had trouble with any foreign nation, we would have had an army, taking the two together, of a million and a half of men that would have been invincible against any other million and a half of men on earth. Simply the ordering of Phil Sheridan and his corps down to the Rio Grande caused the French Government to move out of Mexico. But the whole history of our country shows that your raw recruit can not be depended upon until after he has been trained to be a soldier. Washington said:

> Regular troops alone are equal to the exigencies of modern war, as well for defense as offense, and when a substitute is attempted it must prove illusory and nurious. No militia will ever acquire the habits necessary to resist a regular force. The firmness requisite for the real business of fighting is only to be attained by a constant course of discipline and service. I have never yet been witness to a single instance that can justify a different opinion, and it is most earnestly to be wished that the liberties of America may no longer be trusted in any material degree to so precarious a dependence.

The War of 1812 has been frequently referred to here. We had a great force of raw recruits defending our Capitol. England landed a small regular force, and our troops at Bladensburg ran before the firing had begun, practically, although they outnumbered the British four to one. They had not been in training long enough to have confidence in themselves or in their officers. Those men were just as brave as any men who ever enlisted under our flag, but you have to give an army the steadiness of courage and confidence in themselves and their officers before they will be effective in a fight.

I know that a great deal is said about the Battle of New Orleans and the wonderful results of it. That battle was fought by the frontiersmen, every one of them a crack shot. They were under a man that they were absolutely confident would lead them to victory. They were back of their entrenchments. They had fought Indians, and they had been under fire repeatedly in defending their homes. They had the courage to reserve their fire until the command came to shoot. When they shot, every man had a mark and hit it, and that battle is and always has been wonderful in its results.

That was probably the greatest battle ever fought, in its complete victory, by raw recruits against a trained force. Even Napoleon, it has been said, in referring to it when he got back from Elba, said that the United States must have some secret by which they trained their men to steadiness in the face of danger. But we have not that same class of sharpshooters now. You gentlemen that were raised on the frontier will remember when every home had a rifle, and when every head of a family could hit the eye of a squirrel on the top of a tree. We have passed beyond that, and one of the duties of this Government to-day is to train the young men of the country in shooting, so that if they are needed in the defense of the country they will be ready for war and effective in war.

Now, I heard a speech in this House when the present Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] was here, opposing all additional preparation for war, in which speech he said that our oceans gave us an absolute safeguard from invasion. That might have been true 100 years ago, when it took six months to cross the Atlantic Ocean. But to-day the only safeguard the oceans give us is the fact that we control them. Whenever our fleets are swept off the ocean, the Pacific or the Atlantic, whenever we lose the power to defend our shores from invasion by troops by land or sea, whenever we lose that power the ocean is the easiest highway for invasion that could be provided. The great ships of to-day could land a large force on our shores more easily and more quickly than could be done by land. We must have war ships to make it unsafe, if not impossible, for an enemy to transport troops by sea.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. How much does this propose to increase the expenses of our military establishment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It would cost about $20,000,000 to provide a reserve force. The militia, I think, will cost about $8,000,000 additional, making $12,000,000 in all for the militia.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a word or two more about this sea business.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. With this addition to the national reserve by the militia, Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that the limit of the other reserve could be fixed at 125,000, and that would give a total army of 375,000 men and reduce the cost.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will, just for a question.

Mr. BORLAND. This bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy will carry about $1,158,000. I understand it to be a fact that the Military Academy for some time past has not been supplied with its full quota of students.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that we can take that question up so well later on, under the five-minute rule, that I would much prefer not to discuss it now. I am not discussing the Military Academy.

Mr. BORLAND. Is that a fact, that the academy is not full?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not, further, a fact that about 50 per cent of the officers of the Army are not graduates of West Point at all?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I decline to yield further to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say to him that we are supposed now to be discussing this question of our Military Academy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That question will come up later. This is purely general debate, and I would like now to lay the foundation of what I would like to leave as my legacy, as one man expressed it, my "dying swan song," to future Congresses, after my experience of some 20 years on the Committee on Military Affairs. I am not vain enough to think that I am going to solve these questions. I am simply vain enough to hope that I may be able to give to gentlemen who come after me some basis to build some future legislation on, and something that perhaps may, at least, aid in the solution of some of the problems to come before Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is true that the ocean served as a barrier against hostile invasions in the time of the old sailing vessels, and it would be true still if we can have sufficient naval force on the ocean to prevent any hostile foreign nation from sending its troops here with safety. No nation will start a transport fleet across either ocean until that nation commands the sea. In the discussion of this question I do not want my language to be construed as holding up to view any particular nation as one with whom we are to have war, but I want to discuss the question on the broad lines of policy as to what may be done under any conditions. Again, I say, no hostile nation will be able to send troops to this country unless that nation first commands the sea. In other words, so long as we have adequate battleships and armored cruisers and other war vessels in control on the ocean that is sought to be made the theater of war, so long the nations will keep their troops at home. But assuming, Mr. Chairman, that we should lose our power of resistance on the sea, and assuming that our fleet is destroyed, I want to say to gentlemen in this House that it would be the easiest thing in the world for an enemy to invade this country and land troops on either shore, and especially on the Pacific. For instance, if in the Pacific Ocean our fleets are destroyed, and we have no power of destroying the enemy's transports en route to this country, they may land with an army of 200,000 men on the Pacific coast in spite of all we can do. They would not land in the face of our seacoast defenses. They would attack these from the rear.

"Oh," gentlemen say, "what will we be doing all that time?" We will be doing our best to keep the troops in the enemy's fleet from landing. You say, "Our harbor defenses are such that they can not land at San Francisco."

Possibly they can not get into Puget Sound. But, Mr. Chairman, the great coast line of the Pacific gives opportunity for landing hostile forces at places where there are no fortifications and where there is no town to destroy. We would have our small land force scattered watching many points. The enemy would concentrate and land at some port not fortified and attack our cities from the rear. We have no adequate defenses to repel such an attack, and I would have the larger part of the reserve force, I think, necessary raised in the coast States, so that no time would be lost in putting our Army in the field. Apportioning the force among the States would cause time to be wasted in providing a prompt defense. The States need not fear they would be deprived of any glory, as before the close of such a war ample opportunity would be afforded all our people for a share in the conflict. When the enemy land their forces they can march where they please unless our soldiers are there to stop them. Raw recruits will not be effective. I am willing to state that we will keep them as busy as we can be all the time, our raw levies will be brave. My urgent demand on the Congress for supplies is that we must have the ammunition and the guns, or no soldiers, Regular or Volunteer, will be of much avail in stopping them. But the enemy might make a feint of landing at one place and then land at another. We have hundreds and thousands of miles of coast that we should be ready to defend, and in my judgment this Government should go to work, and out of the 125,000 reserve and the 125,000 National Guard take all you can from the coast States, ready to go to any point of attack at once and defend our honor.

I am not one of those that believe that we are in great danger of war. I do not believe that we are in any immediate danger of war. But I realize the fact that no man can tell when war will come. I remember one of the leading Members of this House, three months before the Spanish War came—a member of the Committee on Appropriations, afterwards governor of a State—made a speech on the floor saying that this talk of war was an absurdity; that there was no nation on earth who would dare to go to war with us, and if they did we could arm our men with clubs and drive them into the sea.

Mr. MANN. The last part of it is true.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We might have driven the Cubans into the sea, but even Spain could have resisted such an attack. Our people to-day may think we are not to have war. I hope they are right. The lack of preparation for war cost more in human lives and in treasure when the war comes than the preparation for war would cost if we were always ready for it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The chairman of the committee does not mean to say that after the vast expenditures that there is a lack of preparation being made——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I spoke of that a while ago, and I said I thought the Army was in splendid shape so far as organization is concerned. I think we have a reserve supply for the Army, and through the Committee on Military Affairs we have provided field artillery——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I thought the gentleman's last remarks indicated to the contrary.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am trying to strike a few of the high places and fill in afterwards. On this question of field artillery the Committee on Appropriations has not been as liberal as it should have been to provide for the artillery for the mobile army. There is no great military nation that has not at least four guns to a thousand men. France and Germany have more. Through the efforts of the Committee on Military Affairs, we have provided two guns for a thousand men.

For an army of 250,000 men we should have more than double that number of guns.

Mr. MANN. The members of the Committee on Appropriations are now engaged elsewhere, and there is no member on the floor. What would the gentleman say as to the statement made last night by the gentleman from Iowa that they already had appropriations unexpended for the past three years in the Treasury for the manufacture of guns?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is that for coast defense or field artillery? If it is true as to field artillery, I will take back all I have said and lay the blame on the War Department. But I am sure it is not correct.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa stated last night that they had three years' appropriations in the Treasury; that they had plenty of ammunition for all the guns they had, and that they could make the ammunition much quicker than the guns; that there is plenty of ammunition to wear out all the guns now in existence.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no doubt that we could make ammunition much quicker than we could make the guns. If war comes to us, it will be impossible to manufacture the guns we need; we can possibly manufacture the powder, but we ought to have a larger reserve of powder than we now have. I may call attention to what the War Department has said, that there is not enough of Coast Artillery ammunition for one round for each gun emplaced.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] stated that there was ample.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from Iowa is not here, but I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Committee on Appropriations has always held that it was ample because they always held that we did not need any. I submit the following to show just what we have for seacoast fortifications and field artillery:

RESERVE AMMUNITION FOR SEACOAST FORTIFICATIONS.

The amount of reserve ammunition which the War Department is endeavoring to accumulate for seacoast fortifications within the continental limits of the United States is only that amount required for carrying through a two-hours' engagement one-half the guns mounted in those fortifications, plus a small allowance of target-practice ammunition to be expended when war should become imminent. The amount of this reserve was prescribed by the National Coast Defense Board and is based upon the following considerations.

The determination of the proper amount of reserve ammunition for the seacoast armament is necessarily influenced by the speed of naval vessels and the rapidity of fire of the various guns composing the armament. Any gun should be supplied with sufficient ammunition to maintain the maximum rate of aimed fire during the time that any part of the fleet is within range. It is probable that hereafter a fleet will not attempt to reduce a fortification by bombardment and that it will only be within the range of fortification guns during the time that it is estimated to run by.

Considering the speed of vessels of the present day, it is assumed that the time required from the instant that the first ship of a fleet comes within range until the last ship passes out of range, having in mind the tortuous channels and the obstructions therein, will be about two hours. It is therefore deemed a proper requirement that a seacoast gun shall have a supply of ammunition for an engagement of at least this period, with perhaps a somewhat larger allowance for rapid-fire guns and mortars which will respectively be called upon to protect mine fields and engage stationary vessels.

This amount of ammunition, if provided for all of the guns in the seacoast fortifications, would enable simultaneous engagements to be fought at all fortifications in the country. Considering the extent of the seacoast, the probability of attacks in certain localities in connection with the facility of transportation in this country, and the fact that a considerable number of the guns would be out of bearing during part of an engagement, it is believed to be a fair assumption that if there is enough ammunition to provide each gun with one-half of the amount required for a two hours' engagement it will be possible to have on hand in any locality, by transfer from other places, a sufficient amount to engage any fleet which may attack.

The seacoast ammunition on hand or appropriated for is approximately 70 per cent of the allowance for the cannon provided to date on the basis of a two-hours' engagement for one-half the armament. The item of $140,000 carried in the current fortification bill for the procurement of reserve ammunition will increase the amount to about 71 per cent of the allowance. An equal amount appropriated each year would complete the reserve supply by the year 1946 for the cannon provided to date, and by the year 1964 for all the seacoast fortifications recommended by the national coast-defense board.

The amount of reserve ammunition which the War Department is endeavoring to accumulate for seacoast fortifications in the insular possessions is that required to carrying the batteries through a two-hours' engagement. The ammunition on hand or appropriated for is 54.4 per cent of the allowance for the cannon provided for to date. Since these batteries would probably be called upon to withstand a prolonged attack, it is believed that the full allowance is the minimum that should be on hand. The item of $400,000 carried in the current fortification bill for the procurement of reserve ammunition will, if appropriated, increase the amount to about 71 per cent of the allowance for the cannon provided to date.

AMMUNITION SUPPLY FOR MOBILE ARTILLERY.

The War Department estimates for funds for the procurement of ammunition for mobile artillery are based upon providing a very moderate supply, considering the probable expenditures in battle and the time required to manufacture such ammunition. The amounts are those indicated in the field-service regulations as being the minimum necessary on the basis that an amount not less than that carried by the mobile forces should be kept at or near the advanced supply depot, and an additional amount—approximately equal to the ammunition in advance of the base—should be available at the base of operations or other depots. These principles require the accumulation of a reserve supply varying from 1,856 rounds for each 3-inch field gun to 400 rounds for each 6-inch howitzer.

The value of the ammunition on hand and appropriated for to date is approximately 20 per cent of the allowance for the guns provided to date and 9.8 per cent of the allowance for the 1,200 guns provided and contemplated.

The current fortification bill carries an item of $150,000 for the manufacture of ammunition for mobile artillery. That amount would increase the ammunition on hand to about 21 per cent of the allowance for the batteries provided to date and to about 11 per cent of the allowance for the batteries provided and contemplated. Under an annual appropriation of $150,000 the reserve supply of ammunition for the modern mobile artillery batteries provided would be completed by the year 1968, and for the modern mobile artillery batteries provided and contemplated by the year 2031.

STATEMENT OF BASIS FOR ESTIMATES FOR FIELD ARTILLERY.

The number of guns estimated for the entire equipment of the first army to be mobilized in time of war, that is, 1,200, is sufficient to provide 4 guns per thousand of infantry and cavalry for an army including 300,000 infantry and cavalry, which corresponds to a total army of about 385,000.

The number of guns per thousand of infantry and cavalry was in 1908 increased from 3.4 to 4.1 in the French Army; in the German Army the proportion is about 5.2 guns per thousand of infantry and cavalry; in the Japanese Army, as is understood that the proportion is about 4.5 guns per 1,000 infantry (cavalry not included).

The estimates now before Congress, as submitted, covered batteries as follows:

Fortifications bill (for the Regular service):
Three 3-inch mountain howitzer batteries.
Three 4.7-inch howitzer batteries.
Two 6-inch howitzer batteries.
Army bill (for the Organized Militia):
Three 4.7-inch howitzer batteries.
Two 6-inch howitzer batteries.

Fifty-two guns and carriages in all—32 in fortifications bill and 20 in Army bill.

Mr. MANN. That was not the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am simply giving the figures of what we should have and what we do have, as shown by records of the War Department, and I want to differentiate the two committees in regard to this matter, showing that the Military Committee has done all it could under the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say in conclusion, now that I am going out and can not be accused in any sense of being personally interested in it, that if this next House will do its duty, it will place all questions affecting military affairs and the defense of the country in the hands of the committee that gives its time to that question. The fortifications, seacoast and field artillery, and deficiencies should be in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, and not divided up between two committees, causing constant friction and lack of good legislation. [Applause.] I hope my Democratic friends will have the good judgment and the good sense to so arrange the matter so that the Committee on Military Affairs will be responsible for this entire line of work.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I feel almost like apologizing to the House for taking up what little time I have; but I want to say to the House that after 20 years of service I shall leave this House with the most profound respect for the membership of the House of Representatives. In my judgment there is no body of men anywhere who are actuated with a more earnest desire to discharge the duties of their office honestly and well than the membership of this House. I have known it long and well, and my respect for its personnel has grown during all the years of my connection with it. Now and then a suspicion may arise as to some Member, but so accurately does this House gauge its membership and their standing that even a suspicion of wrong on the part of any Member destroys that Member's usefulness, until he has stamped such suspicion as false. I want to say to you in leaving that in my judgment you have been in all your past true to the great trusts reposed in you, and I look forward to the future of this country with a confident assurance that the House of Representatives, the popular branch of the Congress, will always be true to the best interests of the people of the United States, and discharge its trust to the best of its judgment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the remainder of the time, 27 minutes, is under the control of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few words to say I am in accord with all that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has said regarding the present efficiency of the military arm of the Government. I especially concur in his suggestion as to the desirability of the Committee on Military Affairs hereafter having complete charge of all matters and all appropriations for the military branch of the Government. The gentleman speaks wisely and from long experience. His advice should be heeded.

It is a matter of regret that his public service is soon to end. I think I voice the sentiment of all the Members of this House when I say that it is a personal loss to us as well as a public loss that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], a distinguished Member of this House, and for many years the able and capable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, will not be with us in the next House of Representatives. [Applause.] His retirement rises above the question of partisanship, in my judgment, and is really a national loss. When a man has served the people faithfully in Congress for many years, he becomes invaluable as a public servant. [Applause.] And whenever such a Representative retires, voluntarily or otherwise, it is not only a matter of sincere regret among his colleagues, who know his true worth, but it is a matter of national loss to the taxpayers of the Government. It is difficult to replace these men. [Applause.] I know the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] will go from these scenes of his long endeavors to his home in Iowa with the best wishes of all the Members of this House for his future success and his prosperity and continued good health. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM].

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, when the United States acquired Alaska from Russia by the treaty of cession of March 30, 1867, it became trustee for the people of a domain almost as large as the United States east of the Mississippi River, and valuable beyond the avarice of any but an Alaska syndicate. Its resources of fish, fur, copper, gold, tin, coal, and agriculture are but little known to the trustee even after 43 years of perfunctory service. There are those, however, near to, and powerful in influence with, that trustee who have a lively appreciation of those enormous values and the ease with which they may be monopolized and removed from the trust estate to their own possession.

It is for the purpose of advising that trustee and charging it with public notice of its failure to perform its duty and protect the estate and as a representative of "the people who own it" that I have asked for and obtained permission to place in the RECORD a plain and full statement of the facts.

By the third article of the treaty with Russia for the cession of Alaska the United States agreed that the inhabitants of the ceded territory—

Shall be admitted to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States, and shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Beyond that stipulation it is the duty of this trustee of a great national estate to protect it as the property of the Nation. It has not performed its duty from either point of view. It has permitted the despoliation and monopolization of the resources of Alaska in violation of treaty stipulations and of its duty to the people of the United States. It now threatens to enter on a new scheme of leasing Alaska's coal resources to monopoly and to deprive the inhabitants of the Territory from the free use of its resources as an aid in its development. It now threatens to create itself into a national landlord in Alaska and to degrade the inhabitants thereof to the status of tenants, in violation of treaty rights, constitutional rights, and the inalienable rights of the people of the United States.

More than $200,000,000 have been taken from the resources of that Territory by special interests, aided by Congress, without any corresponding benefit to it and without a return of a single home, or school, or church, or the education of a single white child. Development has been strangled, population barred, and its resources wasted and destroyed. It is now seriously proposed to create a national monopoly of its coal and to exclude from the development of that great resource those citizens who may desire to invest their capital and labor therein. It is time to "Stop, look, and listen."

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE FAVORS NATIONAL MONOPOLY OF ALASKA'S RESOURCES.

In his address to the National Conservation Congress in St. Paul, Minn., September 5, 1910, which is by direct reference made a part of his message to Congress of December 6, 1910, the President of the United States declared:

* * * The existing coal-land laws of Alaska are most unsatisfactory and should be radically amended.

In the body of his message, as one of his specific recommendations, he advised Congress:

For the reasons stated in the conservation address, I recommend: * * *

Second, that the coal deposits of the Government be leased after advertisement inviting competitive bids, for terms not exceeding 50 years, with a minimum rental and royalties upon the coal mined, to be readjusted every 10 or 12 years, and with conditions as to maintenance which will secure proper mining, and as to assignment which will prevent combinations to monopolize control of the coal in any one district or market. I do not think that coal measures under 2,500 acres of surface would be too large an amount to lease to any one lessee.

The Secretary of the Interior thinks there are difficulties in the way of leasing public coal lands, which objections he has set forth in his report, the force of which I freely concede. I entirely approved his stating at length in his report the objections in order that the whole subject may be presented to Congress, but after a full consideration I favor a leasing system and recommend it.

He also recommends the passage of an act of Congress to create an appointive commission with legislative powers for the Government of Alaska, and adds:

The passage of a law permitting the leasing of Government coal lands in Alaska after public competition, and the appointment of a commission for the Government of the Territory, with enabling powers to meet the local needs, will lead to an improvement in Alaska and the development of her resources that is likely to surprise the country.

These are the only recommendations found in the message suggesting specific legislation for Alaska; there is no suggestion that the coal-land laws in force in Alaska shall be amended or supplemented in any other respect than by the enactment of the leasing system.

THE NATIONAL COAL QUESTION IS AN ALASKAN QUESTION.

More than one-half of the unappropriated and unreserved public land belonging to the United States is in Alaska. More than three-fourths of the valuable unsold public coal land belonging to the Nation lies in that Territory. All the high-grade anthracite and bituminous coal land owned by the United States is there, and all coal land containing naval coal to which the Government yet holds title is in Alaska. All practical questions touching conservation and all efforts to prevent monopoly of the public coal land relate to the coal land in Alaska. The national coal question is an Alaskan question.

The following table, taken from the last report of the Secretary of the Interior, except the last two lines, shows in detail the area of unappropriated and unreserved public land belonging to the United States, by States and Territories:

THE NATIONAL LEAD AND COPPER MINE MONOPOLY, 1807–1847—FORTY YEARS OF FAILURE.

The consideration upon which the United States originally received from the Revolutionary States their portions of the western lands is clearly set forth in the resolution adopted by the Congress of the Confederation on October 10, 1780, as follows:

Resolved, That the unappropriated lands that may be ceded or relinquished to the United States by any particular State, pursuant to the recommendation of Congress on the 6th day of September last, shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States, and to be settled and formed into distinct Republican States, which shall become members of the Federal Union and have the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States. * * *

The 13 original States, or so many of them as held western lands, thereupon conveyed them to the Confederation for the uses suggested in that resolution, and thereafter when the United States under the Constitution assumed to dispose of the public lands they were bound as a trustee to appropriate them to that great national use.

Under the English system, with which the national legislators of the Revolutionary days were entirely familiar, the King's tenth branch of royal revenue, according to Blackstone, was the right of mines. The King's royal prerogative made him the owner of all mines of the precious minerals—gold and silver—whether found on royal or private lands. A grant of lands by the Crown did not pass gold or silver mines unless expressly granted, and this applied to grants of land in the colonies. Hence it was that when the 13 colonies became independent States, they succeeded to the royal right of mines and still retain it.

The United States never acquired any rights in mines in New York or in any of the 13 original States. When the United States therefore began to dispose of the public lands the old English idea was dominant, and Congress provided for retaining the royal right in mines in the western lands, which had been conveyed to the United States by the 13 original States, which had received them from the Crown.

The Congress of the Confederation on May 20, 1785, provided for surveying and selling the western lands, and the ordinance of Congress passed for that purpose provided that each deed conveying these lands should contain a clause "excepting therefrom and reserving one-third part of all gold, silver, lead, and copper mines within the same." This system generally continued in force until 1806 when Congress passed the first of our great mining statutes in aid of the development of the precious metal-bearing States of the West.

The leasing of the mines on the western lands, however, was first inaugurated on March 3, 1807, when Congress passed an act providing—

That the several lead mines in the Indiana Territory * * * shall be reserved for the future disposal of the United States; and any grant which may hereafter be made for a tract of land containing a lead mine which had been discovered previous to the purchase of such tract from the United States shall be considered fraudulent and null, and the President of the United States shall be, and is hereby, authorized to lease any lead mine which has been or may hereafter be discovered in the Indiana Territory for a period not exceeding five years.

The lead mines in Missouri and Illinois and the Superior copper mines were included in the reserved lands and leased. The lead-mining leases were issued under the supervision of the War Department, and the United States reserved a royalty or rental of one-sixth of the lead for Government use.

In the report of the Secretary of War transmitted to Congress by John Quincy Adams in 1825 it is shown that the leasing of United States mineral lands had gone but slowly and without satisfaction to the people of Missouri or to the Nation. Much discontent, fraud, and litigation were complained of, while the output was small and the entire business unsatisfactory.

In an address delivered before the American Institute of Mining Engineers, Abram S. Hewitt, quoting from Prof. Whitney, told of the failure as follows:

For a few years the rents were paid with tolerable regularity, but after 1834, in consequence of the immense number of illegal entries of mineral land at the Wisconsin land office, the smelters and miners refused to make any further payments, and the Government was entirely unable to collect them. After much trouble and expense it was, in 1847, finally concluded that the only way was to sell the mineral land and do away with all reserves of lead or any other metal, since they had only been a source of embarrassment to the department.

The States of Missouri and Illinois began to protest against these leases immediately after the system was established in active operation in 1822. As early as 1827 the contest had become flagrant in Congress, and on July 2, 1827, the Senate Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred a bill "To authorize the President of the United States to cause the reserved lead mines in Missouri to be exposed to public sale," said in its report:

For the United States to reserve and lease all the mineral lands in Missouri would be to hold one-fourth of her area in a state of tenantry. It would require the creation of a new corps of Federal officers or agents to superintend the mining and ultimately be of less advantage to the Union than if the mines were committed to the care and ardor of individual enterprise. Such a measure is believed by the committee to be neither the policy nor the intention of the Government of the United States.

A year later the House Committee on Public Lands reported that—

Believing that the laws prohibiting the sale of the public lands in Missouri which contain lead mines ought to be repealed, the committee report a bill for that purpose.

The bill evidently did not pass Congress, for, on January 25, 1829, Congress received a solemn memorial from the General Assembly of the State of Missouri protesting against the system and praying for the sale of all mineral lands within her borders, as follows:

A MEMORIAL.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The General Assembly of the State of Missouri respectfully represent that they have long witnessed with solicitude the policy of the General Government in withholding from sale lands lying in this State represented as containing lead and iron ore; but experience has fully shown the incorrectness of this policy and its inefficiency in accomplishing the object contemplated to be effected, to wit, the advancement in value arising from the increase of population and the discovery of ore; for the enhancement thus arising is more than counterbalanced by the depredations made on the mineral and timber. We would further represent that large tracts of fertile lands have been returned as containing mineral, upon which no mineral has ever yet been found; and we believe that the retention of those lands by the General Government will be against the interest of the Union, and a material injury to the best interest of our State in preventing large districts of our country from being settled by industrious cultivators of the soil. Your memorialists, relying upon the justice of their petition and upon your wisdom and liberality, pray that your honorable body will pass a law to authorize the sale of such lands lying in this State as have heretofore been withheld from sale on account of their containing lead and iron ore, upon the same conditions that other lands of the Government are now sold.

Resolved, That it be made the duty of the secretary of state to forward to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of this memorial.

JOHN THORNTON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
DANIEL DUNKLIN,
President of the Senate.

Approved, December 11, 1828.

JOHN MILLER.

In answer to these demands, and on March 3, 1829, Congress passed an act conferring authority upon the President to expose for sale "the reserved lead mines and contiguous lands in the State of Missouri" upon six months' public notice.

The State of Illinois continued to resist the leasing of lead mines within her borders, and in 1830, in his message to the general assembly of that State, the governor declared the law to be unconstitutional and recommended the people to resist it and refuse to pay the rentals. In the report of the Secretary of War, dated January 10, 1838, in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling upon him for information about the leased mines in Illinois, the Secretary quotes the report of the Army officer in charge, who said of the Illinois leased mines:

The general and popular belief throughout the mineral region is that the law will not sustain the Government in the practice of leasing and exacting rent; contending that the act of March 3, 1807, authorizing the President to lease the mines, does not contain the necessary provisions for carrying it into effect, and, further, that any law authorizing the leasing of the public domain within the limits of a State is unconstitutional. In his public message to the Legislature of Illinois, in 1830, the governor distinctly assumes this ground and recommends to the people resistance to leasing and paying rent. However untenable this doctrine may be, emanating from so high a source, and coinciding as it does with the interests of all those engaged in digging, smelting, or in the commerce of the mines (and these may be said to constitute almost the entire population of the mineral district, for in those regions agricultural pursuits are almost entirely disregarded), it could not fail in producing the designed effect. Since 1834 diggers have refused license and smelters to pay rent or in any manner to recognize Government authority over the lands in their mineral aspect. The mineral value of the lands may be said to have already passed out of the hands of the Government. Diggers seek the metal when and where they choose, from whom, and with the like impunity, smelters receive, work, and dispose of the product.

The military examiner was asked in his instructions to state his opinion upon the advisability of continuing the system of leasing, and he did so as follows:

It is assumed that the comparatively trifling saving, if any, to the Government on the quantity of lead now or at any future period needed for the public use, by working the mines instead of purchasing in market, bears no just proportion to the injury done to the mineral region of country, first, by retarding the settlement of the country, and, secondly, by the demoralizing influence of the system. * * *

Regarding the product of these mines as furnishing an element of national defense or public convenience, could it be supposed that it would ever be of difficult or doubtful procurement at moderate prices, there would be some plausibility in adhering to the existing policy; but such can never be the case.

The War Department approved the conclusion of the report and said:

In conclusion, it is proper to add that this department concurs with the views exhibited in the foregoing report, and approves the recommendation therein contained respecting the indiscriminate sale of the mineral reservations.

Congress called for further reports on a plan for the disposal of the mineral lands, and the people, and even the President of the United States, continued to protest at the delay. In his first annual message on December 2, 1845, President Polk strongly urged the abandonment of the leasing system, saying:

The present system of managing the mineral lands of the United States is believed to be radically defective. More than a million acres of the public lands, supposed to contain lead and other minerals, have been reserved from sale, and numerous leases upon them have been granted to individuals upon a stipulated rent. The system of granting leases has proved to be not only unprofitable to the Government, but unsatisfactory to the citizens who have gone upon the lands, and must, if continued, lay the foundation of much future difficulty between the Government and the lessees. According to the official records, the amount of rents received by the Government for the years 1841, 1842, 1843, and 1844, was $6,354.74, while the expenses of the system during the same period, including salaries of the superintendents, agents, clerks, and incidental expenses, were $26,111.11, the income being less than one-fourth of the expense. To this pecuniary loss may be added the injury sustained by the public in consequence of the destruction of timber and the careless and wasteful manner of working the mines. The system has given rise to much litigation between the United States and individual citizens, producing irritation and excitement in the mineral region, and involving the Government in heavy additional expenditures. It is believed that similar losses and embarrassments will continue to occur while the present system of leasing these lands remains unchanged. These lands are now under the superintendence and care of the War Department, with the ordinary duties of which they have no proper or natural connection. I recommend the repeal of the present system, and that these lands be placed under the superintendence and management of the General Land Office as other public lands, and be brought into market and sold upon such terms as Congress in their wisdom may prescribe, reserving to the Government an equable percentage of the gross amount of mineral product, and that the preemption principle be extended to resident miners, and settlers upon them, at the minimum price which may be established by Congress.

The President's recommendation was not acted upon immediately by Congress, and on January 12, 1846, Secretary of War Marcy made a report to the Senate showing the condition of the finances in respect to the leasing system. Among the documents attached to his report is a report from the ordnance officer having charge of the system, in which the agent concludes:

But as a system of leasing here (southern Illinois) as practiced at the upper Mississippi mines would involve the necessity of a separate agency, and bring with it a train of expenses that would probably swallow up, as they have done there for the last two years, all the rent, if it did not even bring the department in debt; and as it moreover appears that, before these mines can be successfully worked, it will be necessary to incur the expense of analyzing the ores, it is respectfully submitted whether it would not be better to have the reservation revoked, in order that these lands be no longer withheld from market.

On January 27, 1846, Senator Breese, of Illinois, afterwards chief justice of the supreme court of that State, prepared an exhaustive and learned report to accompany S. 31, "A bill to direct the President of the United States to sell the reserved mineral lands in the State of Illinois and Territories of Wisconsin and Iowa, supposed to contain lead ore." This report is Senate Document No. 87, first session Twenty-ninth Congress, volume 4, 1845–46. The report says in part:

The policy of reserving from sale land supposed or known to contain lead ore had no existence anterior to 1807. * * *

Your committee suppose it was intended by Congress, in thus reserving mineral lands from sale, not to make it the permanent policy of the country, but that time might be afforded to act understandingly in regard to them, and with a full knowledge of their value as a national possession, so that no great national interest should be sacrificed by a hasty and ill-considered sale of them. A correct idea of their extent and value was desirable, in order that the action of the Government might be so regulated as to prevent a monopoly of their ores by individuals or associated capital, by which the supply and price of an article made from them, and of great necessity, might be placed wholly within such control, to the injury not only of the Government needing heavy supplies of lead, but of the public at large. It was this fear of a monopoly, and the importance of a supply of lead to the Government, the committee believe, that operated to reserve the lead mines in Louisiana. When Missouri became a State, she complained to Congress of the effects of this policy upon her prosperity, an area of 2,500 square miles in the heart of that State being mineral lands, and reserved, or the greater part of it, from sale and settlement. Great exertions were made by the agent of the Government there to lease them, and to render them productive, but without success.

But a trifling amount of revenue, no accurate account of which can be had, was received—not more, however, than sufficient to defray the expenses. Many of the most productive mines had become, by grants from the Crown of France, private property, and it was found impossible for the Government to carry out profitably a system which it could not make exclusive. It was seen, too, that the extent of country abounding in these treasures was so immense that no possible danger of a monopoly was to be apprehended or a deficiency in the supply to the Government at reasonable prices of an important material of war to be expected. Congress, therefore, was induced, after the experience of many years, on the 3d of March, 1829, to direct the sale of the reserves in a mode similar to that contemplated by the bill now under consideration.

The good effects resulting to Missouri from this law can not be doubted. The greater part of this vast mass of reserved land has become private property, subject to the taxing power of the State, and whilst their riches are now, under individual ownership, more fully developed the manufacture of lead has greatly increased, and that article is now afforded in the market at a price far below that which it bore when the system of "Government leases" was in full operation; and, for the reason stated, the demand and supply can never be exclusively controlled by any capitalist or company. The State has also been benefited by a great addition to the number of freeholders, whose whole energies are devoted to the permanent improvement of their own property, they alone enjoying the avails of their labor bestowed upon it, subject to no deductions in the form of rent or other charges to the Federal Government. No one feels or thinks that the Nation has suffered a loss in thus selling the mineral lands of Missouri, from which such high expectations of revenue were once entertained, but all agree that mutual benefits have been the result.

It becomes now a subject of inquiry, What is the true policy of the Government in relation to those mineral reserves in Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa; and what has been the effect of leasing them, as practiced for now more than 35 years? Is their value and importance as a national possession or interest now sufficiently known? Has the Nation gained anything by the system? Is it in accordance and in compliance with the duties and obligations the Government owes to that State and those Territories to persevere in the system? Are they injured or benefited by its operation? Is the right clear and unquestionable to reserve and lease public lands?

* * * * * * *

Your committee believe that it is bad policy to introduce or continue in any State or Territory in which the public lands are any system the effect of which shall be to establish the relation of landlord and tenant between the Federal Government and our citizens. Much might be said against it, but it will occur at once, to everyone, as a dangerous relation, and which may become so strong and so extensive as to give to that government the power of controlling their elections and shaping all measures of municipal concern. An unjust and invidious distinction is made by it also between the farmer and the miner, the labor of the latter being taxed to the amount in value of the rent he pays, whilst both are occupying for beneficial purposes parts of the same section of land. There does not seem to be any necessity for the exercise of any such power, even if it be admitted the Government possess it, which is much questioned. Your committee refrain from going into a labored examination of this point. Whatever may be the power and the right of Congress under the second clause of the third section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States, whilst the country is but a Territory of the United States, "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting it," the question, when raised by a sovereign State, by an equal number of the confederacy, becomes one for grave consideration and entitled to the most serious regard.

Your committee will not enter upon the argument of it, and will dismiss it with the single remark that when the United States accepted the cession of the Northwestern Territory the acceptance was on the express condition and under a pledge to form it into distinct republican States, "and to admit them as members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of freedom, sovereignty, and independence as the other States." This pledge, your committee believe, would not be redeemed by merely dividing the surface into States and giving them names, but it includes a pledge to sell the lands, so that they may be settled and thus form States. No other mode of disposing of them can be regarded as a compliance with that pledge.

* * * * * * *

Conceding the right exists to own the lands, the power, in view of these compacts to reserve them from sale, is seriously questioned. If a small quantity can be reserved, by the same power the whole domain may be, for where can the power be limited? If mineral lands can be reserved, may not arable lands likewise, and any governmental purpose, as connected with its various wants, be urged to justify the act, and thus the compacts be wholly defeated?

But aside from considerations of this nature, however well calculated they may be to bring this whole system of reservations and leases into disfavor, at least with those who regard the plighted faith of the Nation as important to be preserved, your committee have diligently and carefully examined the subject as affecting the pecuniary interests of the United States supposed to be involved in it.

* * * * * * *

From the best information, however, which your committee can obtain they are satisfied that under the leases executed within the last 15 years the expenses of every description have nearly equaled the receipts, leaving entirely out of view the positive and irreparable injury done to the lands.

Your committee believe it will not be considered irrelevant here to advert to the pecuniary loss the State of Illinois incurs by the system. By the compact referred to she is entitled to 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sales of these lands, amounting in the two localities described by your committee to 389,120 acres. If sold, as they would be, with the timber and ore within and upon them, even at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre 5 per cent of the net proceeds, amounting to near $24,000, would accrue to the State for roads and schools; and in the shape of taxes levied upon them as private property for the past 20 years, at the average rate of taxation by the State for that time, these lands thus reserved would have produced an additional sum of $136,636.90 to swell its general revenues. If these lands are deprived by the United States of all that makes them salable, then a total loss of these two items may be suffered by the State, for if they can not be sold by reason of their worthlessness, occasioned by the destruction of timber for fuel for smelting furnaces and by the exhaustion of the ore, no proceeds can at any time hereafter be derived from them, and thus a total loss is apparent and inevitable. And such, too, will be the condition of Wisconsin and Iowa when they become States, the only difference being in the greater extent of the loss.

The Senate will perceive from the statements here submitted that the workings of this system, for now near a quarter of a century, have been of no great benefit to the United States, and no reasonable hope exists that it ever can be made useful or productive.

* * * * * * *

Although it might be desirable for the United States to possess within itself a supply of lead, it is no less so that it should be independent in the articles of cotton, iron, hemp, all munitions of war, and provisions; yet no one would seriously propose to set apart from sale and settlement any portion of the public lands on which to raise or fabricate either or consent that this Government, erected in consummate wisdom for great national purposes, should be engaged in such subordinate and uncongenial pursuits. All experience shows, your committee think, that operations of this nature, including mining and the manufacture of lead, can with much greater propriety and with far more beneficial results be left to the free and unfettered energies of individuals; and of supplies of these kinds the Federal Government should be, not the producer though numerous agents of doubtful creation and a dependent tenantry, but purchasers in the market in fair competition with all others. Now, no interest is felt by the tenant in the improvement of the property itself; he does not become fixed in his employment to any spot, is sparing of his outlays, erects no permanent works, nor does he call in the aid of science and practical skill to overcome the obstacles which meet him in his enterprise. Make them private property, capital, science, and skill would be employed in erecting machinery and the deepest bowels of the earth exploded with eagerness and profit for their hidden treasures. Subject them to the unimpeded action of individual energy, new and rich developments would be continually made, and the whole country benefited by the augmented supply at a cheaper rate which such investments would certainly produce.

Your committee, believing that the policy of reserving mineral lands was not intended to be permanent and that all the interests of the United States as connected with them are now fully understood and appreciated, believe also that the time has arrived for terminating it, which can be now done with more benefit to the Government than at some more distant period.

In view, then, of the great dissatisfaction manifested by that portion of our population most directly and injuriously affected by the system, so repeatedly expressed by them through their local legislatures and Representatives in Congress, so much irritated feeling produced among them by the manner in which it is carried out, so much injury resulting to them by reserving lands from sale, so that their proceeds can not be obtained for roads and schools, nor the taxing power for State purposes be made to operate on them, raising, as it does, an unjust and invidious distinction between its agricultural and mining population by taxing the labor and enterprise of the latter, making them the mere tenants of the Federal Government by depriving them of the privilege all others enjoy of becoming freeholders, and involving them in much harassing and expensive litigation, growing out of their peculiar relations to the Government, thereby producing irritated and hostile feelings toward it, and thus weakening that confidence and respect all should have in it, and bringing our citizens to regard the Government less as a protection than as an encroachment upon their rights and privileges and a bar to their prosperity, and withal a general retardation of the settlement of that portion of the Union, the whole accompanied by a real loss to the National Treasury of no small magnitude, your committee have agreed to recommend the passage of the bill.

They do not concur with the Executive in the recommendation that "an equitable percentage of the gross amount of the mineral product" be reserved to the Government, as it is one of the leading objects of the sale of the lands to break up every branch of this system, of which the "percentage" forms a prominent part, and to sever entirely the connection of the Government with the miner and manufacturer of lead. Nor do your committee think, from all the information they can obtain, that the settlers or miners desire or expect the preemption principle to be applied to them. The language of the petitions from the settlers, now before your committee, is very general, and only asks for the sale of the lands as other lands are sold.

* * * * * * *

Your committee therefore report the bill to the Senate with an amendment to embrace the lands reserved in the State of Arkansas, and as thus amended recommend that it do pass.

The Committee on the Public Lands in the House of Representatives also prepared vigorous reports in favor of selling these mineral lands and in opposition to the leasing system. They are Nos. 269 and 591, dated, respectively, February 17 and May 4, 1846, in reports of committees, first session, Twenty-ninth Congress, volumes 2 and 3, 1845–46. In the first of these the system is denounced as an "evil," and it is declared:

The consequences resulting were serious losses to the United States, not only in payment of extravagant bills of costs with which she was taxed, but the result has finally shown that large portions of her mineral lands, to which there was no dispute and in which the most extensive and rich deposits of lead mineral were discovered, are rendered valueless by the superficial mining operations conducted on them and the denuding of the surrounding lands of timber necessary to smelting the ore; and at this day there are remaining (although subject to entry since 1836) unsold tracts which were among the most desirable and productive leases granted by the Government, for the reason that the superficial diggings have so far destroyed them for regular and systematic mining operations that no one is found willing to purchase them at the minimum price of the public lands; and it is doubtful whether, if the entire cost to the Government of its agencies, contingent expenses, and costs in numerous suits brought against lessees and individuals claiming under titles adverse to the Government were fully made up and shown, it would not be found to exceed the value of the rents received from the mineral lands in Missouri.

* * * * * * *

A more serious question presents itself to the consideration of the committee regarding the right as well as policy of maintaining a system in one of the States of this Union by which so large a portion of its citizens are held as a tenantry to the General Government. For a series of years the State of Illinois has been prohibited from exercising the peculiar privilege of her sovereignty, the right of levying a tax on the soil for the support of her government.

* * * * * * *

It is the generally received opinion of those best informed and familiar with the subject and believed by the committee that if the mineral lands of the United States are brought into market and made subject to entry as other lands, an amount of capital will be invested and a development be made of the vast mineral resources of the country that will make it independent of all foreign supplies, whether of lead, copper, zinc, or cobalt, and that this result has been kept back for many years by the policy of the Government withholding from sale her mineral lands and granting leases of a duration which could not justify the expenditure of capital necessary to be employed in labor and in the construction and application of machinery indispensable to the permanent and practicable operation of mining.

The committee reported the bill favorably with amendments. The House Committee on the Public Lands was just then also engaged in examining the leasing system in its application to the copper mines of Lake Superior. In its report to the House, dated May 4, 1846, to accompany H. R. 409, it denounced the system in respect to the copper leases and said:

In the settlement of the public lands a system should be pursued that will most readily give to the new and enterprising associations who remove to and establish themselves in the Far West permanent, well-organized, and orderly society, where patriotism, thrift, and happy, moral, and social relations will give more strength and intrinsic wealth to the Government and country than any amount of dollars and cents which might be brought to her Treasury from the sale of her vast domain. It has been well said that: "Tenantry is unfavorable to freedom; it lays the foundation of separate orders in society, annihilates the love of country, and weakens the spirit of independence. The tenant has, in fact, no country, no hearth, no domestic altar, no household god! The freeholder, on the contrary, is the natural supporter of a free government, and it should be the policy of republics to multiply their freeholders, as it is the policy of monarchies to multiply tenants."

In the disposition of the mineral lands it seems to the committee the only consideration for the Government should be to obtain a fair and just equivalent for those valuable mineral deposits, and leave to private enterprise the development of those vast and rich productions of nature and make them subservient to the wants and necessities of this country, and perhaps produce a surplus for the use of other portions of the world.

In answer to the general demand of the country the Congress, on July 11, 1846, passed an act ordering "the reserved lead mines and contiguous lands in the States of Illinois and Arkansas and the Territories of Wisconsin and Iowa to be exposed to sale, as other public lands," upon six months' notice, and on March 1, 1847, the copper mines of Lake Superior were also ordered to be sold on the same notice.

Thus for 40 years—from 1807 to 1847—a national mineral-land leasing system retarded the development of the Mississippi Northwest; provoked disorder, litigation, and contempt for the National authority; resulted in financial loss to the Nation and to those engaged in settling that region; prevented settlement, hindered development, retarded enterprise, and established and maintained a foreign system of national landlord and tenant under the control of officers of the United States Army. Finally it failed, as all such attempts must fail, because under a government of the people, by the people, for the people, no bureaucratic system of landlordism over the public lands can long keep a vigorous, intelligent, and independent mining population upon the Government domain as mere tenants. They "own it," and will not meekly work as tenants on their own property, for they will own it in law and in fact as well as in theory.

THE FREE WESTERN MINERAL LAND SYSTEM, 1849–1911.

The discovery of gold on the public lands of California, in 1849, and the recent repeal of the mineral land leasing laws in 1847, drew the attention of the public men of that day to the importance and necessity of establishing a permanent and satisfactory plan for the development of the mineral resources of the country. In his report, dated December 3, 1849, the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Thomas Ewing, called the attention of Congress to the recent discovery of gold in California, and said of the proposed legislation for disposing of the mines of that region:

The right to the mines of precious metals, which, by the laws of Spain, remained in the Crown, is believed to have been also retained by Mexico while she was sovereign of the territory, and to have passed by her transfer to the United States. It is a right in the sovereign of the soil as perfect as if it had been expressly reserved in the body of the grant; and it will rest with Congress to determine whether, in those cases where land duly granted contains gold, this right shall be asserted or relinquished. If relinquished it will require an express law to effect the object, and if retained legislation will be necessary to provide a mode by which it shall be exercised. * * * It would be better, in my opinion, to transfer them by sale or lease, reserving a part of the gold collected as rent or seignorage.

President Fillmore, however, had evolved clearer ideas, and had utterly abandoned the leasing and royalty theory. In his annual message to Congress of December 2, 1849, he recommended:

I also beg leave to call your attention to the propriety of extending at an early day our system of land laws, with such modifications as may be necessary, over the State of California and the Territories of Utah and New Mexico. The mineral lands of California will, of course, form an exception to any general system which may be adopted. Various methods of disposing of them have been suggested. I was at first inclined to favor the system of leasing, as it seemed to promise the largest revenue to the Government and to afford the best security against monopolies, but further reflection and our experience in leasing the lead mines and selling lands upon credit have brought my mind to the conclusion that there would be great difficulty in collecting the rents, and that the relation of debtor and creditor between the citizens and the Government would be attended with many mischievous consequences. I therefore recommend that instead of retaining the mineral lands under the permanent control of the Government they be divided into small parcels and sold, under such restrictions as to quantity and time as will insure the best price and guard most effectually against combinations of capitalists to obtain monopolies.

It thus came about through a process of legislative evolution, and the borrowing of ideas from the Spanish system coming to us with the Mexican Territories, that the "common law of the mines" was created by the miners of California. The substance thereof was written into the California practice act in 1851 by Stephen J. Field, who, later, as a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, expounded and gave life to the great mining statutes based thereon. It was not until July 26, 1866, however, that Congress gave national recognition to the system which had prevailed in California since 1849.

The first section of the act of 1866, as amended by the act of May 10, 1872, and made section 2319, United States Revised Statutes, 1878, is in the following language:

SEC. 2319. All valuable mineral deposits in lands belonging to the United States, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and purchase, and the lands in which they are found to occupation and purchase, by citizens of the United States and those who have declared their intention to become such, under regulations prescribed by law, and according to the local customs or rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with the laws of the United States.

In his valuable treatise on "The American Law Relating to Mines and Mineral Lands within the Public Land States and Territories," Judge Lindley says (sec. 55, vol. 1) of section 2319:

By the first of these provisions, the Government, for the first time in its history, inaugurated a fixed and definite legislative policy with reference to its mineral lands. It forever abandoned the idea of exacting royalties on the products of the mines, and gave free license to all its citizens, and those who had declared their intention to become such, to search for the precious and economic minerals in the public domain, and, when found, gave the assurance of at least some measure of security in possession and right of enjoyment. What had theretofore been technically a trespass became thenceforward a licensed privilege, untrammeled by governmental surveillance or the exaction of burdensome conditions. Such conditions as were imposed were no more onerous than those which the miners had imposed upon themselves by their local systems. That such a declaration of governmental policy stimulated and encouraged the development of the mining industry in the West is a matter of public history.

Upon the power of the Government to conduct the business of mining upon the public lands, the author says:

Mines in the United States are not ranked as the property of society, the working of which is to be confided to the Federal Government. Mining with us is not a "public utility." It is simply a private industry, to be fostered and encouraged as all other economic industries are fostered and encouraged; but the exploitation and development of mines are no more governmental functions than is the cultivation of the soil or the business of manufacturing. The United States is the paramount proprietor of the public mineral lands, holding them not as an attribute of sovereignty, but as property acquired by cession and purchase.

The Supreme Court of the United States has traced the evolution and establishment of the western system and the disappearance of the old Kingly claim of royalty in a most interesting way in the case of Mining Co. against Consolidated Mining Co. (102 U. S., 167, 172), as follows:

Very soon after the conquest of California and its cession to the United States by Mexico, it was found to be rich in the precious metals, and such was the rapid influx of immigrants from the Eastern States that the California population at the time it was organized as a State in 1850 was largely composed of mining camps and settlements engaged in mining these metals. As nearly all those mines were discovered on land the title of which was vested by the treaty in the Government of the United States, it became important to determine what course the Government would take with regard to this new source of untold wealth. The Spanish Government, to which this territory and much other, rich in precious metals, had once belonged, had instituted a system of laws concerning her mines by which private enterprise was invited to develop them and a revenue secured at the same time to the Crown, which made Spain for a time the richest of the civilized governments of the world. This system Mexico had inherited and perpetuated, and there were many American statesmen who believed that with the territory we had acquired the laws which governed the production of gold from the earth. Others believed that, whether this were so or not, it would be a wise policy for the Government to secure to itself a fair proportion of the metal produced from its own ground. But, while Congress delayed and hesitated to act, the swarm of enterprising and industrious citizens filled the country, and, before a State could be organized, had become its dominating element, with wealth, and numbers, and claims which demanded consideration.

Matters remained in this condition, with slight exception, until July 26, 1866, when Congress passed a law by which title to mineral land might be acquired from the Government at nominal prices, and by which the idea of a royalty upon the product of the mines was forever relinquished. (14 Stat., 251.)

Notwithstanding the conclusion of the court that "the idea of a royalty on the product of the mines was forever relinquished" by the United States, it is now proposed in these Alaska coal-land leasing bills to reestablish it on a broader and more dangerous scale. The fact that under that false system the public domain was for 40 years, from 1807 to 1847, a menace to the prosperity and development of the West is forgotten. Congress ought to remember, however, even if it forgets the earlier national failure, that under the California system of disposing of the mineral lands in small tracts to bona fide working miners great wealth and success came to the miners and to the Nation. With the aid and encouragement given to the miners by the California system, under which each miner is an owner, urged by individual enterprise and hope, with opportunity to secure wealth for himself and his family, these workingmen of the West have extracted immense riches from the earth, built homes, established schools, colleges, churches, and a high civilization in the waste places; erected a thousand cities and, in 60 years, created a score of sovereign States in the American Union. No such success has ever attended the labors of man before; no nation ever gained so much with so much honor and happiness in so short a time; and the system which enabled it to be accomplished is too sacred to destroy overnight for a mere political advantage.

THE FREE WESTERN LAND SYSTEM IN ALASKA.

The United States coal-land laws were an outgrowth of the western system and in line with the plan to sell small tracts of mineral lands to applicants who might use the same in the development of the country. The first of these statutes was passed on July 1, 1864. Prior thereto coal on the public domain had been disposed of under other general laws for the sale of public lands, even agricultural lands, without considering the presence of the coal.

The coal lands in Pennsylvania, Virginia, and the other States constituting the original 13 States never belonged to the United States, but were disposed of by the Crown prior to the Revolution or by the States thereafter. While much complaint has been heard in the United States about coal monopoly and combinations and excessive prices to the consumer, they have generally arisen from or in connection with coal combinations by or with the transportation companies in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. There has been but little complaint and but little justification for criticism against the western system of selling one small tract to each applicant, with a strict prohibition against acquiring another. There would be still less if the laws were faithfully executed.

When the existence of the valuable fields of Katalla and Matanuska high-grade coals was made known to the world, shrewd speculators saw an opportunity to gather great riches quickly, and they immediately entered the lands under the coal laws, as lawfully they might. However, it is now asserted, with much evidence to support the accusation, that not content to be limited in their acquisitions by the fair provisions of the United States statutes, many of these locators caused locations to be made by "dummys"—by clerks, stenographers, and hired men, with agreements that the claims should be conveyed to the speculator—thus enabling him to acquire more than 160 acres in violation of the law. Another charge is that other locators acting together agreed to locate several tracts under the law, but with the further agreement to convey them to a corporation to be formed by the locators, thus acquiring for a common interest a large area of coal lands, also in violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the law. Out of these and other charges grew the Alaska coal-land scandals—the Cunningham cases—the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation.

President Roosevelt first raised the bar to the acquisition of coal-land titles by his withdrawal of all Alaska coal lands from entry on November 7, 1906. Upon the representation that many coal claims were then lawfully in process of entry, on January 15, 1907, the general order of reservation was amended as follows:

Nothing in any withdrawal of lands from coal entry heretofore made shall impair any right acquired in good faith under the coal-land laws and existent at the date of such withdrawal.

This was assumed as authority to permit the completion of entries initiated in Alaska prior to the November withdrawal. No patents had, however, been issued when the Glavis charges against Secretary Ballinger were made; no decision upon the charges has since been announced; no patents have been issued. The Department of the Interior has refused to act upon pending Alaska coal cases; the wheels of justice have stood still for two years, apparently "never to go again." Fraudulent claims and honest efforts to enter Alaska coal lands are treated alike. The innocent are being punished with the guilty. Enforcement of the law is evaded by those who are sworn to enforce it, by the subterfuge of the necessity for amending it. The proposed amendment is worse than the frauds complained about.

What Alaska needs in respect to these coal cases is honest and open investigation, prompt and just decision, and an honest and fearless enforcement of statutes which have been virtually repealed for two years by the palsy of political fear.

Among the President's duties, by express constitutional command is this:

He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

What the Alaska situation needs is enforcement, execution, not enactment.

THE UNITED STATES COAL-LAND LAWS EXTENDED TO ALASKA, 1900—FIRST ERA: ACT OF JUNE 6, 1900.

The coal-land laws of the United States were first extended to Alaska by the act of June 6, 1900 (31 Stat. L., 658), as follows:

An act to extend the coal-land laws to the District of Alaska.

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the public-land laws of the United States are hereby extended to the District of Alaska as relate to coal lands, namely, sections 2347 to 2352, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes.

This act extended all the general coal-land laws then in force in the United States to Alaska, and thereafter identically the same coal-land laws were in force in Alaska and in Arizona, Washington, Montana, and the other States and Territories of the United States, until the modifying act of April 28, 1904, was passed.

However, it was soon discovered that the general laws thus extended were ineffective in Alaska, and in the circular issued June 27, 1900, the Commissioner of the General Land Office instructed the local land officers there that:

Under the coal law sections 2347 to 2352, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes, and the regulations thereunder, issued July 31, 1882, coal-land filings and coal entries must be by legal subdivisions as made by the regular United States survey. * * * Although the system of public-land surveys was extended to the District of Alaska by a provision contained in the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., 1098), no township or subdivisional surveys have been made, nor have any standard lines or bases for township and subdivisional surveys been established within the district, therefore until the filing in your office of the official plat of survey of the township no coal filing or entry can be made.

SECOND ERA—THE AMENDATORY ACT OF APRIL 28, 1904.

This defect in the general laws was remedied by "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to extend the coal-land laws to the District of Alaska,' approved June 6, 1900," which amendatory act was approved April 28, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 525). The first section of the act of 1904 provided:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person or association of persons qualified to make entry under the coal-land laws of the United States, who shall have opened or improved a coal mine or coal mines on any of the unsurveyed public lands of the United States, in the District of Alaska, may locate the lands upon which such mine or mines are situated in rectangular tracts containing 40, 80, or 160 acres, with north and south boundary lines run according to the true meridian, by marking the four corners thereof with permanent monuments, so that the boundaries thereof may be readily and easily traced. And all such locators shall, within one year from the passage of this act, or within one year from making such location, file for record in the recording district, and with the register and receiver of the land district in which the lands are located or situated, a notice containing the name or names of the locator or locators, the date of the location, the description of the lands located, and a reference to such natural objects or permanent monuments as will readily identify the same.

Sections 2 and 3 of the act of 1904 provided for final entry, sale, and the issuance of patents to unsurveyed coal lands in Alaska upon compliance with its terms and the payment of $10 per acre, and the last, or fourth, section of the act provided:

SEC. 4. That all the provisions of the coal-land laws of the United States not in conflict with the provisions of this act shall continue to be in full force in the District of Alaska.

Upon the approval of the act of 1904 the coal-land laws in Alaska embraced:

(1) All the general coal-land laws in force in the United States, and, in addition,

(2) The special act of 1904 authorizing the sale, entry, and patenting of unsurveyed coal land in Alaska only.

In Wyoming, Arizona, Washington, Utah, and all other public-land States and Territories the general coal-land laws only were in force; unsurveyed coal lands could not be entered in any State or Territory excepting favored Alaska. The coal-land laws in force in Alaska were just that much more favorable to the locator, honest or "dummy," than the general coal-land laws in the United States proper.

THE "CUNNINGHAM GROUP" OF COAL CLAIMS WAS LOCATED IN JULY AND AUGUST OF 1904, AFTER THE PASSAGE AND UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACT OF APRIL 28, 1904.

The location of this and a large number of similar groups of coal claims in the Katalla and Matanuska coal fields by the alleged use of "dummy" entrymen, engaged the attention of the Department of the Interior and the Director of the Geological Survey, and on November 3, 1906, the Acting Director of the Geological Survey, by letter of that date, recommended:

In previous recommendations no reference has been made to coal lands in Alaska. The coal and lignite deposits of that Territory are known to be of commercial value, and much attention has been given to their investigation by this survey. The reasons for withdrawing this coal from entry are fully as urgent as in case of that in the Western States and Territories, and I therefore suggest that the matter be brought to the attention of the President. Since the Land Office surveys have not yet been generally extended over Alaska, the coal lands can not be designated by legal subdivisions, and I therefore recommend that the order suspending coal entries be made to apply to the entire Territory.

The Secretary of the Interior referred the letter of the acting director to the President, and on November 7, 1906, the President made the following reservation of coal lands in Alaska:

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 7, 1906.

To the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR:

In reference to your letter of the 7th instant, inclosing letter of the Acting Director of the United States Geological Survey of November 3, I direct that the proposed action in reference to the coal lands of Alaska be taken. I return the letter of the acting director herewith.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The rules and regulations of the General Land Office at that time required the publication of a notice of proof for 60 days prior thereto by any claimant desiring to make entry and secure patent on a coal claim in Alaska, and, judging from the date of subsequent entries, the Cunningham group claimants were then publishing such notices and actively taking the steps necessary to prove up on their coal claims. The President's reservation was a bar to proof, and on January 15, 1907, the following departmental order was announced:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 15, 1907.

THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

SIR: By direction of the President, all orders heretofore issued withdrawing public lands from entry under the coal-land laws are hereby amended as follows:

"Nothing in any withdrawal of lands from coal entry heretofore made shall impair any right acquired in good faith under the coal-land laws and existent at the date of such withdrawals."

Very respectfully, E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

This departmental order being general and applicable to Alaska cleared the way for the completion of the Cunningham entries, and immediately thereafter, in February, March, April, and October, 1907, the Cunningham claimants completed publication, proofs, and entries for patent and final receiver's receipts, and the register's final coal certificates of entry were issued to each of them. The dates and transactions in the Cunningham claims, from location to final certificate, are shown in the following table drawn from the official records:

Name of locator.	Date of location, 1904.	Coal declaratory statement.		Date of entry payment and final receipt and certificate, 1907.

Pending the proceedings in the United States land office at Juneau, Alaska, by the 33 Cunningham claimants to conclude their entries of their 33 coal claims, their agent in fact and in law, Clarence Cunningham, and other claimants entered into negotiations with Stephen Birch, S. W. Eccles, and Daniel Guggenheim, for the Alaska syndicate, to sell the group or interests therein, to the syndicate. These negotiations were concluded on July 20, 1907, when the agent, Clarence Cunningham, A. B. Campbell, and M. C. Moore, "for themselves and as a committee representing their associates," met the representatives of the syndicate at Salt Lake City, Utah, and made, signed, and delivered the following optional contract to Guggenheim:

MEMORANDUM.

A. B. Campbell, Clarence Cunningham, and M. C. Moore, acting for themselves and certain parties associated with them, as hereinafter explained and hereinafter called the vendors, make the following representations and proposal to Daniel Guggenheim, of the city of New York, hereinafter called the vendee.

The said Cunningham, Campbell, and Moore, with 30 other parties, have acquired by purchase from the Government of the United States, under the Federal coal-land laws, 33 tracts of coal land of 160 acres each, aggregating 5,280 acres, situated in the Kayak recording district of Alaska, near the Bering River, about 25 miles from Katalla, and also have acquired certain inchoate water rights on Lake Kustakaw intended to be used in the exploitation of said properties.

The title to these lands rests in final United States receiver's certificate of entry, issued one to each of said 33 persons, and the papers in application for patent are now before the Commissioner of the General Land Office for his action thereon.

In order to consolidate the several interests for the purpose of dealing with said properties as an entirety, it has been determined that each of said entrymen shall convey his title to his individual tract to the Union Trust Co., of Spokane, Wash., in trust, for the purpose of transmitting or dealing with the title to the consolidated tract in such manner as shall be directed by C. J. Smith, R. K. Neill, H. W. Collins, Frederick Burbridge, Fred H. Mason, A. B. Campbell, and Clarence Cunningham, or a majority of those acting as a committee of said entrymen appointed for that purpose.

Conveyances by some of said entrymen to said trust company have been executed and delivered, and it is contemplated that all will execute similar conveyances within a short time.

A meeting of said entrymen was recently held at the city of Spokane, in which 25 out of the 33 participated. At said meeting a resolution was unanimously passed authorizing said committee, or a majority of them, to enter into negotiations with parties with a view to the equipment, development, and operation of the consolidated property and the sale of its product.

Acting for themselves and as such committee representing their associates, under said resolution, they submit to Mr. Guggenheim for his consideration the following proposal:

1. A corporation shall be formed under the laws of some State of the Union, under which laws meetings of directors may be held without the State of incorporation, the capital stock to be unassessable and no individual stockholders' liability.

2. The capital shall be $5,000,000, divided into 50,000 shares of the par value of $100 each.

3. There shall be 7 directors, 3 to be named by the vendors, 3 by the vendee. The seventh director shall be designated by the 6 named by the parties.

4. The title of all of said properties, including said inchoate water rights, shall be transferred to said corporation, in consideration for which there shall be issued to said vendors 25,000 shares of said capital stock.

5. The other half of said capital stock, viz, 25,000 shares, shall be deposited in escrow with the Bank of California, Seattle, with instructions to make delivery of same to Mr. Guggenheim or his nominee upon his payment to said depository, to the credit of said corporation, of the sum of $250,000, or at the rate of $10 per share. Said $250,000 shall be paid in such sums and at such times as may be called for by the board of directors. Said money to be considered as "working capital," to be expended by said corporation in the equipment, development, and operation of said properties. As payments are made by Mr. Guggenheim to said bank the bank shall be authorized to deliver to him one share of stock for each $10 so paid by him. Mr. Guggenheim shall have the privilege of paying said entire amount of working capital at any time, and thereupon to receive the entire 25,000 shares of said stock.

6. Should said sum of $250,000 prove inadequate for the purpose of equipping and developing said property, Mr. Guggenheim shall advance or loan to the corporation an additional sum of money not exceeding in the aggregate $100,000, the corporation binding itself to repay such advances on or before three years after the date of making the same, at the option of the board of directors of said corporation, with interest at 5 per cent per annum.

7. Said corporation shall enter into an agreement giving to said Guggenheim or his nominee the exclusive right to purchase, for the period of 25 years, the entire "run of mine" coal mined from said property, or so much thereof as said Guggenheim on his nominee may require or demand, for the sum of $2.25 per ton of 2,240 pounds. The coal is to be delivered at the mine, either in bunkers to be provided by the corporation for that purpose or upon cars, as said Guggenheim or his nominee may direct. Said Guggenheim or his nominee shall use their best endeavors to make a market for the coal in Alaska and in the ports and cities of the United States, to the end that as large a quantity of coal as possible may be mined. Said Guggenheim or his nominee shall agree to purchase all coal which they may require for use or sale from said corporation.

8. Payment for all coal so delivered to said Guggenheim or his nominee shall be made monthly, upon the basis of weights determined by the mine superintendent, such payments to be made at such place as may be directed by the corporation.

9. The corporation shall convey to such railroad company as may be designated by said Guggenheim, and which shall construct a railroad from tidewater to said mines, sufficient ground from its holding upon which to establish and maintain its tracks, switches, depots, terminals, stations, and other railway facilities.

10. The corporation shall further agree to sell and deliver, during the period of 25 years, to such railroad company as may be designated by said Guggenheim and which may construct a railroad from tidewater to the mines, all coal which may be required by said railroad company for consumption in its locomotives, shops, stations, and other facilities employed in the construction, maintenance, and operation of its railway for the sum of $1.75 per ton of 2,240 pounds, deliveries to be made at the mine in bunkers or on the cars of such railway.

11. The said Guggenheim shall have 20 days from the date hereof in which to determine whether or not he will cause an examination of said properties to be made with a view to an acceptance of this proposal if such examination proves satisfactory. He shall notify the vendors of such determination within said time by telegram addressed to Clarence Cunningham, at Seattle, Wash. Thereupon, if he elects to proceed with such examination, he shall be allowed the period of four months thereafter to inspect the properties and investigate the titles thereto. If such inspection and examination prove satisfactory he shall give notice of his final acceptance of this proposal by telegram directed to Clarence Cunningham, Seattle, Wash.

Thereupon the terms of this proposal shall be deemed binding upon all the parties and shall be carried into effect according to its tenor and purport.

12. It is understood, however, that said vendee shall not be required to proceed with said examination unless all of the 33 of the owners of said coal-land entries, or so many thereof as shall be satisfactory to said vendee, shall have conveyed their respective properties to said trust company, and said trust company shall, under the direction of said committee and as the holder of the title to said properties, have accepted the terms of the proposal and obligated itself to unite with said vendors in carrying the same into effect, in the event the examination of said properties and titles shall prove satisfactory to the vendee and he shall elect to finally accept the same.

Should the number of entrymen declining to convey their respective tracts to said trust company and participate in this proposal be so great as in the judgment of said vendee will prevent the successful inauguration and conduct of said enterprise, then and in that event this negotiation shall be at an end and all parties shall be relieved from all obligations arising hereunder.

Witness our hands in duplicate this 20th day of July, 1907.

A. B. CAMPBELL,
M. C. MOORE,
CLARENCE CUNNINGHAM,
For themselves and as a committee representing their associates.

Signed in the presence of—
S. W. ECCLES.
CURTIS H. LINDLEY.

At the time this contract was made three of the claimants, W. H. Warner, Frank A. Moore, and Nelson B. Nelson, had not made entry of their respective claims, which they thereafter completed in the Juneau land office on October 25, 1907.

Thereafter and on December 7, 1907, Daniel Guggenheim accepted the proposals of the Cunningham claimants in their proferred optional contract of July 20, 1907, as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, December 7, 1907.

CLARENCE CUNNINGHAM, Esq., Seattle, Wash.:

I hereby notify you that I finally accept the proposal made to me by A. B. Campbell, Clarence Cunningham, and M. C. Moore, acting for themselves and associates, in the memorandum of agreement of July 20, 1907.

DANIEL GUGGENHEIM.

(Charge M. G. Sons, Alaska, syndicate.)

On February 19, 1910, Mr. John N. Steele appeared with Mr. Stephen Birch before the Senate Committee on Territories as the representatives of the Alaska syndicate. Mr. Steele is their New York attorney and Mr. Birch their general manager and mining engineer in Alaska. They introduced the option of July 20, 1907, and Daniel Guggenheim's acceptance of December 7, 1907, in evidence, and upon examination by the chairman of that committee Mr. Steele testified (p. 145, hearings):

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Steele, on that point I would like to ask you just two or three questions, which perhaps you can answer. I put some of them to Mr. Birch this morning. The option was taken up on December 7, 1907, by the telegram of Daniel Guggenheim, was it not?

Mr. STEELE. It was.

The CHAIRMAN. He represented the interests of which you have spoken—of Messrs. Guggenheim and J. P. Morgan & Co.

Mr. STEELE. He was acting for the Alaska syndicate.

The CHAIRMAN. He was acting for the Alaska syndicate?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And this telegram was an acceptance of the option by the Alaska syndicate?

Mr. STEELE. It was an acceptance of the option by the Alaska syndicate.

The CHAIRMAN. And so that closed the option, so far as that could be closed?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I notice on the telegram this: "Charge M. G. Sons, Alaska syndicate." So that fixes it?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question about that?

Mr. STEELE. No, sir; none at all.

The CHAIRMAN. So that to-day any rights that accrue or may accrue to the Alaska syndicate under this option thus taken up on December 7, 1907, still may be exercised as soon as the lands are patented?

Mr. STEELE. That is our view.

So far as the public is credibly informed, no change has been made in the contract relations of the 33 Cunningham claimants and the Alaska syndicate since Mr. Steele's testimony was given on February 19, 1910, and in his view as the attorney for the syndicate the contract of July 20, 1907, and the acceptance of December 7, 1907, still bind the parties when the patents shall issue.

In the Pinchot brief it is declared that—

The agreement which was entered into between the Cunningham claimants and the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate does not in any way affect the validity of their entries. It was entered into after final certificates were issued by the Government, and was entirely legal if the claims were bona fide.

The general public seems inclined to assume that when the Cunningham claimants shall secure patents this entire group of 5,280 acres will become the property of the Alaska syndicate under that option.

THIRD ERA—ACT OF MAY 28, 1908.

All the 33 Cunningham entries were fully completed according to the formal requirements of the United States statutes in the year 1907. Thereafter it became a question how far their and other Alaska coal-land groupings were valid. It was thought desirable by coal claimants to secure additional legislation specifically authorizing large groupings of coal lands in Alaska in the effort to persuade capital to invest in a large and profitable enterprise. After the Cunningham claims were permitted to go to final entry the general public and certain agents of the Department of the Interior feared that a systematic effort was being made by the Alaska syndicate and other large nonresident interests to secure a monopoly of coal lands and coal transportation in Alaska, and much opposition to that effort was aroused.

The act of May 28, 1908, legalized a consolidation of 2,560 acres of Alaska coal lands, but with a drastic antimonopoly clause against any further combination. The act is as follows:

An act to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska.

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons, their heirs or assigns, who have in good faith personally or by an attorney in fact made locations of coal land in the Territory of Alaska in their own interest prior to November 12, 1906, or in accordance with circular of instructions issued by the Secretary of the Interior May 16, 1907, may consolidate their said claims or locations by including in a single claim, location, or purchase not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands, not exceeding in length twice the width of the tract thus consolidated, and for this purpose such persons, their heirs, or assigns may form associations or corporations, who may perfect entry of and acquire title to such lands in accordance with the other provisions of law under which said locations were originally made: Provided, That no corporation shall be permitted to consolidate its claims under this act unless 75 per cent of its stock shall be held by persons qualified to enter coal lands in Alaska.

SEC. 2. That the United States shall at all times have the preference right to purchase so much of the product of any mine or mines opened upon the lands sold under the provisions of this act as may be necessary for the use of the Army and Navy, and at such reasonable and remunerative price as may be fixed by the President; but the producers of any coal so purchased, who may be dissatisfied with the price thus fixed, shall have the right to prosecute suits against the United States in the Court of Claims for the recovery of any additional sum or sums they may claim as justly due upon such purchase.

SEC. 3. That if any of the lands or deposits purchased under the provisions of this act shall be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres in the District of Alaska, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General of the United States in the courts for that purpose.

SEC. 4. That every patent issued under this act shall expressly recite the terms and conditions prescribed in sections 2 and 3 hereof.

Approved, May 28, 1908.

With the approval of the foregoing act, which applies only to Alaska, the Territory of Alaska had, and now has, in force there:

(1) All the general coal-land laws in force in the United States—all the laws relating to coal and coal lands which are in force in the States and in Arizona and New Mexico, and, in addition thereto,

(2) The act of Congress of April 28, 1904, permitting the location and sale of coal lands in Alaska upon the unsurveyed public domain, which can not be located in any other State or Territory, and, in addition thereto,

(3) The act of Congress of May 28, 1908, permitting and legalizing a consolidation or grouping of Alaskan coal lands to the extent of 2,560 acres for large enterprises, giving the United States a preference right to purchase the output for the use of the Army and Navy, and with a drastic antimonopoly clause forfeiting the title of the land to the United States for any unlawful trust or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of the coal.

Conceding that the clause permitting a consolidation of 2,560 acres is beneficial to the public interests, Alaska now has the best coal-land laws in the United States. She is specially favored over other States and Territories because she has the same laws they have and the acts of 1904 and 1908 in addition. We may locate unsurveyed coal lands in Alaska, and need only pay a flat rate of $10 per acre; we may consolidate or group our claims and enter 2,560 acres in one body for large enterprises, while in the States and other Territories no more than 160 acres can be obtained for an enterprise until after entry. The act of 1908 makes the Government a preferred purchaser of coal in Alaska for Army and Navy use, a right not reserved in any other State or Territory, while a violation of the stringent antimonopoly clause in that act is cause for a forfeiture of the title and enables the United States to vacate the patent and resume its former rightful possession.

Alaska has the best coal-land laws in the United States or in any of the Territories; better than the general coal-land laws in force in Wyoming, Utah, Arizona, or any of the public-land States or Territories, for in none of these is there any law authorizing the location of unsurveyed lands, nor authorizing consolidation for large enterprises, nor any sufficient law to prevent unlawful trusts and conspiracies in restraint of trade in the mining and selling of coal. In all these respects the laws in force in Alaska are better than those anywhere else in American territory. Then why is it asserted that "the existing coal-land laws of Alaska are most unsatisfactory, and should be radically amended"?

WHY IS AMENDMENT SUGGESTED FOR ALASKA ALONE?

In his report the Secretary of the Interior says of the coal-land laws in Alaska:

Reverting to the condition of the public-land laws in Alaska, even the most cursory examination of them, in view of local conditions of climate, of isolation, except as to ocean transportation, and of the vast extent and lack of homogeneity of the Territory, satisfies all practical men that they are crude and unsuited to the best interests of the Government. On the other hand, experiments at amendment have placed the ban on development, so that progress is at a deadlock. Without domestic coal in Alaska railroad construction and operation is prohibitive, and without both only the roughest pioneer development is possible.

The suggestion that local conditions of climate, of isolation, and the vast extent and lack of homogeneity of the Territory render the coal-land laws in force in Alaska crude and unsuited to the best interests of the Government is interesting, though without foundation in fact. Both the Katalla and Matanuska coal fields, the best in Alaska, lie near great, wide, safe, and commodious Pacific coast harbors, which are open every day in the year to the largest colliers ever built, and to the fleets of the world for that matter. They are nearer to those harbors than the Pocahontas and Pennsylvania fields are to the Atlantic Ocean harbors. Railroads are already constructed to within a few miles of both, and the haul is down grade from the mine to the harbor.

The climate is mild on the coast, and the mines and transporting railroads may be operated as freely, both winter and summer, as are those in Pennsylvania. There is nothing in either of those suggestions that renders the United States statutes extended to Alaska either crude or unsuited to the best interests of the Government.

The Secretary's suggestion that "experiments at amendment have placed the ban on development so that progress is at a deadlock," however, has the merit of pointing to the real thought in his mind, namely, the antimonopoly section of the act of 1908. In the President's St. Paul address, made a part of his message to Congress, he declares upon the subject of Alaska coal-land law:

The history of the laws affecting the disposition of Alaska coal lands shows them to need amendment badly. Speaking of them Mr. Brooks says: * * *

"Remedial legislation was sought and enacted in the statute of May 28, 1908. This law permitted the consolidation of claims staked previous to November 12, 1906, in tracts of 2,560 acres. One clause of this law invalidated the title if any individual or corporation at any time in the future owned any interest whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in more than one tract. The purpose of this clause was to prevent the monopolization of coal fields; its immediate effect was to discourage capital. It was felt by many that this clause might lead to forfeiture of title through the accidents of inheritance, or might even be used by the unscrupulous in blackmailing. It would appear that land taken up under this law might at any time be forfeited to the Government through the action of any individual who, innocently or otherwise, obtained interest in more than one coal company. Such a title was felt to be too insecure to warrant the large investments needed for mining developments. The net result of all this is that no titles to coal lands have been passed."

This objection, so skillfully stated by Mr. Brooks and so fully approved by the President, is the crux to the Alaska coal situation. Shall the antimonopoly clause of the act of 1908 be repealed? Shall the laws which Congress has extended to Alaska and which now so amply protect the people from unlawful trusts and conspiracies in restraint of trade in mining and selling coal be denounced and amended to death, and a "wide-open" policy substituted therefor?

THE CUNNINGHAM TITLE.

Before discussing the proposed "amendments" to the coal-land laws in Alaska it is important to discover what private titles the United States has already created in those lands.

Prior to the passage of the act of May 28, 1908, and in February, March, April, and October, 1907, the 33 Cunningham claimants had made application for patent, published and posted each a 60 days' notice of the presentation of such application, and on the date fixed had made final proof in the United States land office at Juneau, Alaska, of their compliance with the existing laws. Six months after the expiration of the period of publication, no objections nor adverse claims having been filed by the United States or any citizen thereof, the proofs were made, filed, examined, and allowed, the receiver of the land office accepted the purchase price of $10 per acre, issued his official receipt therefor and turned the money into the United States Treasury. At the same time the register at Juneau issued the register's final coal certificate of entry in substantially the following form in each of the 33 cases:

REGISTER'S FINAL COAL CERTIFICATE OF ENTRY.

Coal entry No. 12. LAND OFFICE AT JUNEAU, ALASKA,
February 21, 1907.

It is hereby certified that in pursuance of the Revised Statutes of the U. S. relating to coal lands, Clarence Cunningham, residing at Spokane, in Spokane County, State of Washington, on this day purchased of the register of this office the Maxine coal claim in the Kayak recording district, Alaska, containing 159.241 acres, at the rate of ten dollars per acre, amounting to fifteen hundred ninety-two dollars and forty-one cents, for which said Clarence Cunningham has made payment in full as required by law.

Now therefore be it known that on presentation of this certificate to the Commissioner of the General Land Office the said Clarence Cunningham shall be entitled to receive a patent for the land above described if all be found regular.

JOHN W. DUDLEY, Register.

"If all be found regular," Clarence Cunningham and his 32 associates are entitled to their patents in fee from the United States. Irregularity may consist of fraud or perjury, it may be a criminal act punishable under the United States criminal laws, or it may be only such fraudulent representations or mistake which will justify the Department of the Interior in refusing to issue the patent. The United States statute of limitations provides a bar for prosecutions for crime if not brought within the time limit fixed thereby. The act of April 13, 1876, amending section 1044 of the Revised Statutes declares:

No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within three years next after such offense shall have been committed.

The last act in the entry of these 33 Cunningham claims was performed on October 25, 1907, and the bar of the statute became complete on October 25, 1910, so that thereafter no person could be "prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense"—for any fraud or perjury—connected with the location or entry of any of the 33 Cunningham claims.

"If all be found regular," however, includes more than criminal irregularity. The criminal prosecution may be waived and yet the evidence may be sufficient to justify the withholding of the patent. In the Cunningham cases, however, the Department of the Interior has neither prosecuted for fraud nor announced any finding that the entries ought to be vacated for fraud or mistake. More than three years have transpired since the last certificate was issued, and yet nothing has been done by the Government to declare these entries wrongful. The presumption of innocence is that the department has no evidence to justify a judgment that these entries are wrongful, neither to justify prosecution, which is now barred anyway, nor to justify the vacation of the entries for fraud or mistake. Then, what does the department intend to do?

The President proposes to enact the leasing system, while the Secretary of the Interior in his last report recommends:

A class of entries known as the Cunningham entries, made in 1907, have provoked wide discussion and popular interest, largely because of their alleged value and method of attempted acquisition. In view of such conditions I deem it of the highest importance that all these cases, involving 33 entries, or 5,280 acres, of coal lands, be transferred from the jurisdiction of the General Land Office directly to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia for consideration and adjudication, without the necessity for a ruling as to the validity or invalidity of these entries by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as is now required in such cases.

Will the Cunningham group and other Alaskan coal lands be restored to the public by either of these methods?

THE LEGAL VALUE OF THE CUNNINGHAM ENTRIES.

The United States has issued and delivered to each of the 33 Cunningham claimants a final coal certificate of entry, which authorizes each of them to demand and receive a patent in fee without any further act on his part. It is the Government's move, and the very natural inquiry is, "What can the Government do about it?"

What legal value has a final coal certificate of entry, and what may the Government do to recover these Alaskan coal lands?

In a recent case, The United States against Detroit Lumber Co. (200 U. S., 321–337), the Supreme Court of the United States said upon this question:

* * * It becomes necessary to inquire what is the significance of a final receiver's receipt and the effect of a cancellation by the Land Department of such a receipt. The receipt is an acknowledgment by the Government that it has received full pay for the land, that it holds the legal title in trust for the entryman and will in due course issue to him a patent. He is the equitable owner of the land. It becomes subject to State taxation and under the control of State laws in respect to conveyances, inheritances, etc. (Carroll v. Safford, 3 How., 441; Witherspoon v. Duncan, 4 Wall., 210; Simmons v. Wagner, supra; Winona & St. Peter Land Co. v. Minnesota, 159 U. S., 526; Cornelius v. Kessel, 128 U. S., 456; Hastings & Dakota R. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S., 357; Benson Mining Co. v. Alta Mining Co., 145 U. S., 428.)

Indeed in some of the opinions of this court, emphasizing the value of a receiver's receipt, there are expressions which seem to underestimate the significance of a patent. (Wisconsin Central R. R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U. S., 496, 510; Deseret Salt Co. v. Tarpey, 142 U. S., 241, 251.) For it must be remembered the latter is the instrument which passes the legal title, and that until it is issued the legal title remains with the Government and is subject to investigation and determination by the Land Department. (Barden v. Northern Pacific R. R. Co., 154 U. S., 288, 326; Michigan Land & Lumber Co. v. Rust, 168 U. S., 589, 592; Guaranty Savings Bank v. Bladow, 176 U. S., 448.) But while until the issue of the patent the land is under the control of the Land Department which, upon proper investigation and for sufficient reasons, may set aside the certificate of entry, yet this power of the Land Department can not arbitrarily be exercised without notice to the entryman, and if improperly exercised the rights of the entryman may be enforced in the courts after the patent has issued to other parties. (Guaranty Savings Bank v. Bladow, supra.) It is true as against the Government and while the title remains in the Government he may not be able to enforce his equity, because no action can be maintained against the Government except upon contract express or implied. (United States v. Jones, 131 U. S., 1.) But while he may not sue on his equity, he may protect that equity when sued by the Government.

And in Cornelius against Kessel (128 U. S., 456, 460, 461) the court in an earlier case said:

* * * When the tract which was subject to entry was thus purchased and paid for it ceased to be subject to the disposal of the United States; it was not in equity their property. (Carroll v. Safford, 3 How., 440, 460; Witherspoon v. Duncan, 4 Wall., 210, 218.) The legal title, it is true, was retained by them, but they held it as trustee for the benefit of the purchaser, and they were bound upon proper application to issue to him a patent therefor.

* * * * * * *

The power of supervision possessed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office over the acts of the register and receiver of the local land offices in the disposition of the public lands undoubtedly authorizes him to correct and annul entries of land allowed by them where the lands are not subject to entry, or the parties do not possess the qualifications required, or have previously entered all that the law permits. The exercise of this power is necessary to the due administration of the Land Department. If an investigation of the validity of such entries were required in the courts of law before they could be canceled, the necessary delays attending the examination would greatly impair, if not destroy, the efficiency of the department. But the power of supervision and correction is not an unlimited or an arbitrary power. It can be exerted only when the entry was made upon false testimony or without authority of law. It can not be exercised so as to deprive any person of land lawfully entered and paid for. By such entry and payment the purchaser secures a vested interest in the property and a right to a patent therefor, and can no more be deprived of it by order of the commissioner than he can be deprived by such order of any other lawfully acquired property. Any attempted deprivation in that way of such interest will be corrected whenever the matter is presented so that the judiciary can act upon it.

From the foregoing and other authoritative decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States it follows that when Clarence Cunningham (and each of his 32 associates or any other person) made entry and payment for his Alaska coal claim and received from the United States register and receiver his final receipt and final coal certificate of entry (1) he became the equitable owner of the land; (2) that the United States thereafter held the legal title thereto in trust for him; and (3) will in due course issue to him a patent conveying the legal title. (4) Until the patent issues, and while the legal title remains in the United States, the facts upon which the title is based are subject to investigation and determination by the land department. (5) This power of the land department can not be arbitrarily exercised and without notice to the entryman, and (6) if it is so exercised, the entryman may enforce his rights in the courts after patent has issued to another for the land. (7) Upon notice to the entryman and a hearing under the rules and regulations of the Land Office, the land department may annul his entry when it is satisfactorily shown by clear and convincing evidence that the entry was made upon false testimony or without authority of law; but (8) such annulment can not be exercised so as to deprive him of lands lawfully entered, and (9) by such entry he acquired a vested property right which can not be destroyed except upon direct attack, upon notice and hearing in lawful proceeding. (10) The 33 Cunningham entries were completed in 1907, before Congress passed the antimonopoly act of May 28, 1908, which has no retrospective effect and does not attach to the Cunningham patents. They must issue under the law as it existed in 1907.

A NATIONAL LANDLORD AND TENANT SYSTEM FOR ALASKA.

Alaska has an appointive governor, an executive department, and a system of district and lesser courts, with appeals to the United States circuit court of appeals, ninth circuit, being practically the same executive and judicial departments that all other Territories have had. Alaska, however, has no legislature—no legislative department, no law-making body in the Territory. Congress is the only law-making body with power to enact laws for Alaska.

In his last message the President has urged upon Congress the enactment of but two laws for Alaska—one creating an appointive legislative commission, and the other a leasing system for coal lands. He said:

The passage of a law permitting the leasing of Government coal lands in Alaska after public competition, and the appointment of a commission for the government of the Territory, with enabling powers to meet the local needs, will lead to an improvement in Alaska and the development of her resources that is likely to surprise the country. * * *

The suggestion that the appointment of a commission will lead to the control of the government by corporate or selfish and exploiting interests has not the slightest foundation in fact. Such a government worked well in the Philippines and would work well in Alaska, and those who are really interested in the proper development of that Territory for the benefit of the people who live in it and the benefit of the people of the United States, who own it, should support the institution of such a government.

They do. The Literary Digest of September 3, 1910, quotes Senator GUGGENHEIM as declaring:

It has been repeated ad nauseum this winter that these riches belong to "the people," by which is generally meant the people who sit comfortably at home and not those who risk all they have, including their lives, and suffer hardships incredible to the ease-loving Easterners in finding them. They do. They are Federal possessions, quite valueless till found, developed, linked with the world, and made producing and profitable. Men and capital must do this work, and it is risky work for both. Both are entitled to rewards commensurate with the risk, and if Alaska is to be developed at all the interests of these pioneers must be guarded as jealously as the interests of the man at home.

And Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, another of the Alaska syndicate, who said:

The demand for conservation is good enough, but it must not go as far as it does at present. Capital is readily frightened, and the fact is that population in Alaska is at present not increasing, because intending immigrants do not know what they can count upon. To me it appears that Alaskan resources, especially its coal and timbers, could be developed under the control of a United States commission, something like the Interstate Commerce Commission, a body which should determine how fast coal may be taken out and timber cut, what royalty should be paid to the Government, and, perhaps, even what percentage of profits should be permitted to be made by the promoters and corporations who desire to work these resources.

The Alaska syndicate and every vote and influence it could command, through persuasion or otherwise, supported the President's suggestion at the last election in Alaska. The nonresident Fish Trust, growing fat off the resources of Alaska, supported it. The Alaska Northern Railway, a present applicant for coal lease, supported it from its Canadian headquarters. Every Federal appointee in Alaska, guided and threatened by the appointive governor and the military head of the Alaska road commission, supported it. Two members of the Cabinet, then in Alaska, saw and approved these efforts and supported it. A letter from the President of the United States addressed to the governor of Alaska, publicly printed and widely distributed through Alaska, supported it. It had a large majority in the Alaska syndicate railroad construction gang, freshly imported from the States and voted in violation of the United States statutes; but the vigorous and independent American miners in Alaska, who know what it means from what they now see there, refused to support it and gave a large majority against it. The people of Alaska strongly disapprove of the creation of an appointive military legislative commission for the government of an American Territory, inhabited by more than 40,000 American citizens, and never will support it. It may "work well in the Philippines," but it will not in Alaska—there is a difference.

Nor do the people of Alaska, nor of the great West, nor in Indiana, nor in any other American community where they understand the situation, approve the principle that because the United States are made a trustee for the natural wealth and resources of the Territory of Alaska by the Constitution that they thereby "own it" and may sell and dispose of those resources as a private owner may, and put the royalty or kingly revenue into the United States Treasury for the benefit of those States which retained and used in their local development exactly the same resources.

In his St. Paul address, made a part of his message, the President leaves no doubt of his intention to put the United States in the attitude of a landlord and to lease the coal lands as the ordinary owner does. He said:

If the Government leases the coal lands and acts as any landlord would, and imposes conditions in its leases like those which are now imposed by the owners in fee of coal mines in the various coal regions of the East, then it would retain over the disposition of the coal deposits a choice as to the assignee of the lease, a power of resuming possession at the end of the term of the lease, or of readjusting terms at fixed periods of the lease, which might easily be framed to enable it to exercise a limited but effective control in the disposition and sale of the coal to the public. It has been urged that the leasing system has never been adopted in this country, and that its adoption would largely interfere with the investment of capital and the proper development and opening up of the coal resources. I venture to differ entirely from this view. My investigations show that many owners of mining property of this country do not mine it themselves, and do not invest their money in the plants necessary for the mining; but they lease their properties for a term of years varying from 20 to 40 years, under conditions requiring the erection of a proper plant and the investment of a certain amount of money in the development of the mines and fixing a rental and a royalty, sometimes an absolute figure and sometimes one proportioned to the market value of the coal. Under this latter method the owner of the mine shares in the prosperity of his lessee when coal is high and the profits good, and also shares to some extent in their disappointment when the price of coal falls.

Frankly and fairly the President proposes that the United States shall assume the position of an owner in fee of the coal lands in Alaska and lease them to private parties upon long-term leases with the usual covenants and risks of the ordinary owner of coal lands. He takes the position with respect to Alaska that the United States does "own it," and has the power to lease or sell its resources to the highest bidder.

In the sense of trusteeship it may be conceded that the United States does "own" Alaska, but the Constitution expressly declares that—

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.

That is the limit of the power of Congress to dispose of the resources of Alaska, and the question is raised whether, under that power, Congress may withdraw the public domain from "the people of the United States, who own it," and lease it, as the owner of private property may, for gain or royalty, and put the proceeds in the Public Treasury. Of course, if Congress may go into business as the owner of coal lands, it may do likewise with copper lands, gold lands, timber lands, oil lands, water-power lands, and agricultural lands; in fact, with anything belonging to the public domain.

If Congress may withdraw and lease for 50 years it may lease for 999 years. If it may withdraw and lease 1 acre, it may withdraw and lease 590,884 square miles—the whole area of Alaska. There is no limit to the power if it exists. If it has the power in Alaska it had it in respect to the Louisiana, Mexican, and Oregon Territories, and by its exercise might have prevented the acquisition of private titles in the public domain there, and thus effectually have prevented the creation of all the States west of the Mississippi River, as it may do in Alaska. If it has that power it may establish national landlordism over Alaska, and every man, woman, and child therein may be reduced to the status of a tenant and an employee of the Alaska Syndicate, the Fish Trust, or some other monopoly created by the landlord.

MAY THE UNITED STATES LAWFULLY GO INTO BUSINESS AS A COAL-LEASING LANDLORD IN ALASKA?

In Van Brocklin against State of Tennessee (117 U. S., 151, 158), the court declares:

The United States do not and can not hold property, as a monarch may, for private or personal purposes. All the property and revenues of the United States must be held and applied, as all taxes, duties, imposts, and excises must be laid and collected, "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." (Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 1.)

Probably the principle announced in South Carolina against United States (199 U. S., 437, 454) will apply. In that case South Carolina embarked upon the business of selling intoxicating liquors, and created a monopoly of the business to itself by excluding all other persons therefrom. The United States demanded the license taxes prescribed by the internal-revenue act for dealers in intoxicating liquors; the tax was paid and the State sued to recover. The Supreme Court said:

The right of South Carolina to control the sale of liquor by the dispensary system has been sustained. (Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co., No. 1, 170 U. S., 438.) The profits from the business in the year 1901, as appears from the finding of fact, were over a half a million of dollars. Mingling the thought of profit with the necessity of regulation may induce the State to take possession, in like manner, of tobacco, oleomargarine, and all other objects of internal-revenue tax. If one State finds it thus profitable, other States may follow, and the whole body of internal-revenue tax be thus stricken down.

More than this. There is a large and growing movement in the country in favor of the acquisition and management by the public of what are termed public utilities, including not merely therein the supply of gas and water, but also the entire railroad system. Would the State by taking into possession these public utilities lose its republican form of government?

We may even go a step further. There are some insisting the State shall become the owner of all property and the manager of all business. Of course this is an extreme view, but its advocates are earnestly contending that thereby the best interests of all citizens will be subserved. If this change may be made in any State, how much would that State contribute to the revenue of the Nation? If this extreme action is not to be counted among the probabilities, consider the result of one much less so. Suppose the State assumes under its police power the control of all those matters subject to the internal-revenue tax and also engages in the business of importing all foreign goods.

The same argument which would exempt the sale by a State of liquor, tobacco, etc., from a license tax would exempt the importation of merchandise by a State from import duty. While the State might not prohibit importations, as it can the sale of liquor, by private individuals, yet, paying no import duty, it could undersell all individuals, and so monopolize the importation and sale of foreign goods.

Obviously, if the power of the State is carried to the extent suggested, and with it relief from all Federal taxation, the National Government would be largely crippled in its revenues. Indeed, if all the States should concur in exercising their power to the full extent, it would be almost impossible for the Nation to collect any revenues. In other words, in this indirect way it would be within the competency of the States to practically destroy the efficiency of the National Government.

* * * * * * *

Whatever Utopian theories may have been presented by any writers were regarded as mere creations of fancy, and had no practical recognition. It is true that monopolies in respect to certain commodities were known to have been granted by absolute monarchs, but they were not regarded as consistent with Anglo-Saxon ideas of government. The opposition to the Constitution came not from any apprehension of danger from the extent of power reserved to the States, but, on the other hand, entirely through fear of what might result from the exercise of the powers granted to the Central Government. While many believed that the liberty of the people depended on the preservation of the rights of the States, they had no thought that those States would extend their functions beyond their then recognized scope, or so as to imperil the life of the Nation. As well said by Chief Justice Nott, delivering the opinion of the Court of Claims in this case (39 Ct. Cls., 284):

"Moreover, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution there probably was not one person in the country who seriously contemplated the possibility of Government, whether State or National, ever descending from its primitive plan of a body politic to take up the work of the individual or body corporate. The public suspicion associated government with patents of nobility, with an established church, with standing armies, and distrusted all governments. Even in the high intelligence of the convention there were men who trembled at the power given to the President, who trembled at the power which the Senate might usurp, who feared that the life tenure of the judiciary might imperil the liberties of the people. Certain it is that if the possibility of a government usurping the ordinary business of individuals, driving them out of the market, and maintaining place and power by means of what would have been called in the heated invective of the time, 'a legion of mercenaries,' had been in the public mind, the Constitution would not have been adopted, or an inhibition of such power would have been placed among Madison's amendments."

And the Supreme Court concludes:

If we look upon the Constitution in the light of the common law, we are led to the same conclusion. All the avenues of trade were open to the individual. The Government did not attempt to exclude him from any. Whatever restraints were put upon him were mere police regulations to control his conduct in the business and not to exclude him therefrom. The Government was no competitor, nor did it assume to carry on any business which ordinarily is carried on by individuals. Indeed, every attempt at monopoly was odious in the eyes of the common law, and it mattered not how that monopoly arose, whether from grant of the sovereign or otherwise. The framers of the Constitution were not anticipating that a State would attempt to monopolize any business heretofore carried on by individuals.

While the real point in issue in this decision concerns the power of the United States to compel the State to pay a revenue tax, the Supreme Court, in its argument, specifically and forcefully condemns the attempt of a State to go into business and conduct the sale of liquor for a profit, to create a monopoly of the traffic for itself, and to exclude all its citizens from engaging in that trade and profit. While the language of the court in that case is leveled at the attempt of a State to engage in private traffic for profit, it is equally as cogent and applicable to any attempt by the United States to engage in a similar enterprise. There is some reason and law to justify a State to take to itself a monopoly of the hated liquor traffic in the exercise of its police power to protect its inhabitants from the vice, crime, disorder, and poverty inflicted upon them through the liquor traffic, but no such excuse can be offered when the United States shall create a monopoly in itself and engage in the coal traffic with the property of "the people of the United States, who own it."

I am aware that in the case of the United States against Gratiot (14 Pet., 526) the Supreme Court held that Congress had power to lease the lead mines in Illinois for a short period under its power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, but whether it will adhere to and extend that ruling and approve the present-day attempts to convert the public domain into a national business enterprise for national profit can only be judged of by the language used in the Tennessee and South Carolina cases.

If the administration coal-leasing bill now pending for passage in the Senate shall be sustained on principle, then so must those planks in the Socialist Party platform of 1908, which demands:

1. The collective ownership of railroads, telegraphs, telephones, steamship lines, and all other means of social transportation and communication, and all land.
2. The collective ownership of all industries which are organized on a national scale and in which competition has virtually ceased to exist.
3. The extension of public domain to include mines, quarries, oil wells, forests, and water power.
4. The scientific reforestation of timber lands and the reclamation of swamp lands. The lands so reforested or reclaimed to be permanently retained as a part of the public domain.

Communism may have its advantages over republicanism, but, unfortunately for such schemes as this national coal-leasing plan for Alaska, the Constitution of the United States expressly declares that "the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government."

May the Congress, then, depart from republican principles in its legislation and establish a communistic form of government in a Territory? May it establish a national coal-land leasing monopoly, a national oil-land leasing monopoly, a national fur-seal leasing monopoly, a national forest-land monopoly, and a national monopoly of all the other resources of that helpless Territory, in its own right, as a national landlord, for national profit, and use the public domain, the Public Treasury, and the powers and instrumentalities of the Nation in aid of its exclusive national business enterprises? May it withdraw the public domain and its treasures from "the people who own it" and reduce them to the status of tenants upon the estate of the national landlord?

As the representative of the people of Alaska, I protest against the extension of any such a principle of government to that Territory.

ALASKA'S CENTURY OF SERVITUDE TO NATIONAL MONOPOLY.

Before Thomas Jefferson became President of the United States Alaska and all its resources were leased by the Czar of all the Russias to the Russian-American Co. While it had been previously explored and its resources prospected by hardy and independent traders and subjects of the Czar, while they had blazed the trails and located the natural wealth of the land and the sea, this first leasing bill destroyed their pioneer rights and compelled them to return to Siberia in despair or to accept such employment as the company might give its serfs, at such wages as it pleased to bestow.

THE FIRST RUSSIAN-AMERICAN CO.'S LEASE, 1799.

"By the grace of a merciful God, we, Paul I, Emperor of all the Russias," leased Alaska to the Russian-American Co., for 20 years, on July 8, 1799. Most great grafts emanating from the throne are thus announced. The livery of heaven is borrowed to serve the devil in.

The manner of securing this first lease from the Czar for the Russian-American syndicate is graphically described by Bancroft; it is typical, and for comparison's sake it is quoted:

Nevertheless it was at first feared that the decease of Catherine II would be a death-blow to the ambitious schemes of the Shelikof party, for it was known that her successor, Paul I, was opposed to them. But Rezanof never for a moment lost heart, and with the versatility of a true courtier, quickly adapted himself to the change of circumstances. He had been a faithful servant to the pleasure-loving Empress, and he now became a constant companion and attendant upon the feeble-minded man who wore the crown. So successful were his efforts that on the 11th of August, 1799, the act of consolidation of the United American Co. was confirmed by imperial ukase, and the association then received the name of the Russian-American Co.

In the lease or charter the Czar took the company under "our highest protection," and, "for the purpose of aiding the company in its enterprises, we allow the commander of our land and sea forces to employ said forces in the company's aid, if occasion requires it," and granted to it the exclusive right—

III. To use and profit by everything which has been or shall be discovered in those localities, on the surface and in the interior of the earth, without competition from others.

Having thus obtained the coal, copper, and all other resources, and that there might be no independent or progressive views abroad in that region, the sixth privilege recited that the company had the right—

VI. To employ for navigation, hunting, and all other business free and unsuspected people having no illegal views or intentions. In consideration of the distance of the localities where they will be sent, the provincial authorities will grant to all persons sent out as settlers, hunters, and in other capacities passports for seven years. Serfs and house servants will only be employed by the company with the consent of their landholders, and Government tax will be paid for all serfs thus employed.

Evidently, also, conservation had a hold in Russia, for the next privilege extended to the company provided for cutting timber on the Government's forest reserves, as follows:

VII. Though it is forbidden by our highest order to cut Government timber anywhere without the permission of the admiralty college, this company is hereby permitted, on account of the distance of the admiralty from Okhotsk, when it needs timber for repairs, and occasionally for the construction of new ships, to use freely such timber as is required.

The monopoly was then made safe and secure by the tenth provision:

X. The exclusive right is most graciously granted to the company for a period of 20 years to use and enjoy, in the above-described extent of country and islands, all profits and advantages derived from hunting, trade, industries, and discovery of new lands, prohibiting the employment of these profits and advantages not only to those who would wish to sail to those countries on their own account, but to all former hunters and trappers who have been engaged in this trade and have their vessels and furs at those places; and other companies which may have been formed will not be allowed to continue their business unless they unite with the present company with their free consent; but such private companies and traders as have their vessels in those regions can either sell their property or, with the company's consent, remain until they have obtained a cargo, but no longer than is required for the loading and return of their vessel; and after that nobody will have any privileges but this one company, which will be protected in the enjoyment of all the rights mentioned.

Being fearful that something might escape from the syndicate through the natural inclination of men to do justice, the last clause provided that—

Only partners of the company shall be employed in the administration of the new possessions in charge of the company.

Armed with this imperial lease and flanked and guarded by the Russian Army and Navy, the monopoly of the Russian-American Co. was established over Alaska and maintained there to the exclusion of every independent trader and settler. Among the stockholders were the Czar and his Empress, grand dukes and senators, and men high in the service of the Russian Government. Its purpose was monopoly; its object, the exploitation of the natural resources of Alaska.

THE RUSSIAN SYNDICATE'S SECOND LEASE, 1821–1844.

In his history of Alaska, Bancroft states that—

At the end of the 20 years for which the exclusive privileges of the Russian-American Co. were granted, we find this powerful monopoly firmly established in the favor of the Imperial Government, many nobles of high rank and several members of the royal family being among the stockholders.

On the 4th of September, 1821, Alexander signed the ukase granting the company a 20 years' extension of its monopoly of Alaska and the right—

III. To enjoy and use all that has been found or discovered within the limits of the localities described, on the surface as well as in the bowels of the earth, and all that they may hereafter discover, regardless of any claims advanced by others.

Under these charters the Russian-Alaskan syndicate prevented foreign trade, forbade the settlement of the land, enslaved the natives, robbed them of their liberties and furs, provoked tribal wars, and maintained a fur-trading monopoly to the exclusion of every manner of development of the Territory. Great profits were heaped up and divided among noble shareholders, while the fur-bearing animals were all but exterminated by ruthless hunting. They built their camps and trading posts on the copper ledges of Prince William Sound; examined with childish curiosity the copper nuggets from Chitina, where the present-day Alaska syndicate owns the richest copper deposits in America; they caught seal and walrus on the golden sands at Nome; they saw the vast coal deposits of Cook Inlet, Matanuska, and Katalla without any concern, though chains and irons for fettering human limbs, found in illy worked coal pits, proved that Siberian convicts worked the coal. They sailed through salmon and halibut shoals unequaled in the world, and saw no promise of empire in the valleys of the Yukon, Kuskokwim, Susitna, and Copper Rivers, though these valleys were wide, fertile, and enjoyed a climate milder and more salubrious than that of their own native land.

THE RUSSIAN-ALASKA SYNDICATE'S THIRD LEASE, 1844–1863.

On October 10, 1844, the Czar granted the third lease of Alaska to the Russian-American Co. for an additional 20 years from that date. Its provisions were even more drastic and monopolistic than those in former leases. The company had assumed and exercised the powers of a provincial government, and administered its ideas of justice with the cannon and the lash. As the resources of the country became known to the English and American traders they pushed their trade into that field by diplomacy when they could and by force when they were obliged to.

The company assumed to sublease the resources of Alaska to whomsoever would pay the rentals demanded; the whole of what is now southeastern Alaska was leased to the British Hudson Bay Co. for more than a decade for royalty in furs; the company denied the Russian inhabitants any individual rights to trade, farm, or manufacture; they forbade the settlement of the rich alluvial valleys by farmers, and they gave no title to the soil; all that was upon or in the bowels of the earth was held to belong to the Czar and for exploitation by the company; and no right to a home, a mine, or fisheries could be obtained by the Russian serfs or subjects.

They had been accustomed to submit without a murmur to the dictates of the governor, from whom there was no appeal, save to a court from whose seat they were separated by more than one-third of the earth's circumference. This, however, was under what might be called a half-savage régime.

Those who came to Alaska came as servants to the great monopoly, which ruled with an iron hand and without appeal; education and religion were controlled by the Czar and aided only to benefit the company; the people were oppressed and bound to service where the company willed; freedom was forbidden in settlement, trade, religion, or thought; as a necessary result of this harsh and military rule the growth and development of the country were prevented.

Thus, for 60 years Alaska's resources were exploited under a national leasing system by the Russian-American Co. It yielded enormous profits to the syndicate, but destroyed development and weakened the Russian Empire. There was no population or power in the Territory for local protection, and it became a source of expense and anxiety to the Empire, which had to appropriate great sums for its protection. To save it from foreign encroachment and probable loss, Russia sold it to the United States in 1867 for $7,200,000, a sum not more than one-half of the present value of one year's output of its fisheries.

THE FIRST UNITED STATES LEASE OF ALASKA'S RESOURCES, 1870–1890.

When the military forces of the United States landed in Sitka on October 18, 1867, to take possession of Alaska for the United States, a merchant from San Francisco landed from the same vessel. He immediately purchased from the Russian governor all the vessels and other property of the Russian-American Co. This purchase was followed up by his friends and associates by an application to Congress for the reservation of the only valuable resource then known to exist in Alaska. On March 3, 1869, the fur-seal islands were reserved by an act of Congress, and a year later, on July 1, 1870, Congress authorized their lease for 20 years. Thirty-two days later, on August 3, 1870, the United States leased the fur-seal reservation and the exclusive monopoly of taking fur seals to the Alaska Commercial Co. for 20 years, the lease providing that the company should pay to the United States $55,000 per annum rental and a revenue tax of $2 each upon the skins. The company covenanted not to kill more than 100,000 seals per annum and to maintain and support the Aleut sealers upon the islands.

For 20 years the Alaska Commercial Co. maintained the monopoly in Alaska which had existed under the Russian syndicate for 60 years preceding. When the United States acquired the cession, there were, it has been officially estimated, 6,000,000 fur seals on the rookeries, and the Alaska Commercial Co. made immense fortunes for its stockholders out of the lease. During the 20 years the Government made a net profit of $5,738,724 out of the rental and royalty and placed it in the United States Treasury.

And Alaska? Alaska lost her resources and gained nothing in development.

THE SECOND UNITED STATES LEASE OF ALASKA'S RESOURCES, 1890–1910.

On March 12, 1890, the United States made the second lease of the fur-seal islands to a new-named company, the North American Commercial Co., for an additional 20 years, at a rental of $60,000 per annum, and a revenue tax or duty of $2 and an additional amount of $7.62½ for each sealskin.

Notwithstanding this largely increased rental and the payment of the additional sum on each skin, the Government suffered a net loss for the last 20 years of $2,247,554, and the seal herd was reduced to only about 75,000.

The net result of this 40 years' national leasing of Alaska's resources is that $50,400,259 in value of Alaska's fur-seal resources were taken out of the Territory, at an actual loss during the last 20 years of more than two and one-quarter million dollars out of the United States Treasury.

And what did Alaska get for her citizens or in development? Not one cent.

Not a home was built in Alaska out of that immense fur-seal wealth; not a schoolhouse; not a single child was educated in Alaska out of it; not a single church was built there. It paid nothing toward maintaining government in Alaska, nor did it establish a single Alaska enterprise.

The national leasing system robbed Alaska of $50,400,259 of her fur-seal resources in 40 years, and in the last 20 years cost the United States Treasury a direct loss of $2,247,544 more than it received from leasing the fur seals. Alaska lost her resources and the national landlord lost the rent and a large deficit in appropriations besides.

A NEW NATIONAL FUR MONOPOLY IN ALASKA, 1910.

On April 30, 1910, the lease to the North American Commercial Co. expired; the landlord found a big red deficit and the herd of fur seals nearly destroyed. Congress then concluded to quit the inactive life of a landlord and go into active business for itself and work the Alaskan fur-seal game preserves as an owner and business corporation has a right to do. By an act of Congress approved April 21, 1910, the United States embarked in the business as a governmental monopoly, and is now engaged in propagating seals, curing the skins, and selling them to its brother monopoly in London for a profit.

The act of April 21, 1910, provides that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have power to kill the seals on the Pribilof Islands, and that all seals taken—shall be sold by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in such market, at such times, and in such manner as he may deem most advantageous, and the proceeds of such sale or sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The Pribilof Islands are declared to be a special reservation for governmental purposes—for propagating and taking the fur seals that annually come there to breed—and the Secretary is commanded to employ the native inhabitants of the islands to kill the seals and cure the skins for the United States. It is made unlawful to land on the islands, and any person found there shall be summarily removed and punished by fine and imprisonment. The killing of fur seals is prohibited, and—

No citizen of the United States, nor person owing duty of obedience to the laws or treaties of the United States, nor any person belonging to or on board of a vessel of the United States, shall kill, capture, or hunt, at any time or in any manner whatever, any fur seal in the waters of the Pacific Ocean, including Bering Sea and the Sea of Okhotsk, whether in the territorial waters of the United States or in the open sea.

General and unlimited authority is given to the Secretary to employ officers, agents, and employees; he is authorized to buy all the houses, boats, horses, wagons, and all other property of the retiring lessee, the North American Commercial Co., and—

* * * He shall likewise have authority to establish and maintain depots for provisions and supplies on the Pribilof Islands and to provide for the transportation of such provisions and supplies from the mainland of the United States to the said islands by the charter of private vessels or by the use of public vessels of the United States which may be placed at his disposal by the President; and he shall likewise have authority to furnish food, shelter, fuel, clothing, and other necessaries of life to the native inhabitants of the Pribilof Islands and to provide for their comfort, maintenance, education, and protection.

A few weeks ago an official from the Department of Commerce and Labor took over to London the sealskins from the national preserves for 1910. He sold them to the same old manufacturing monopoly which had handled them for the two previous lessees, and turned the money obtained into the United States Treasury. When the expense for the year is paid, including direct appropriations from the Treasury and the maintenance of revenue cutters on guard at the rookeries, there will be, exactly as in 1909, an actual loss to the Government on the year's fur business of about $150,000.

A recent report of the Bureau of Fisheries declared:

The Alaskan fur seals constitute the most valuable fishery resource that any Government in the world ever possessed. It is little less than a national disgrace that the herd of four to six million seals which came into our possession when Alaska was acquired from Russia and has been under our charge ever since should have been allowed to dwindle until to-day it numbers less than 150,000 of all ages.

And this result came from national leasing to a private monopoly for 40 years! The United States has now organized a national, instead of a private, monopoly, and will itself attempt to save the remnant of this greatest of Alaska's resources.

A NATIONAL SALMON MONOPOLY IN ALASKA, 1878–1911.

A statement of the amount of Alaska's fishery output since 1868, arranged from official sources, is herewith given:

Years.	Walrus ivory.	Aquatic furs.	Fur seals.	Whalebone.	Fish.	Total.
1868-1905	$343,542	$12,189,484	$47,896,383	$567,417	$77,045,812	$138,042,638
1906	7,190	42,741	454,585	42,242	8,524,332	9,071,090
1907	5,671	36,805	484,649	114,240	9,518,818	10,160,183
1908	9,393	35,178	459,950	202,761	11,140,161	11,847,443
1909	781	73,131	597,983	87,324	10,422,169	11,181,388
1910	1,000	75,000	506,709	85,000	12,482,291	13,150,000
Total	367,577	12,452,339	50,400,259	1,098,984	129,133,583	193,452,742

Figures for 1910 are estimated by the Bureau of Fisheries. Shipments of fur-bearing animals (exclusive of aquatic fur-bearing animals) for 1910 amounted to $334,573.

If you were in Bristol Bay, Alaska, now you would see many great cannery buildings filled with machinery and fishing gear, but cold and lifeless. A single watchman at each plant keeps ward for nine months in the year. If you were to return to that bay in May, a different scene would greet you. Away off to the southwest you would see a fleet of vessels, like a hostile armada, coming northward through the Aleutian Passes. As the cloud of sail approaches it separates, and different vessels seek the docks to which they belong, and immediately begin to unload the season's supplies. First come thousands of men—from San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle—Chinese, Japanese, and nonresident fishermen, under a contract to go to Alaska for the short fishing season of three months, and to be paid on their return to their home ports. The wharves groan with the weight of the merchandise and the supplies for the imported fishermen, and with the season's fishing outfit. The boarding houses are opened, the stoves lighted, tables prepared, the fires are started in the canneries, boats are pulled out of winter quarters, tackle is prepared, sails hoisted, and in a few hours the bays and the rivers are white with the sails of the fishing fleet. For the next two months all is life and bustle. The business never stops. Fish, fish, fish everywhere. Boats, scows, wharves, and canneries are filled with fish; the machinery grinds, men work with nervous haste, and the finest crop of salmon ever seen in the waters of the world is caught and canned in this bay. Day and night the harvest proceeds, for the bay is sunlit 20 out of the 24 hours, and it is never dark. Crews are changed with military precision—while part sleep the others work—and the movement of fish from the sea into the cans never ceases. In 60 days the season is ended. Every can is filled.

And now the armada embarks its stolen riches. The holds of its vessels are filled with a season's crop—it amounted to more than $12,000,000 in value last year—the Chinese, Japanese, and nonresident fishermen are loaded; the fleet sails away through the Aleutian passes, leaving the cannery buildings and a watchman for another long winter; and Alaska has lost another crop. Out of nearly $130,000,000 worth of fish thus taken from Alaska not a home nor a school nor a church has been built nor a child educated in the Territory.

Alaska got nothing. What did the United States get?

In answer to that inquiry the following statement has been received from the Attorney General:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, January 9, 1911.

Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring further to your letter of the 3d instant, the following statement is submitted, showing the gross amounts received through taxes or other sources on account of the salmon fisheries of Alaska since the time the Department of Justice has been charged with the collection of these moneys:

1900 (July 1 to Dec. 31)	$1,911.66
1901	54,319.94
1902	70,219.36
1903	44,161.46
1904	139,683.36
1905	78,488.55
1906	71,223.37
1907	88,745.46
1908	105,466.64
1909	81,309.16
1910 (Jan. 1 to Sept. 30)	118,154.42

The credits given each cannery on account of the fry released from its hatchery, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 26, 1906, are as follows:

Alaska Packers' Association:
1907	$44,658.16
1908	38,272.32
1909	29,668.80
1910 (Jan. 1 to Sept. 30)	23,956.00
Northwestern Fisheries Co., 1908	6,917.48
North Pacific T. & P. Co., 1909	1,280.00

The figures given in this statement represent only the collections for the respective years, as shown by the accounts of the clerks of the district courts, and are without regard to the period or year of the output, i. e., the time the taxes or credits accrued.

The amounts of the collections and credits as shown for the year 1910 cover merely the period from January 1 to September 30, as the accounts for the quarter ended December 31, 1910, have not as yet been received.

Respectfully,
J. A. FOWLER,
Acting Attorney General.

Here, then, is exactly what the United States got:
From the total amount paid by the canneries	$853,683.38
Subtract credit for private hatcheries	144,752.76
Leaves net cash payment by canneries	708,930.62
Subtract appropriations for Alaskan fisheries	200,221.01
Net national receipts from Alaskan fisheries	508,709.61

The gross amount paid by the canneries amounts only to a tax of a fraction of over 6 mills on the dollar, or three-fifths of 1 per cent of the value of the crop taken out, while the net amount received by the United States amounts to a fraction less than 4 mills on the dollar, or less than two-fifths of 1 per cent of the value of the product taken.

If a resident builds a home and enters into business as a merchant or manufacturer, in any incorporated town in Alaska, the United States first compels him to pay a license tax amounting to practically 5 mills on the dollar of the gross amount of business he transacts, then the town taxes him 20 mills on his real and personal property, and he is further required to pay a poll and other personal taxes. In short, he pays six times as much in proportion as the nonresident cannery trust pays, besides all the other aid and assistance which he gives to the development of the Territory. Without exception, the laws of the United States applicable to Alaska nourish monopoly and punish the homemaker and the man engaged in actual development of the Territory.

Alaska gets nothing, and the United States gets but one-sixth of the proportionate tax a resident pays, out of the Alaska fisheries.

What does the fish trust get?

In its annual statement for 1908, filed with the Committee on the Territories of the House of Representatives on June 18, 1910, the Alaska Packers' Association claims to have made in gross profits in 16 years, from 1893 to 1908, both inclusive, $9,374,703.

[1] Reductions.

[2] Includes $1,680,000 transferred to capital stock.

In addition to the profits shown in the above statement, taken from the Sixteenth Annual Statement of the Alaska Packers' Association for 1908, its seventeenth annual report shows this statement:

The profits for 1909 were $779,728.69. Added to the previous statement, it is an admission that this nonresident fish trust has actually received $10,154,431 in profits from the Alaska fisheries, or a sum equal to twice the amount of its invested capital stock. It justifies the statement of Mr. John Rosene, who organized the Guggenheim end of the fish trust, that the business pays more than 25 per cent annual profit. And this is only one of the many nonresident corporations taking Alaska fish.

What has Alaska received? Nothing; not even development or population. And the United States? The same. And what of the Alaska fisheries? In his evidence before the Committee on the Territories of the House of Representatives last spring Dr. Barton W. Everman, of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, testified in respect to the value of the Karluk salmon stream, on the north shore of Kadiak Island, that it was "the greatest in the world." And he then admitted that it was practically fished out, depleted, and destroyed by the wasteful and unlawful methods adopted by the fish trust.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, the greatest authority on the fisheries of Alaska, in a letter dated December 9, 1907, declared that the rivers emptying into Bristol Bay "are the greatest salmon streams in the world;" and he then added:

> These streams have been badly overfished and the output has fallen off. It will continue to fall away with great rapidity to the injury of the fishermen, the packers, and the people of the United States, to whom these rivers belong.

The Alaska fur-seal resource was depleted 99 per cent from 1868 to 1910 by the leasing system, and by practically the same system the Alaska salmon resource is on the same downhill road to rapid extinction. It is a system of destruction, and not of development.

What the Alaska salmon fisheries need is conservation and protection by the United States, until the people of Alaska, by a local legislature, can conserve and protect them. Alaska also needs such legislation by Congress as will require these nonresident monopolists to pay their reasonable proportion for the support of government in, and the development of, Alaska; and such a protective tariff as will enable the Alaska fisheries to support resident Alaska fishermen and their homes, churches, and schools.

A NATIONAL FOREST MONOPOLY IN ALASKA, 1902–1911.

Congress has authorized it, and the President has withdrawn from settlement or entry and reserved for forestry purposes in southeastern and southern Alaska, 26,761,626 acres, or 41,815 square miles, of the public lands, an area larger than the State of Ohio. This immense reserve covers nearly the whole of the habitable seacoast of Alaska—all that part most favorable to settlement and nearest to civilization. All those islands constituting southern Alaska, blessed with a mild climate, where fishermen would settle and begin homes and hamlets, through which steamboat navigation is safe and regular, where Alaska's capital and other permanent and important towns are located, are thus blanketed with the cloud of withdrawal and reservation.

All that region at the head of the Gulf of Alaska, where railroad building is desirable and actually under way, where the valuable coal mines lie, and through which the coal must come to the sea, is also reserved. Where the battle for development is reasonably easy, the Government has added all that it could to the burden by a forestry reservation. Where settlements have existed for a century, where the cable and telegraph lines connect with the outside world, where roads, schools, homes, and permanent population have been created in this seacoast wilderness, reservations have been created, leaving only a mile in circuit around a few of the larger towns, even around the capital of the Territory itself.

The forty-fourth regulation in the Forestry Use Book provides:

> REGULATION 44. Without permit, and free of charge, settlers, farmers, prospectors, fishermen, or similar persons residing within or adjacent to national forests in Alaska are granted the privilege of taking green or dried timber from the forests and driftwood, afloat or on the beaches, for their own personal use, but not for sale: Provided, That the amount of material so taken shall not in any one year exceed 20,000 feet board measure or 25 cords of wood: And provided further, That the person enjoying this privilege will, on demand, forward to the supervisor a statement of the quantity of material so taken and a description of the location from which it was removed.

An Indian may not even take "driftwood, afloat or on the beaches," without liability to report the fact to the forestry officers. Neither he nor a citizen can cut cordwood for his own use without more red-tape formulas than the wood is worth. Formerly he could cut a few logs in the winter season and kill a few fur seals when on their northern migration in the spring, and thus secure a living for himself and family. Both these sources of livelihood are now penalized, and the Indian and the poor white settler are both alike threatened with extinction. Settlements and development in the most favored portions of the Territory are practically prohibited and the land held in a state of nature, while the people, homes, and civilization are barred from the country—and why?

To protect the forests from fire? No, for the rainfall at Sitka last year was 79 inches—6 feet and 7 inches over the region—and the forests can not be burned. To protect the water supply? No; for the largest glaciers in the world exist in these forest reserves and the tremendous rainfall renders the forests unimportant for that purpose. To prevent cutting and export? No; for prior to the creation of the reserves the law forbade the exportation and the timber was cut only for local uses and development, but under the forestry administration one may buy, saw, and export freely. There is no reason known to the theory of forestry for this Alaska forestry reservation, except to sell the timber and turn the money into the United States Treasury. Does that pay? It does not, and never will.

Following is a financial statement prepared by the Forest Service, showing the losses for every year since the reservations were created:

Statement of receipts and expenditures, national forests, Territory of Alaska, from July 1, 1905, to June 30, 1910.

Thus in five years the Government has suffered an actual loss of its timber and $38,501.10 out of the Public Treasury, and who has gained thereby? Nobody—not even Alaska. The Forest Service is a failure in Alaska from every standpoint.

In his last annual report the governor of Alaska very properly says:

> Steps should be taken without delay to restore large portions, if not all, of the Chugach National Forest to the public domain. Many thousand acres of this reservation are almost treeless, and the conditions are such as to render any measures for the conservation of water absurdly unnecessary. Such scattered timber as may be found for small uses should be freely available to assist in development enterprises and to encourage settlers.

Nor is there much greater reason for continuing to retard development by the maintenance of the Tongass National Forest. It can not be burned, is not needed to conserve the water supply, and may be as well protected by an agent from despoilation without reservation as with it. It ought freely to be used for the development of Alaska "by the people who own it."

Settlers are, so far, excluded from this Alaska forest reserve, as large as Ohio, and the fact is admitted that since the reserves were created in 1902 not a single homesteader nor American settler has been allowed to plant an American home on that area. Is it possible that Congress will maintain longer a situation so intolerable? Have the "people who own it" no right to a home on the Alaska public domain? Will Congress sanction the continued existence of a system of forestry reservations in Alaska which prevents settlements, homes, schools, churches, and bars civilization and development therefrom?

A NATIONAL PETROLEUM MONOPOLY IN ALASKA, 1910.

In pursuance to the power granted to him by the withdrawal act of June 25, 1910, and on November 3, 1910, the President made the following order:

> NOVEMBER 3, 1910.
> ORDER OF WITHDRAWAL—PETROLEUM RESERVE NO. 12—ALASKA NO. 1.
> It is hereby ordered that all the public lands and lands in national forests in the District of Alaska containing petroleum deposits be, and the same are hereby, withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, or entry, and reserved for classification and in aid of legislation affecting the use and disposal of petroleum lands belonging to the United States.
> WM. H. TAFT, President.

In pursuance of the general policy announced in the President's message bills have been introduced in Congress, and will probably pass, authorizing the special disposal of oil and gas lands in Alaska. Senate bill 9011 has passed the Senate, and is now before the House for consideration.

It is quite apparent that the withdrawal order covers every portion of Alaska. There is no attempt to reserve particular lands, but "all the public lands and lands in national forests in the District of Alaska containing petroleum deposits" are withdrawn. What lands contain petroleum can not be ascertained until after deep borings are made, and thus again a blanket reservation is made of every foot of land in Alaska.

Whether the Department of the Interior will hereafter grant a patent to a homestead or a mining claim until it has been ascertained and affirmatively established as a fact by the applicant, by extensive and costly borings, that the lands do not contain petroleum, can only be conjectured. No law exists requiring any such proofs without the general mineral-land laws may require it, and if they do, and such proofs are demanded, then development must stop for that reason. At any rate, this petroleum order of withdrawal is a cloud upon the title to every location or entry of land in Alaska, and, in charge of the objecting bureau clerk, will add an additional burden and become a substantial bar to development therein. The fact that there may never be any petroleum of value found there and that none is known to exist will not relieve the situation but only adds to the maze of doubt, uncertainty, and confusion affecting that unhappy Territory by illy drawn laws passed by an uninformed Congress.

Mr. SULZER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I listened with unusual interest to the informing discourse delivered by the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I was glad that he, being able to speak from knowledge, took occasion to reply to those ill-informed critics who constantly claim, Cassandra-like, that the Government is beset with woes, likely to fall into pitfalls of danger, and surrounded by imminent disasters, because of the inefficiency of the Army of the United States. Why, sir, if the Army of the United States, size for size, is not more efficient than any other army in the world, then we have been vastly mistaken in the character of our people, and the extraordinarily liberal sums of money that this Congress has voted have been criminally misapplied in the expenditure. But I do not believe that the Army is inefficient in any degree whatever. Except, perhaps, in the question of Field Artillery, to which the gentleman referred, we are as well armed as an army can be. We have a growing and soon to be entirely abundant supply of reserve ammunition for certain classes of arms, and I want to reassure gentlemen who have been disturbed by the prophecies of evil by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] that there is no such imminent risk, so far as the Army of the United States is concerned, and if our people will only keep their nerves they may still sleep quietly even though they reside on the western side of the Rocky Mountains. [Applause.]

I concur most heartily in what my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] said with reference to the long and distinguished service of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], with whom I have had the honor of serving for 12 years in the work of preparing these bills for your consideration.

Personally, that work has been agreeable. Officially, we have so infrequently had divisions along partisan lines in that committee that if there is an instance of it it has now gone entirely out of my mind. He and I have worked with an eye single to the interests of the country. I believe that other Members have also, and I regret also that we are not to have the advantage of his counsel and of his long experience in the preparation of the next bill. I would have been entirely reconciled to see him moved in the committee room, for I have been anxious to see how he would decorate the other end of the table [laughter], but to have him entirely expelled from the room was beyond my purpose in any fight I have made on him heretofore.

Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose, pending the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, to submit a few observations upon the subject touched in the editorial from the New York Times that I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMERICANS ABROAD.

Gen. Lee Christmas and his warriors, many of whom claim American citizenship, are restive at Puerto Cortez, because they are withheld from fighting by an armistice. Our brave boys! The envoy of President Davila, who is willing to resign his office to secure peace to his country, refuses to accept Bonilla as a substitute President for the very good reason that he is an agent of an American fruit trust. He is not a United States citizen, like so many other "patriots" in perturbed Latin-America, but he is clearly an "American business man." A peace conference is to be held on board an American warship to-morrow, with the United States agent, Thomas C. Dawson, acting as mediator. But all Honduras is already at peace, except a small part of it which has been disturbed by this distinguished American citizen, Christmas, and the equally distinguished American business man, Bonilla.

From the seat of war in northern Mexico comes the information that many of the revolutionists are Americans. One of them is a brave lad called "Chicago Slim." He killed a soldier day before yesterday. Honduras and Mexico are welcome to these products of our civilization if they want them. But candor compels us to admit that they do not seem to want them. What are we going to do about it, if anything?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, for some time I have had my attention called to the fact that our laws of neutrality were perhaps not as well observed, not as well enforced as they might be. While I could not go upon the stand and qualify as a witness and swear that violations of the laws of neutrality have occurred and that assaults contemplated against the Mexican Government had been arranged for in this country, yet they are matters of such common knowledge and of such frequency and circumstances of a convincing nature have so frequently been presented to me that I would be willing to swear that, in my judgment, the bulk of these revolutionary movements against northern Mexico have been hatched under our flag. Now, whether our detectives, our Secret Service force, or our officials charged with the enforcement of the neutrality laws are less efficient than they have been heretofore, or whether they have grown indifferent to these things, I am not prepared to say, but they have been increasing with more or less rapidity, and now they are so often repeated that it has become an offense, and properly, justifiably an offense to our neighbors to the south. Mexico has said nothing, but in a feeble way Honduras and other Governments in South America have protested against American-made revolutions being unloaded upon those countries. Often as they occur the genesis of those South American revolutions is always a matter of interest to students of politics and of history. There seems to be some reason for them, and too often, in my judgment, it has occurred that those revolutions have been of the most sordid type. It has not always been a desire to get rid of a tyrant and to substitute free government, but it has sometimes been a desire to get rid of government that stood in the way of certain commercial enterprises and to set up the business ventures of the confederates of the revolution makers.

A citizen of the city of Galveston recently published a communication in a paper printed in that city in which he made the specific charge that the present revolution against the Government of Honduras, of which I believe Mr. Davila is the President, was fostered by a great trust in this country—the United Fruit Co. Whether that be true or false I do not know. I can only say that the charge is made by a gentleman of repute, a gentleman of good standing, a man of good judgment, in the city of Galveston, who recently spent three or four months in Honduras, and who charges that this revolution was financed in this country and financed by that trust. It is a matter of common knowledge that for weeks before the Hornet sailed from New Orleans the whole world was advised, so far as the publication and circulation of newspapers could advise it, that there was in preparation an expedition directed against the Government of Honduras.

Of course it was denied; of course there were efforts made to conceal the purposes of the movement and that a revolution had been organized, but it developed after the Hornet had landed somewhere on the coast of Honduras that all the time she was protesting innocence, all the time our Government had been unable to discover any evidence of guilt, she had been making preparation to engage in revolution and had sailed out of the port of New Orleans armed with weapons and ready to wage war against a friendly nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not time to refer in two minutes to the facts I had intended to call to the attention of this House and to the country in this speech. I will conclude by saying that, in my judgment, all of those countries to the south of us are entitled to the most active cooperation of the Government of the United States in the suppression of these unfriendly movements against them.

The element referred to in the editorial that I have had read from Chicago—the "Chicago slims" and anarchists and socialists and undesirables of various sorts—have gone to the Republic of Mexico, according to the assertions of the press dispatches, and have become officials in an army that is striking a blow for freedom, so called; but when one of those fellows gets caught he fails to show the blood of a true sportsman, because the moment he feels the pressure of the Government upon him, the moment he feels the likelihood of there being imposed upon him a penalty properly fixed for an infraction of those laws, he squeals and comes to the Government of the United States for protection. Of course the Government ought to protect all of its citizens and ought to protect them perhaps more vigorously than it has heretofore, although I have never had any sympathy with the cry that it fails usually in the discharge of that duty; but, sir, when Americans deliberately commit an offense against a friendly Government, deliberately invade the soil of another country and make war upon that Government, they deserve the penalties invited by such a course, and, in my judgment, ought to receive them and without any interference by this or any other Government beyond the mere demand for a fair trial and the assessment of only such penalties as the law for such cases provides. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I think it proper for me to say, in reply to the gentleman from Texas, that the officials of the United Fruit Co. deny absolutely that they, or anyone acting for them, are responsible, directly or indirectly, for the revolution in the Republic of Honduras, or that they, or any person acting for them or the United Fruit Co., are aiding or abetting the same in any way whatsoever. I think this should go on the record.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OLMSTED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 26290. An act providing for the validation of certain homestead entries;

H. R. 32400. An act to authorize the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Delaware River from Lower Wakefield Township, Bucks County, Pa., to Ewing Township, Mercer County, N. J.;

H. R. 32571. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Kansas National Forest;

H. R. 18542. An act for the relief of Thomas C. Clark; and

H. R. 32220. An act to authorize the board of supervisors of the town of High Landing, Red Lake County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red Lake River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. AMOS L. ALLEN, late a Representative from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the Vice President had appointed as said committee Mr. HALE, Mr. FRYE, Mr. LODGE, Mr. RAYNER, Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. JONES, Mr. PAGE, and Mr. SWANSON.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 10632) to authorize the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Delaware River from Lower Makefield Township, Bucks County, Pa., to Ewing Township, Mercer County, N. J.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28632) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 31538) to authorize the Pensacola, Mobile & New Orleans Railroad Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across the Mobile River and its navigable channels on a line opposite the city of Mobile, Ala.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

[Mr. WEISSE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, on the 3d day of May last the Committee on the Library for the second time favorably reported a bill introduced by me to suitably mark the celebrated and historic trail from the Missouri River to Puget Sound. This trail has been aptly characterized as one of the "great battlefields of the world." More than 300,000 people traveled this trail and 5,000,000 head of live stock passed over it. The pioneers that went over this trail saved the Oregon country to this Nation. From every standpoint it is most fitting that the Government should in a suitable way perpetuate their memory by properly marking the great highway over which they traveled, a highway in many respects unmatched in all the great migrations in the world's history. This trail was more than 2,000 miles long and was once grimly and significantly marked by thousands of bleaching skeletons of the life that failed while traversing it. But the weary thousands that struggled over barren wastes and rolling prairies and through mountain fastnesses and primeval forests were not, like the semibarbarous hordes of old in their great migration, seeking new regions to plunder and subjugate; but those who went over the Oregon trail were patriots of peace seeking new homes in a great but practically unsettled region. This region that they saved to our country is among the fairest and most goodly lands of all the world. To the memory of those heroes of peaceful conquest too high an honor can not be paid by this Nation. But few of that mighty host of strong and adventurous men and women yet remain among the living.

But it is not my purpose at this time to make a speech upon this subject, but to place in the RECORD, where it may be safely preserved for all time, some statements in regard to the subject by Hon. Ezra Meeker, of Puyallup, Wash. This great pioneer and patriot has passed his eightieth milestone on the great trail that ends in eternity. He writes me that he may expect that his journey soon will end, but that while he lives he shall work for this project, and that he still cherishes the hope that he may be spared to see it completed. To this strong man, so typical of the Oregon pioneer, the chief credit is due for arousing an interest in the marking of this trail. He went over this trail more than a half century ago. He speaks from personal experience. He has recently been over it again, traveling, as he did the first time, in a cart drawn by an ox team. He has by his own efforts, and largely at his own expense, located the trail and partially marked it, so that this most important work has already been performed by him.

In a statement made by him and published in the report he says:

Made possible by the discovery in 1824 of that wonderful gap in the Rocky Mountains known as the South Pass, the Oregon trail did not become a national highway until Bonneyville and Wyeth in 1832 and 1833 traversed the whole length, from the Missouri River to the tidewaters of the Pacific. The missionaries, trappers, and traders soon wore a visible wagon track to the traders' rendezvous on the Green River and beyond to Fort Hall, on the upper reaches of Snake River, but not until the greater immigration of the Oregon home seekers, a thousand strong, with their wagon train in 1843 passed over to the Pacific, did the Oregon trail become in fact a great national highway. Each year thereafter wagon trains passed over the whole route to the Oregon country in varying numbers, wearing the track deeper and deeper until finally the greater exodus of 1852, when a column 50,000 strong moved out from the Missouri River and lined the trail with the dead, 5,000 or more in number for that one year alone. Meanwhile the Mormon migration had followed in the track of the Oregon pioneers for fully a thousand miles to the great bend of Bear River. The California movement of 1849 and later also followed in the same track to Bear River or to Fort Hall, where the California trail diverged, as did the Mormon track also, and bore off to the southwest, while the Oregon trail kept steadily on to the northwest.

The trail had indeed become a great national highway 2,000 miles long. Fully 300,000 people crossed over what might be termed the "eastern section" before the advent of the Pacific Railroad, which diverted the later traffic, and the trail again became a solitude, but not until fully 5,000,000 head of stock passed over, either east or west, and had worn the trail so deep that the track in places might readily be mistaken for great railroad cuts.

The object of marking this historic trail is the same as the marking of any other great battle field of history. The winners of the farther West that passed over this trail fought a strenuous battle, and the trail became a battle field from one end to the other. Six dead to the mile upon a stretch of 400 miles up the Platte tells the ghastly story. Nor was this all. The fallen could be counted in groups of fifties and seventies beyond where this count was made. History does not record the battlefield of greater carnage than that of the Oregon trail; neither is there any record of so long a trail, or of one that wrought such historic changes. The joint occupancy treaties with Great Britain left the settlement of the Oregon boundary virtually to be determined by a race as to whom should, as home builders, occupy the country first. The Hudson Bay Co. began bringing in settlers from the Red River of the North, and not until the opening of the Oregon trail for wagons to the Oregon country, with their precious freight of home builders, was the question settled as to the preponderance of the American settlement over that fostered by the Hudson Bay Co. Immediately this was accomplished, an American provisional government was formed and the British rule ended.

No more heroic act is recorded in history than this of the Oregon pioneers holding firmly the disputed territory while many of our statesmen were decrying the Oregon country and preparing the way for a shameful surrender. The American people owe a deep debt of gratitude to those intrepid pioneers, and their trail should be marked and the memory of it preserved religiously as a great landmark in the history of the Nation not only that future generations may know that the great struggle to advance our national boundary to the Pacific, but likewise to keep alive that patriotic zeal so helpful in the perpetuation of our Government.

In the measure we keep the memories of the heroic past fresh in the minds of our people, patriotic fervor is fanned, the flag more revered, and our national stability better assured.

In a communication that I have recently received from him, Mr. Meeker makes the following statement:

House bill 17436, Sixty-first Congress, provides for the appointment of a commissioner "who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of War, erect such monuments and markers of granite and other material as will designate and locate the general route of the Oregon Trail and fittingly commemorate the valorous deeds of those who established said trail, from the left bank of the Missouri River to Puget Sound," and provided for appropriating $50,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provision of the act.

The committee of the Sixtieth Congress reported favorably for appropriating the sum named in the bill, and added a proviso that no part of the money should be available until the Secretary of War is satisfied there would be sufficient funds to complete the work.

The committee of the Sixty-first Congress reported favoring an appropriation, but reduced the sum to $25,000, with the proviso as noted, which would preclude any possible action under the provision of the bill.

When the bill was first introduced many friends of the measure believed that $50,000 was not enough to "fittingly commemorate the valorous deed" of the Oregon pioneer, but rested content in the belief that the Congress would provide the funds to complete the work, but when the proviso mentioned was added and the amount to be appropriated reduced, the few pioneers left felt the time had come when more energetic action should be taken and different methods employed.

A drive over the trail in 1906 resulted in erecting 27 memorial monuments in centers of population in close proximity to the track, but no combination could be formed to take up the work systematically and since the appeal to Congress.

When it became known the committee had reported the bill recommending the smaller sum to be appropriated, measures were taken to again drive over the trail, trace it from section line to section line, ascertain how many traveled roads cross it, and thereby determine the number of markers required, estimate their cost, and so arrived at an approximate estimate of the completed cost of the work. I have just spent eight months during the season of 1910 at this work, have secured the definite location of full 1,600 miles of the trail, and a close approximate estimate of the number of the road crossings. It will require fully 700 of these markers to fittingly mark the trail, and near $100,000 to erect suitable, durable granite monuments to endure for the ages to come.

The appeal should have been made to Congress in the first place. It should be a national work. The Oregon Trail became a battlefield where the graves were strewn so thickly as to warrant the belief that not less than 20,000 have gone down into oblivion in the shifting sand or under the grinding hoofs of millions of stock upon the return tide in later years. Fully 300,000 passed over the Oregon Trail in the quarter of a century in which it was used. No other trail is recorded in history where so many migrated for so long a distance; where the tragedies were so great; where greater bravery and fortitude was displayed; and where the historical significance was so great.

It is not necessary to assert that the Oregon pioneer "saved Oregon." Such an assertion is merely an opinion, but of what we know it is well to record. We know the subjects of Great Britain were in full possession of that portion of the Oregon country north and east of the Columbia River and ruled the country in the interest of the Hudson Bay Co., and we know that when the Oregon Trail was opened to wagons in 1843 and the first migration of a thousand people passed over that these same people took possession, challenged the British rule, and wrested the control of the country from the Hudson Bay Co., and we know they advanced the American flag westward 2,000 miles, planted it firmly, maintained it under extraordinary difficulties, until finally, in the lapse of years and under the pressure of public opinion, upon the massacre of Whitman, the Congress finally lifted the burden from off the shoulders of the pioneers. Will this great Nation grudgingly mark the pathway of these great patriots, or will they "fittingly" commemorate their valorous deed?

"And Joshua said unto them, 'Pass over before the ark of the Lord your God, in the midst of Jordan, and take you, every man of you, a stone upon his shoulder, according unto the number of the tribes of the Children of Israel, that this may be a sign among you—that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying, "What mean you by these stones?" then ye shall answer them, that the waters of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the Lord when it passed over Jordan; and these stones shall be for a memorial unto the Children of Israel forever.'"

And shall we not say to this Nation, to the Congress, "Take ye up this burden and cast stones upon the track of the pioneers as hallowed ground, trod by the men who opened the way for this grand civilization, that their fame shall abide with you, and that their very track shall be preserved as a sign among you, that when your children shall ask their father in time to come, saying, 'What mean ye by these stones?' then ye shall answer them, 'These stones shall be for a memorial unto the pioneers who gave their lives that we might possess this heritage.'"

I also insert an editorial from The Oregonian, of Portland, Oreg., of Tuesday, May 17, 1910, in regard to the marking of the Oregon Trail.

MARKING THE OREGON TRAIL.

Representative HUMPHREY'S bill appropriating $25,000 to mark the old Oregon Trail was favorably reported in the House of Representatives in the National Capitol some ten days ago. The measure gives the Secretary of War authority to receive private contributions to the fund. Ezra Meeker, the well-known trail marker, a few days ago in Baker City declared the sum of $25,000 inadequate for the work, and cited President Roosevelt's recommendation of an appropriation of $50,000.

Argument for this appropriation is familiar as an oft-told tale, so that it is not necessary to keep on reciting the significance of this great national highway, whereby a migration, in some respects unparalleled in the world's history, made its way from States of the East and the Middle West to this Pacific coast region. This road should certainly be marked with monuments before the pioneers that know its track shall have departed.

In 25 years, between 1845 and 1870—before railroad transit began—a total population of some 750,000 made its way to the Rocky Mountain region and the Pacific coast, probably 500,000 of whom went overland, chiefly by the Oregon and the Santa Fe trails. It is probably within safe bounds of truth to say that 350,000 people followed the Oregon trail to their several destinations in the mountain country and on the Pacific coast.

This was one of the world's greatest migrations. The route to Oregon and to California was 2,000 miles long, across desert wastes and mountain fastnesses. Much has been said of suffering and death along the route, but the tale will never be fully told. These hundreds of thousands of people, unlike the semibarbarous hordes whose history is written in Europe and Asia, sought the new regions not for plunder nor for subjugation of other peoples, but for making homes in a wilderness, which theretofore was almost unoccupied. And they covered the distance in an unprecedentedly short time.

It ought not to be difficult to awaken sufficient interest to pass the appropriation in Congress, but as in other important legislative matters, it seems necessary to go through a patient preliminary campaign of information. The sum of $25,000 will make a good beginning. With that much secured the way will be opened toward obtaining the additional funds required.

I insert also a copy of a letter which I have recently received from Mr. Meeker:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, December 23, 1910.

Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Because of the committee's action reporting the bill to appropriate only $25,000, I have made another trip over the trail, this time turning my attention exclusively to tracing and locating its whereabouts. I now have tracings of the public survey nearly 200 feet long and showing nearly 1,600 miles of the exact location of the trail, and can give a close estimate of the present traveled road crossings and thereby determine the number of markers needed. I can also give estimate of cost of several sized stone; $25,000 is no good; I would like to get a hearing before the committee and have a record of my work made for future use, even if I do "lay down" before the work is accomplished, even if you think the bill can not be passed this session.

I will be 80 next Thursday. Write and let me hear whether you can get me a hearing, and, if so, will be with you. It's about time, you know, I may expect to "lay down," but while my strength continues do not expect to quit.

Respectfully, EZRA MEEKER.

I shall also print in the RECORD a little pamphlet published by Mr. Meeker, called The Story of the Lost Trail to Oregon, as it is my desire, as I have said, to preserve in the RECORD these valuable contributions that this grand old pioneer has prepared upon the Oregon Trail:

THE LOST TRAIL.

The search for the Oregon Trail has been prosecuted now for five years, and much of it recovered, and it is confidently expected all will be in the near future.

It is a wonderful story, that of the growth of the Oregon Trail. Why so many home builders with their families plunged into the then unknown wilderness across so wide a stretch of what was known as the "Great American Desert" no man can tell. Certain it is that no such record in the world's history can be found of so many people going so long a distance to found an empire, as they did, over the 2,000 miles stretch of the Oregon Trail. So long as this mystery or romance remains there will continue an abiding interest in this unsolved problem. Lovers hastened their union that they might share the danger and privation together across the unknown stretch; sedate heads of families as mysteriously were moved to risk all that they might see the farther West; young men boldly moved out on the Plains as if it were only a great "playground" where the sport of the chase would continue forever. It would seem that manifest destiny prompted the multitude whatever may have ultimately governed their action. Three hundred thousand people traversed the Oregon Trail to beyond the summit of the Rocky Mountains and passed through that great rift in the mountains, the South Pass. Nature had provided and pointed the way, and in time we see unfolded the final climax when the great wagon trains began to roll through that wonderful break in the mountains, the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains.

Mystery surrounds the real discovery of the "pass." In prehistoric times the buffalo wore trails over the summit. We know as little as to when the Indians followed. As already said, nature had pointed the way. The melting snows of midwinter storms descending from the higher levels formed the little river, Sweetwater, which in turn emptied into the North Platte, and this in its turn formed its junction with the South Branch, and thence rolled placidly as a mighty river to the greater Missouri. To follow the Oregon Trail to within 2 miles of the summit of the South Pass is to follow up the current of the waters described; the route of the least resistance destined again to become the Nation's highway, to the higher altitudes above the clouds and almost up to the perpetual snow line, 7,450 feet above sea level.

Now we are over the summit and look out westward over a vast plateau of high altitude, a hundred miles or more, before we begin to descend into the Bear River Valley, and down Bear River a short way and we are near the Snake, which we follow, and finally to the Columbia and the tide waters of the Pacific.

Lewis and Clark, in 1805, finally reached and descended the Snake and Columbia, and that far were on the general route of the Oregon Trail; then came Hunt with his Astor party to traverse a part in 1811–12, but the key, the South Pass, had not been discovered yet, and not until 10 years later a party of trappers found and crossed over through the Pass. This was in 1822 or 1823. Yet another 10 years elapsed before any one person passed over the whole of the Oregon Trail. The glory of that achievement belongs to Samuel J. Wyeth, an intrepid Bostonian, who crossed with his wagons, following the wagon track, already dimly worn, a hundred miles west of the summit by other trappers and traders.

Wyeth built Fort Hall in 1833, on the peninsula near the junction of the Port Neuff and Snake Rivers and advanced the wagon road that far. But formidable obstacles seemed to say "thus far and no farther" with a wagon road, and another 10 years passes and "acres" of abandoned wagons covered the ground. Meanwhile Bonnyville had followed Wyeth to disaster; other traders appeared on the scene, and a war of efforts to secure the coveted furs continued. The missionaries had passed over. A few of the trappers had tired of their adventures and wore the trail a little deeper on their way to the Columbia and to the tidewaters of the Pacific. The home builders began to put in an appearance on the whole length of the trail in the late thirties and early forties, making the famous pathway a little deeper and wider—all failing, however, to carry their wagons farther than to Fort Hall and the Snake. Finally that great migration of 1843 of a thousand persons, men, women, and children, fixed the final route of the trail by passing over it from end to end with their wagons and stock. No more heroic act is recorded in history than this of that great company opening their own wagon road from day to day for over 800 miles west from Fort Hall. We now have the trail complete.

Word goes out there is a wagon road to the Pacific, and the eager throng each year wear the trail deeper and deeper; the Mormons now appear with their ox wagons and carts, their handcarts and wheelbarrows, to deepen the trail and line it with their dead—this in 1846–47. Then followed the California throng on the Oregon Trail for a thousand miles or more to stir the soil that the wind might carry it away, leaving the sunken pathway a little deeper. This in 1849. Now, again comes the throng—another high tide, to the Oregon country, when another 10 years is tolled off and a great army cover the plains—gold seekers, home builders, religionists, and adventurers of every kind. Now we see the trail filled with wagons two abreast, so numerous is the throng, and two trails appear for long stretches. The graves have become common; 5,000 have died in the one year alone; what with the dead and dying, the panic that ensued, the intolerable dust, the parched lips and weakened frames, we may well wonder that the casualties were not greater. The trail is now 10 feet deep and a hundred wide in many places, but yet destined to be worn deeper and deeper by the return tide of stock in the fullness of time, a million a year for many years, trampling the graves into dust and wearing the trail into almost incredible widths and depths—15 feet deep and 200 feet wide in one place encountered tells the wonderful story better than song or fiction.

And yet long stretches were lost by the march of improvement; the farmer took no note of it in sentiment and plowed over it; city builders have erected brick blocks over where the trail once ran, and so, what with great irrigation ditches destroying it, with other like factors at work, small wonder we should call it the "Lost Trail."

But we are gradually recovering it from the oblivion in which it has slept. A stretch here and there is marked, the memories of past and passing generations have been revived, and finally with the help of the public land surveys of 40 and 50 years ago, we are able to connect the whole so that we may say that for a continuous stretch of 1,600 miles we absolutely know where the trail is, or was, with or without the visible marks upon the earth's surface.

To you who may read or hear these words, I conjure you to take heed and consider their importance. In the measure a generation views and studies the past the pace is set for the future. If we forget the deeds of our forbears, we discard the lessons of history and take a step backward in the march of civilization. In the measure a generation cherishes the past, so will it be for the future; for the love of country; for reverence of the flag; for the efforts of upbuilding the Nation. And, my friends, the recovering the Lost Trail has a deeper meaning than merely gratifying a whim or satisfying a feeling of curiosity.

[From the Ohio State Journal, Tuesday morning, April 23, 1907.]

TELLS THE STORY OF OREGON TRAIL—EZRA MEEKER, NATIVE OHIOAN, COAST PIONEER, OUTLINES NATIONAL ROAD PROJECT—HIS OX TEAM AND "PRAIRIE SCHOONER" AROUSE MUCH INTEREST ON THE STREETS.

Ezra Meeker, a pioneer of the Oregon Trail, who is retraveling, in the ripeness of years, the trail he followed to the West in his youth, yesterday set forth to an audience on the streets of Columbus the object for which he is taking the long journey from Oregon to the Capital of the Nation. The old man, with flowing white hair and beard, and his "prairie schooner," drawn by patient oxen, made a picturesque figure, surrounded by the stately evidences and busy life of modern civilization, as exemplified in a great city.

He did not lack hearers. His was not "the voice of one crying in the wilderness," but the voice of the wilderness and of the past calling in the city, with all its modernity, to its share to pay tribute to those who made modern American cities possible.

"Farmer" Meeker told the story of his life in words of simple earnestness and with no indirection. He is on his way to Washington, he said, to urge on the Government the building of an enduring monument to the builders of the West in the form of a great concrete thoroughfare which shall follow the Old National Road and the Oregon Trail from East to West.

"76 YEARS YOUNG."

He began by introducing himself as a citizen of Ohio, 76 years young. He said:

"My birthright entitles me to greet you as fellow citizens. I was born in Huntsville, Butler County. This to me important event occurred December 29, 1830. Consequently many people persist in calling me old, while I insist that I am a little past 76 years young. However, I come among you as a stranger, having been reared near Indianapolis from early childhood, and from there, accompanied by my young wife, migrated to the old Oregon country in 1852. There I have since lived the simple life of a farmer with my chosen life partner, who still lives to greet me on my return to our home in the great State of Washington, of which we were a part when that portion of the old Oregon country became known as Washington Territory.

"Most of you wonder why a man at this time of life would cross the plain with an ox team at this age of the world and spend 15 months in so doing, when he could have come by rail all the way in 5 days, surrounded by all the comforts of life. I will tell you why. But first let me tell you about the team and outfit, as I know by the questions so oft repeated that this is uppermost in your mind. This off ox, 'Dave,' came all the way from the stockyards of Tacoma and was an unbroken, wild Montana range steer. When I yoked him first he never before had had a rope on, except when branded. He is 6 years old, weighed when purchased 1,470 pounds, and now weighs 1,735, after having traveled on this trip over 2,800 miles, from Puyallup, near Tacoma, to this city. Seventeen hundred miles out from my home the noble ox 'Twist' died, from eating poisonous weeds, I think. Anyway, he was in better working trim the forenoon he took sick than when the start was made and was dead before sunset. To mate the ox left I purchased this fine steer on the near side, 'Dandy,' out of the stockyards at Omaha, and broke him in on the way. He, too, was a range steer that had never been handled. His weight when purchased was 1,470 pounds. He now tips the scales at 1,625 pounds.

"PRAIRIE SCHOONER.

"The wagon is of the type known as the 'prairie schooner,' that was in general use 50 years ago—wooden axle, necessitating the linchpin and tar bucket, with its swayback bed, which doubtless gave the name of this type of wagon, being, as you see, boat-shaped, suggestive of the name. And, my friends, the pioneers of the plains applied this likeness in a more literal sense than in a name only by utilizing them as boats in crossing rivers. I crossed the great Snake River at two places, with all of my belongings (except the cattle), with my wagon bed in 1852, and small wonder if I should look upon this type of the almost forgotten past akin to a feeling almost of reverence.

"One word as to that faithful companion, the Scotch collie dog 'Jim.' Jim has come all the way, has been a reliable watchman at night and cheerful companion of days; always good natured, except with the ox 'Dave.' They are mortal enemies.

"I will now tell you why this trip was made in this old-fashioned style. To perpetuate the identity of the old Oregon Trail, to honor the true heroes who made it, and to kindle in the breasts of the rising generation a flame of patriotic sentiment this expedition was undertaken. The ox team was chosen as a typical reminder of pioneer days, as an effective instrument to attract attention, arouse enthusiasm, and as a help to secure aid to forward the work; and I may say in passing that from the Missouri River to Puget Sound 22 monuments of enduring stone have been provided for by the people along the trail, and most of them are now in place to stand guard for centuries, to the end that the memory of the old trail shall not fall into oblivion and be forgotten by the generations to come.

"In one place—Baker City, Oreg.—800 school children contributed their mites to place a bronze tablet on the granite shaft erected by the citizens as a 'children's offering' to the memory of the pioneers. At Boise, Idaho, over 1,000 children contributed sufficient to erect a granite shaft 12 feet high, which was placed on the statehouse grounds and dedicated in the presence of 5,000 people. Again, at American Falls, Idaho, a cement shaft 14 feet high, suitably inscribed, stands in the exact track of the trail, within the confines of that growing city and in a park dedicated by a generous woman to protect a section of the trail. It is known as Pioneer Park.

"MEMORIAL JOURNEY.

"And so, along the route this journey came as an offering to gladden one's heart and to give us assurance that patriotism is not dead in the breasts of the people, though apparently it may be dormant, and that it but needs a spark, if I may be allowed the term, to keep alive the memories of the past.

"The ox team did it. I have seen old, gray-headed men stand almost by the hour and gaze at this outfit, seemingly oblivious of all other surroundings and with moistened eyes as the rush of old-time memories would irresistibly take possession of their minds. Do I not see some of them now? My friends of the later generations, take these thoughts to your hearts and see if you may not read a lesson that will serve you well in after life.

"And who are these pioneers we wish to honor? And what particular great achievement have we to record? you ask. Where is this old Oregon Trail? I will tell you.

"FIRM BRITISH RULE.

"In 1843 nearly a thousand men, women, and children crossed the Missouri River, traversed the Platte Valleys, crossed the Rocky Mountains through the South Pass, thence to and down Snake River to the Columbia, and to tidewater in the old Oregon country; the first wagon train that ever reached the Pacific coast, and the first real migration of home builders to the Pacific slope. Like a gathering storm of a summer day, these people had come together on the eastern border of the Indian country from widely scattered districts of the United States and pitched their tents near the buffalo herds on the western border of civilization. The Oregon question was unsettled, but hung in the balance. The Lynn bill granting 640 acres of land to each family had passed the Senate. Whitman, the intrepid missionary, had returned overland the previous winter to save his mission, and preached Oregon in season and out of season. The Government was organizing an expedition under the leadership of Fremont to penetrate the dark country, of which so little was known.

"The British ruled Oregon, if not with an iron hand certainly with firmness. The word of John McLaughlin, chief factor of the Hudson Bay Co., was the law of the land. He was known as the autocrat of the great Northwest. A mild-mannered man and, let it be said, a just man; aye more, a great man; yet he ruled under the auspices of the British Empire, and was all the more dangerous to American interests and American rule because of his justness, which disarmed criticism while holding the country with a firm grip for the British Empire.

"Such were the conditions when this first wagon train of home builders arrived in Oregon. These intrepid men had built their own wagon road for full 800 miles. They had overcome formidable obstacles in hewing their way. The widely advertised 'Pathfinder,' Fremont, had followed their trail instead of pointing the way. Whitman had traveled with them and encouraged them as guide, counselor, and physician, until duty led him to a sick bed at his mission. If they failed, starvation confronted them. Go ahead they must, for retreat was impossible. They were not in the position of the Pilgrims landing on Plymouth Rock, who could retreat to their ships. These people had, figuratively speaking, burned their bridges behind them. And yet a more formidable task lay in their path. They were intensely American in the highest sense that word implies. Go under the British rule they would not, and so, before the roofs were complete on the cabins of many of them, an American provisional government was formed, and, what is more remarkable, in less than two years the British rule was ended and Oregon became independent American territory, to become in after years the mother of American States, instead of remaining, as these people found it, a British colony.

"HONOR THESE MEN.

"It is these pioneers as a class we are striving to honor, not particularly individuals. As I have said, 22 monuments line the way from Puget Sound to the Missouri River to bear witness to the achievements of the pioneers. But we are not content to rest here. We want a greater monument, a monument of utility, that shall hand down to all succeeding generations the memory of the old trail and its pioneers, a national highway, to be known as Pioneer Way, from the Missouri River to the Pacific, a way that shall make traffic practicable by the trackless car, a road of cement that shall be thronged with coming generations.

"I do not come among you soliciting financial aid, but I do ask your moral support, so that when this expedition reaches Washington and the proposition is laid before the President and Congress, they may know there is a public sentiment behind the movement."

Following the address a considerable amount of Mr. Meeker's literature was taken by the auditors. He will remain in the city all this week arousing interest in his project.

LAST BLAZES ON THE OREGON TRAIL—AGED PIONEERR RETRACED HIS MARCH OF 54 YEARS BEFORE—EZRA MEEKER'S JOURNEY FROM PUYALLUP TO HIS INDIANA HOME—MANY MONUMENTS ERECTED ALONG THE WAY—FAMOUS TRAVELERS WHO TROD THE ROUGH ROADS 2,000 MILES—BOTH THE OREGON AND SANTA FE TRAILS NOW PERMANENTLY MARKED.

Originally blazed for a portion of the way by De la Verendrye in 1742; trodden a distance by Lewis and Clark as they pushed across the vast trans-Mississippi empire; worn by the trappers and adventurers of the first quarter of the nineteenth century, such men as Ezekiel Williams, Gen. Ashley, "Jim" Bridger, Campbell, Fitzpatrick, Sublette, and Wilson Price Hunt, and made into a hard and smooth highway by the hardy Missourians rushing across the continent in search of gold, by the Mormons seeking a new land of liberty, and by countless soldiers of fortune, the famous Oregon Trail has at last been rescued from oblivion and marked with stone monuments, thanks largely to the work of one man, Ezra Meeker.

Starting from his home in Puyallup, Wash., on January 29, 1906, Mr. Meeker retraced his march of 54 years before, back along the Oregon Trail to its eastern terminus on the Missouri River, then across Iowa and Illinois to his Indiana home. As he journeyed, Mr. Meeker interested the people along the route in the importance of saving the Oregon Trail from oblivion. Their fathers and grandfathers had helped to make it, but the past was in a fair way to be forgotten. The line of a great transcontinental railroad parallel or covers the old Oregon Trail for much of its way to-day, but there were detours and stages to be marked before they were lost sight of entirely.

To this old trail, which was one of the great roadways of the Nation a century and a half ago, has become known better than ever to the present generation. Between Puyallup and Omaha 19 monuments have been erected. Ezra Meeker, after a year's travel, reached his Indiana home. His journey and his work ended. Not so, the interest in the old trail, especially as it follows the marking of another old trail, the Santa Fe through Kansas.

Before tracing the Oregon Trail across the country from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and counting over those who wore it smooth, it might be well to summarize briefly Mr. Meeker's work in marking it.

INTERESTING THE PEOPLE.

After he left his Washington home, more than 2,500 people contributed to the erection of Oregon Trail monuments. At intervals along the route Mr. Meeker, with the aid of people for whom he and others blazed the way, erected monuments—a huge stone bowlder here, a cairn of stones there, a signboard or post in another place. In Baker City, Oreg., the monument was erected by contributions received from 800 school children, all of whom were present when it was dedicated. At Boise, Idaho, Mr. Meeker camped for several days beside the post office. He spoke to the public-school children of his object, and 1,200 contributed to purchase the granite monument which will mark the place where the old-timers passed through what is now a thriving city. The governor of the State and other State officers insisted that the monument be erected on the State house yard, and it was dedicated in the presence of more than 3,000 people.

To erect a monument at the summit of South Pass, Mr. Meeker traveled 84 miles from a post office, and 24 persons who reside in the neighborhood were the only witnesses of the event. The monument stands on the irrigation survey near Sweetwater, and is 7,450 feet above sea level, one of the highest of such landmarks in the country.

In many of the towns and places where monuments were erected Mr. Meeker stayed to see the work done, but in many other instances he turned the matter over to a local committee appointed for that purpose.

BEGAN ON THE MISSOURI.

The Oregon Trail began, as did the Santa Fe Trail, leading to the southwest, at the town of Independence, on the Missouri River. Practically St. Louis was the eastern terminus, men and goods going up the Missouri River to Independence and there taking wagon and setting out either for the Northwest or the Southwest.

The two trails were the same for 41 miles, when, as the historian Chittenden remarks, a simple signboard was seen, which carried the words, "Road to Oregon." That signboard to-day, with its lack of ostentation and its epigrammatic clearness, would be worth more than its proverbial weight in gold to any State historical society.

There were branch trails that came into the road from Leavenworth and St. Joseph, striking it above the point of departure from the Santa Fe Trail; but the Oregon Trail proper swung off from this fork, running steadily to the northwest, part of the time along the Little Blue River, until at length it struck the valley of the Platte, so essential to its welfare. The distance from Independence to the Platte was 316 miles, the trail reaching the Platte about 20 miles below the head of Grand Island. The course thence lay up the Platte Valley to the two fords, about at the forks of the Platte, 433 or 493 miles.

Here at the forks was a point of departure in the old days. If one chose to follow the South Forks of the Platte, he might bring up in the Bayou Salade, within reach of the Spanish settlements and the head of the Arkansas, or he might take the other arm and come out on the edge of the Continental Divide, much higher to the north.

The Oregon Trail followed the South Fork for a time, then swung over to the North Fork, at Ash Creek, 513 miles from Independence. It was 667 miles to Fort Laramie, which was the last post on the eastern side of the Rockies. Thence the trail struggled on up the Platte, keeping close as it might to the stream, till it reached the ford of the Platte, well up toward the mountains and 794 miles out from Independence, nearly the same distance from that point as was the Sante Fe on the lower trail.

INDEPENDENCE ROCK.

A little farther on the trail forsook the Platte, 807 miles out from Missouri, and swung across to the valley of the Sweetwater. The famous Independence Rock, 838 miles from Independence, was one of the most noteworthy features along the trail. It marked the entrance into the Sweetwater district and was a sort of register, holding the rudely carved names of many of the hardy western adventurers. By the Sweetwater the Oregon trailers were taken below the foot of the Big-horns, past the Devils Gate, and up to that remarkable crossing of the Rockies known as South Pass, where Ezra Meeker dedicated his monument under such unusual circumstances, taking water from the irrigation ditches on the east side of the Continental Divide to irrigate the west side. This is 947 miles from the Missouri River.

Starting now down the Pacific side of the Great Divide, the traveler passed over 125 miles of somewhat forbidding country, crossing the Green River before he came to Fort Bridger, the first resting point west of the Rockies, 1,070 miles from the Missouri. This was a delightful spot in every way, and always welcomed by the Oregon trailers.

The Bear River was 1,136 miles from Independence, and to the Soda Springs, on the big bend of the Bear, was 1,206 miles. Thence one crossed over the height of land between the Bear and Port Neuf Rivers, the latter being Columbia water; and, at a distance of 1,288 miles from Independence, reached the very important point of Fort Hall, the post established by Nathaniel Wyeth. This was the first point at which the trail struck the Snake River, that great lower arm of the Columbia, which came dropping from its source opposite the headwaters of the Missouri to point out the way to travelers.

At the Raft River was another point of great interest; for here turned aside the arm of the transcontinental trail that led to California. This fork of the road was 1,334 miles from the Missouri. Working as best it might from the Raft River, down the Great Snake Valley, touching and crossing and paralleling several different streams, the Oregon Trail proper ran until it reached the Grande Ronde Valley, at the eastern edge of the difficult Blue Mountains, 1,736 miles from the starting point. The railway to-day crosses the Blues exactly where the old trail did.

Then the route struck the Umatilla and shortly thereafter the Columbia River. It was 1,934 miles to The Dalles, 1,977 to the Cascades, 2,020 miles to Fort Vancouver, and 2,134 to the mouth of the Columbia, though the trail proper terminated at Fort Vancouver.

Such was the Oregon Trail traversed by hundreds and thousands of hardy adventurers, outlet of the Missouri rendezvousing station, a mighty highway across which surged the advance tide of a nation's traffic.

BLAZERS OF THE TRAIL.

Who blazed and followed this historic highway, destined to be marked to posterity 50 years after its zenith? The Frenchman De la Verendrye was perhaps the first to tread a portion of the later Oregon Trail, since it is known that he forsook the Missouri River and started overland, possibly up the Platte, crossing some of the country which the Astorians saw later. This was in 1742. The trapper Ezekiel Williams, said to have been the first white man to cross the borders of what is now Wyoming, followed in the wake of Lewis and Clark, in 1807, and blazed a part of the way. Andrew Henry, whose name was given to a beautiful lake of the Rockies; Etienne Provost, the probable discoverer of historic South Pass; Campbell, Fitzpatrick, Sublette, Jim Bridger, Gen. Ashley, Bonneville, and Walker—these are but a few of the leaders who blazed and trod the Oregon Trail, making it a well-defined highway before Fremont set out as a "pathfinder."

Then came Wilson Price Hunt, with his overland Astorians, seeking a way from the mid-Missouri to the Columbia River. Later, Robert Stuart and the returning Astorians were to mark out, east of the Continental Divide, the route of the trail for much of its length. Then came scores of trappers and traders; then Bonneville and his wagons, to deepen the trail in 1832; and two years later, in 1834, Campbell and Sublette built old Fort Laramie on Laramie Creek, a branch of the Platte. Eight years later Fort Bridger was built by Jim Bridger on a branch of the Green River.

In 1836 two women moved out into the West along the Oregon Trail. They were the wives of Whitman and Spalding, missionaries bound for Oregon. Father de Smet, a missionary, also followed in 1840; then more missionaries from New England, and two years later Frémont, as far, at least, as the South Pass.

So the Oregon Trail was blazed and tramped—traders, trappers, gold seekers, missionaries, colonists—until the highway stretched from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean. Years passed and railroads supplanted the old Oregon Trail; its very whereabouts was forgotten; disputes arose. Then an old man, almost 80, with his grandchild, clambered into a prairie schooner, made in part of the one in which he had journeyed westward in 1852, and the Oregon Trail was retraced and marked with monuments, that a people and a Nation may not forget.—F. G. M.

THE LOST OREGON TRAIL—EZRA MEEKER'S INTERESTING LECTURE BEFORE THE Y. M. C. A. THURSDAY EVENING.

Telling of his adventures in his first trip across the continent while blazing the Oregon Trail, and then telling of his present journey, Ezra Meeker, the grizzled pioneer of Washington State, delivered a most interesting talk at the Y. M. C. A. on Thursday night.

He spoke as follows:

"THE LOST TRAIL.

"I am to speak to-night of the lost trail of history, the 'Oregon Trail,' once so thronged with eager adventurous spirits, now a solitude in many intervening reaches, fading away from the memory of man, and almost obliterated from the face of the earth.

"No more fascinating search can ever engage the mind of man than to follow the actual track of the fathers that opened the way to conquer the land and wrest it from the native race and erect the standard of civilization in the wilderness, and with the standard a barrier to an encroaching nation whose grasp was tightening upon an empire—the Oregon country.

"Let me for a few moments follow the track as best we may of the throng of three-quarters of a century ago.

"We are on the left bank of that mighty, turbid river, the Missouri. All beyond to the westward is a blank. The Indians and the buffalo possess the land; we can not see that manifest destiny has set the seal upon the destruction of the one, though we may dimly realize the power of the other is destined to be broken in the march of civilization.

"The throng has crossed over; first by the adventurer in search of the golden harvest of furs, then the bold spirits of missionary fame, to be soon followed by the no less intrepid spirits, the home builders, who go out with all their belongings—their women and children, their cattle to cover a thousand hills, not forgetting nor neglecting to carry their trusty rifles, needed not only for defense, but for sustenance as well.

"THE OREGON TRAIL.

"The throng has disappeared. The generation that then toiled so diligently now sleep beneath the sod; a few only remain to tell the story of the great battle. Twenty thousand graves line the way of the great battlefield, or did, but alas! as like the track they made, have almost all fallen into oblivion. It is of this track, 'The Oregon Trail,' that I am to speak to-night. The converging columns that had crossed the river at various intervening points from Council Bluffs and the mouth of the Kaw River meet some 200 miles out on the banks of the Platte, then a broad river of placid waters, wooded islands, and treacherous quicksands, but now a barren waste of shifting sand, for the water has gone to the land. We find traces of the track on either side of the river until the parting of the waters, known as the North and South Forks. The way leads up the North Fork. The track is worn deeper and wider, for all is concentrated here. The Oregon pioneers have broken the way; the Mormons have followed; then comes the gold hunter, the California exodus, all traveling the one track and jostling the home builders, still pressing onward for the fair land of Oregon.

"We are now on the Sweetwater; past Independence Rock, that great register of the passing throng; past the Devil's Gate, that rift in the mountain a hundred feet wide, with perpendicular walls nearly 500 feet high, through which the water of the Sweetwater roars; past Split Rock, a chasm near by seemingly but a few feet wide and a thousand feet high; still on, up and up, crossing and recrossing the little river, mounting higher and higher, finally leaving it for good and all. In less than 3 miles and with but a few hundred feet ascent we are above the midsummer snow line and on the summit of the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains, 7,450 feet above sea level. Snow-capped, rugged mountains are in sight to the north and to the south 10 or more miles; to the west, through the great break in the mountain known as South Pass, our track leads us on a high plateau for a hundred miles or more. The ancient highway is here in all its primitiveness and solitude, worn deep and wide into the flinty roadbed—12, 20, 70, 90, aye 200 feet wide and 2, 5, and 15 feet deep. Remember, friends, I am giving you actual measurements—where the hoofs of stock and the grind of the wagon wheels had loosened the soil and the fierce winds had carried it away in impalpable dust or coarser sand, to stifle the breath of man or beast or smart the faces of the suffering pioneers.

"STRIKE SNAKE RIVER.

"But we must on; we are yet high up in altitude, five, six, and seven thousand feet for a hundred miles or more, until Bear River is reached; down Bear River a short way, past the sparkling soda springs—past that once famous but now silent Steamboat Springs, spouting at irregular intervals in the air; steadily on, bearing more to the north until we strike Snake River, then down the left bank past American Falls, Twin Falls, Shoshone Falls (well named the Niagara of the West), on down past the two Salmon Falls, upper and lower, and near by, where we follow the track of the decimated throng across the river to the north bank, over to and down Boise River, then back again across the Snake, soon to be left until its waters are encountered mingled with the waters of the Columbia. We are still on the trail that leads us up the Burnt River, the roughest piece of road yet encountered. On and on to the Grand Ronde Valley of pleasant memories, and up the seemingly impossible face of the Blue Mountain and into the welcome glades of the pine-covered forests, and then another stretch of dust and thirst to the broad Columbia, more than a mile wide, but suddenly lost in its grandeur of width and rushing in its greater grandeur of power through that chasm known as The Dalles, with a breadth of channel less than 200 feet—a roaring torrent of unknown depth, a river turned on edge.

"Near by and just below this wonderful gorge our visible track ends. The greater gorge through the Cascade Mountains obstructs the way, and here the all but famished pioneers took to the water, some in boats, some on rafts, some in their wagon boxes, and floated down past the sunken forests, past most awe-inspiring scenery, to the Cascades, where we again for a short distance catch sight of the great trail around to the foot of the falls and to the tidewaters of the great ocean beyond, beating back the almost resistless waters of the Columbia.

"THE BLAZERS OF THE TRAIL.

"Let me now turn our attention to the men and women who made this mighty highway, the longest continued track in the world, and let me say in passing, the trail of the greatest tragedies, not forgetting that trail of sorrow that leads to Siberia.

"The pioneers of that day were stalwarts—stalwarts in strength, in courage, in integrity, in manly and womanly virtue. They were nearly all frontiersmen, as well trained to the rifle as with the plow. Their habits of life were simple; clad, many of them, in homespun, with shoes made of cowhide on the cobbler's bench in the home, hats patched in ways indescribable, small wonder if they did present an uncouth appearance. But under all this a native wit prevailed, and if not schooled in Greek or Latin literature, they had learned their lessons well in the greatest school of all—life experience of industry, frugality, and for lack of a better name, one may call homely virtues.

"As the throng moves out into the Indian country (I now have in mind the movement in which I took a part), there soon developed weak points in the preparation for so great a trip, as well as weak bodies as compared with the stronger. Useless plunder soon began to make its appearance in abandoned piles along the roadside; but little later great piles of flour, bacon, sugar, in fact all sorts of provisions, were abandoned to relieve the overloaded wagons and overburdened teams. This began even before that dreadful scourge of cholera struck our columns. The throng was so great that all could not get into one track, and to this day traces of these parallel trails are to be found. There seemed at first some sort of orderly organization of companies like that of military rule, which, however, it was soon found were held together as like with a rope of sand. When the panic came, one might say that all organization ceased. The struggle for mastery of the road night and day began. The scene may well be likened to the retreat of a defeated and discouraged army pressed by a victorious foe. Small wonder if friends parted and enemies came together in the face of a common danger. I camped four days with a stricken brother to see 1,600 wagons pass. The loss of life was appalling. I have oftentimes refrained from telling the dreadful story, knowing full well that many would believe it incredible.

"Fully 5,000 persons laid down their lives in that one year alone (1852), for the scourge followed us for over a thousand miles and lined the trail with fresh-made graves, one might almost say, from one end to the other. While this was the chief cause of the great loss of life, there were others contributing, such as the lack of proper food, the irregular supply and impurity of water, the stifling dust, the anxiety to wear upon the iron will of the strongest. Enough has been said to justify me to say that the Oregon pioneers fought a veritable battle in their march to the Oregon country and that the 'Oregon Trail' became a great battlefield of history. This recital, my friends, remember, covers but one year, while the growth and use of the trail covers a period of 25 years, in which it is estimated fully 300,000 people passed over it and, as I have said, 20,000 died on the way.

"PRESERVATION OF TRIAL.

"Small wonder that with such an experience and with such memories the generation that has now so nearly passed over to the 'Greater Trail' should yearn to see their track preserved and their history recorded. We know by the records that 40 years ago this thought took possession of many minds. We know that it was not from a morbid craving for notoriety, but from a sincere desire that an important chapter in history should be written. The conquering of the farther West, written in the blood of many martyrs, is a theme not only to fire the imagination, but likewise to bring a second sober thought for the duties of the hour, to preserve the legacy handed down to the present generation, to impel the study of the old-time ways, to compare the present with the past, remembering that all changes are not betterments. To preserve the history of a nation is to perpetuate its existence and build up its righteousness. To teach a lesson of the virtues of the generation that have passed brings to the forefront their shortcomings as well, thereby impelling the younger generation to practice the one and avoid the other. And so with these thoughts in mind, this work to recover the 'Lost Trail' has been undertaken and the efforts made to arouse the Nation to complete the work.

"On the 29th of January, 1906, I left my home in Puyallup, Wash., with one ox and one unbroken steer, and this old-time wagon now in your city, built from the remains of three old wagons that had crossed over with the throng of 1852–53, and drove out in search of the trail and made an attempt to preserve its identity with granite markers. The people turned out almost en masse, but would not contribute to a general fund, but would lend a willing hand to erect memorial monuments in centers of population. I can only give you a very brief account of that trip. My fortune and misfortunes for the nine months required to retrace as best we could the old trail makes quite a story, but I can only here briefly, very briefly, tell it. We could find traces of it here and there, and then lose it. Part had been fenced up, the fields plowed, and all visible signs gone. In other places nature had been at work. The storms of a half century have changed the face of the country, the river crossings and other landmarks, by growth of vegetation and otherwise. Then again, cities have been built over it, great irrigation ditches have been dug, and so it became evident it would be impossible to recover the whole of the old track without more ample means. On that trip, however, 22 granite monuments give evidence of the interest taken, for the people paid for them as I passed along; but when the Missouri River was crossed and a halt made to take account of stock, I then more fully realized the work had failed. To be sure, we had succeeded in getting up 22 monuments, but what was 22 monuments for a trail 2,200 miles long? A monument for every hundred miles. On the way many bowlders had been marked, wooden posts set—but the expedition as planned had failed. But financial success had come from an unexpected sale of my little book.

"A NATIONAL WORK.

"A resolution was formed to go on to Washington, D. C., to ask Congress to make it a national work, and so in 22 months to a day from leaving my home I drove on to the White House Grounds, received instant recognition from the hands of President Roosevelt, followed by the introduction of a bill appropriating $50,000 to complete the work. I can not tarry to tell you of the varied fortunes that beset that measure further than to say that it is now pending in both Houses of Congress, and has been favorably reported by the committee of the House and amended, requiring an accurate estimate of the cost to complete the work before any of the appropriation should become available.

"And so a second trip over the trail became necessary to ascertain the number of monuments required, estimate their cost, and report the findings to the Congress. And that is what I have been doing this season just passed. I left my home the 12th of March, and again have driven over and along near by the trail and have actually re-covered 1,600 miles of the old track."

"And Joshua said unto them: 'Pass over before the ark of the Lord your God in the midst of Jordan, and take you every man of you a stone upon his shoulder according unto the number of the tribes of the children of Israel; that this may be a sign among you that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying, What mean you by these stones?

"'Then ye shall answer them: That the water of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the Lord when it passed over Jordan, and these stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel forever.'"

"So say we now, take every man of you a stone to cast upon the monument of the Oregon Trail as hallowed ground trod by the men who opened the way for this grand civilization, that their fame shall abide with us and their very tracks shall be preserved as a sign among you that when your children ask their fathers in time to come saying, What mean ye by these stones? Then ye shall answer them, These stones shall be for a memorial unto the pioneers who gave their lives that we might possess this heritage."

[From The History of the Fur Trade of the Far West, by Hiram Martin Chittenden; published by Francis P. Harper, New York.]

"This wonderful highway was in its broadest sense a national road, although not surveyed or built under the auspices of the Government. It was the route of a national movement—the migration of a people seeking to avail itself of opportunities which have come but rarely in the history of the world, and which will never come again. It was a route every mile of which has been the scene of hardship and suffering, yet of high purpose and stern determination. Only on the steppes of Siberia can so long a highway be found over which traffic has moved by a continuous journey from one end to the other. Even in Siberia there are occasional settlements along the route, but on the Oregon Trail in 1843 the traveler saw no evidence of civilized habitation, except four trading posts, between Independence and Fort Vancouver.

"As a highway of travel the Oregon Trail is the most remarkable known to history. Considering the fact that it originated with the spontaneous use of travelers; that no transit ever located a foot of it; that no level established its grade; that no engineer sought out the fords, or built any bridges, or surveyed the mountain passes; that there was no grading to speak of nor any attempt at metaling the roadbed, and the general good quality of this 2,000 miles of highway will seem most extraordinary."

After describing the general good quality of the trail in the early days, Mr. Chittenden continues his narrative: "But not so when the prairies became dry and parched, the road filled with stifling dust, the stream beds mere dry ravines, or carrying only alkaline water, which could not be used; the game all gone to more hospitable sections, and the summer sun pouring down its heat with torrid intensity. It was then the trail became a highway of desolation, strewn with abandoned property, the skeletons of horses, mules, and oxen, and, alas! too often, with freshly made mounds and headboards that told the pitiful tale of suffering too great to be endured. If the trail was the scene of romance, adventure, pleasure, and excitement, so it was marked in every mile of its course by human misery, tragedy, and death."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President of the United States had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On February 17, 1911:

H. R. 30888. An act providing for the purchase or erection, within certain limits of cost, of embassy, legation, and consular buildings abroad.

H. J. Res. 209. Joint resolution for the relief of Thomas Hoyne.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I send a document to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CAL., February 22, 1911—7.55 p. m.

Hon. E. A. HAYES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

As governor of the State of California, I transmit to you the following preamble and resolutions this day adopted by the Senate of the State of California:

"Resolution by Senator Caminetti.

"Whereas it is reported that the draft of the new treaty between the United States and Japan, sent to the United States Senate the 21st instant by the President of the United States, omits all restrictive features concerning the coming of Japanese laborers to the United States; and

"Whereas the Senate of the State of California, relying in good faith upon the assurance from official sources given to the people of the State during the last four years that the immigration to this country of such laborers was precluded by a 'mutual agreement' between our Government and Japan, and that the latter nation was as anxious to retain as we were to exclude them, patriotically and patiently observed calmness pending negotiations for a new treaty; and

"Whereas this senate notes with sincere regret the reported omission from said treaty of such protective measures as are vitally necessary to the interests of California and the welfare of its citizens, or in lieu thereof of such provisions therein continuing in force the said 'mutual agreement,' which has in the past been referred to by the Federal authorities as our shield and protector; and

"Whereas our people have been led to believe and to hope that there would be no surrender of our rights in the premises: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Senate of the State of California earnestly urges the President of the United States to withdraw said treaty from further consideration by the Senate of the United States; be it further

"Resolved, That we appeal to the Senate of the United States in the name of the people of the State of California to withhold and refuse its assent to a compact fraught with so much danger to our citizens, to our industrial development, and to our civilization; be it further

"Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives in Congress requested to use all honorable means to prevent the ratification of said treaty 'unless by proper amendment the rights of our people are fully therein protected;' be it further

"Resolved, That the governor be requested to immediately telegraph a copy of these resolutions to the President, the respective heads of Congress, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

"I do hereby certify the above resolution to be a full and correct copy of the original resolutions as amended in the senate and passed on the 22d day of February, 1911.

"WALTER N. PARRISH, Secretary of Senate."

In accordance with the above, I instruct the secretary of the senate to wire immediately the foregoing resolutions to the President, the respective heads of Congress, and to our Senators and Representatives.

HIRAM W. JOHNSON, Governor.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, the treaty between this Government and Japan, now in force, contains the following provision:

It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances, and regulations with regard to trade, the immigration of laborers, police, and public security which are now in force or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

The new treaty just submitted to the Senate, if we may believe the reports in the public press, contains no provision of this character. In negotiating the new treaty, the representatives of the two countries must have had this provision, as well as all other provisions of the old treaty, in mind, and they must have intentionally omitted from the new treaty all mention of the "immigration of laborers."

The fear of our people is that by this omission, under these circumstances, our Government will be held to have yielded to Japan our right to prevent the coming to our shores of her laborers or her coolie classes.

It may be that in the near future—while the proposed treaty may be in force—it will become absolutely necessary to have legislation to protect our people from the hordes of oriental laborers who, if not prevented, will flock to the United States. Under these circumstances, if such legislation should be passed or seriously attempted, the Japanese would certainly charge us, and justly charge us, with bad faith and a breach of her treaty rights.

I am advised that this proposed treaty gives to the citizens of Japan rights of entry, travel, and residence in this country, and without any provision in the new treaty like that in the old one above referred to, permitting us to exclude laborers, clearly we could not exclude them without violating this treaty. But it is claimed that Japanese laborers are now and will continue to be excluded by a sort of gentlemen's agreement between our own officials and the officials of Japan. If such an agreement is in existence, and it is pretended to have the force of law or to be binding in any way upon Japan, why not incorporate such an agreement in the treaty? Binding agreements between civilized nations upon matters of this kind are usually put in the form of treaties.

But if such agreement exists it would have no binding force upon new Japanese officials. Japan has the ministerial form of government, and if to-morrow there should be a change of ministry, what would become of this gentlemen's agreement?

Stripped of all verbiage and subterfuges, it is proposed to do what has never been done by this country for any nation in the world, to give up to Japan the right of determining for us what, if any, of her people shall have the privilege of entering the United States. This is done on the plea that it is necessary in order not to offend the excessive sensibilities of the Japanese people.

The people of California would not unnecessarily offend Japan. They have nothing but feelings of friendship for the Japanese people, but the matter of the immigration of oriental laborers is of such paramount importance to us that we can not permit any danger of such immigration in large numbers without the most violent protest. We can not view with indifference any action on the part of our Government that would make it less able to protect us from this oriental menace than it now is.

I am laboring under the disadvantage in discussing this matter of not having seen a full draft of the treaty, and I am quite well aware, Mr. Chairman, that this body has no voice in the ratification of the treaty in question, but I venture to express the hope that if the interests, not only of the Pacific coast, but, as I believe, of the whole country, and its Caucasian civilization, be not fully protected by this treaty it may not be ratified by the Senate.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, for many days we have listened to discussions in this Chamber which sounded the loud alarms of war in direful tones. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] gravely assured the country the other day that in less than 10 months we would be locked in death struggle with the Empire of Japan, and that in less than 12 months we would be undergoing the humiliation of temporary defeat. Just a moment ago the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs ventured the hope that the young men of this Republic would be speedily taught to shoot. From every part of this Chamber has been ringing the voices of gentlemen demanding a greater Navy and a larger Army. What does all this portend? Does it mean that we have forever put behind us the Republic of the fathers, and that we have set our faces toward the dazzling standards of military conquest and glory? The Republic of Washington and Jefferson and Madison proclaimed the principle of peace with all nations and entangling alliances with none. They preferred happiness in peace rather than glory in war.

When our form of government was in the process of molding the immortal sages who sat in judgment upon the lessons of history and the experiences of mankind chose for us a Republic of peace in preference to an empire of grandeur. These learned men were profound students of the world's history. They were familiar with the principles of all forms of government. They were not ignorant of the splendor which follows in the wake of great armies, great battles, and great generals; but they preferred peace and happiness in the homes of the people to the splendor of armies and military establishments. These founders knew that militarism would destroy free government, and they were happy in the knowledge that our isolated situation made great armies and great generals unnecessary. Providence rendered us secure from the wars of the Old World. Great oceans lay between us and the tramping soldiery of Europe. We occupied the one spot of earth for the successful establishment of a republic and the pursuit of the arts of peace.

On yesterday, the anniversary of the immortal Washington, we heard the wisdom and the greatness of that revered patriot extolled in eloquent terms by my colleague [Mr. SHEPPARD]. Let me take a sentence from the Farewell Address of Washington and propound it as an interrogatory to the membership of this body:

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand on foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, honor, or caprice?

But we seem to have forgotten the admonition of the fathers. We are no longer satisfied to stay upon our own shores and pursue the avocations of peace and the enjoyment of liberty. We have planted our flag 8,000 miles in the Pacific, to lord it over an inferior people. In the West Indies we are hated, because we are ever ready to interfere in their affairs. If there is a loan to be made in China, this Government interferes to see that New York bankers get their share of the investment. We are everywhere busy with the affairs of other nations. What must be the result?

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] prophesies war, swift and terrible; the generals and the admirals shake their heads ominously and hint at war; the heads of the great supply committees that spend the people's money fidget in their seats and cry out in trembling accents for more money with which to purchase powder and shot, guns and ships, arms and armaments. Ah, Mr. Chairman, the great trouble with us is that we are pursuing a policy which we know is likely to bring war. [Applause.] If we were attending strictly to our own business, there would be no excuse for all these mock heroics about war, and there would be no excuse for spending these fabulous sums of money taxed from the labor of the people. History gives ample proof of the fact that military men are prone to exert influence against peace. War is their game, and, naturally enough, they fret and chafe at piping times of peace. There can be no Alexanders and Hannibals without battles, and there can be no battles without war. If we listen to our generals and would-be generals, every appropriation bill will bristle with war preparations, and there will never be an end of it until there is a soldier upon the back of every citizen and the neglected implements of husbandry lie rusting in the fields, while their former users burnish bayonets and black boots in the camps of an army.

A thousand circumstances—

Says De Tocqueville, in his work on Democracy in America—

independent of the will of man concur to facilitate the maintenance of a democratic republic in the United States. Some of these peculiarities are known, the others may easily be pointed out; but I shall confine myself to the most prominent among them. The Americans have no neighbors and, consequently, they have no great wars or financial crises or inroads or conquests to dread; they require neither great taxes nor great armies nor great generals, and they have nothing to fear from a scourge which is more formidable to republics than all these evils combined, namely, military glory.

But these things have changed since this profound student of free government analyzed our institutions. We now have neighbors in abundance, for we have set up shop in the back yard of the Orient and stretched our clothesline across the confines of Europe. We now require great armies, great generals, and great taxes. Where will it all end? Can the liberty of the citizen survive?

I am not a pessimist, Mr. Chairman, but history does not encourage me to hope that our free institutions will long survive the time when the military shall be made paramount to the civil affairs of our Government. When we send great armies away to oppress our neighbors they will return to oppress our own people.

Rome sent Cæsar and his soldiers to conquer the barbarians, but he returned with his army to destroy the last vestige of Roman liberty and seat himself upon a throne. The people of France, in more recent times, employed Napoleon to lead a grand army against the neighboring peoples of Europe, but when the conquering general came back to France he promptly overthrew the young Republic and crowned himself Emperor with his own hands. Your great generals are not Democrats; they are not Republicans. They are autocrats who despise the civil authority and hate the democratic principle of equality.

Mr. Chairman, the principles of liberty and equality can not live in the military atmosphere. If we would go forth to conquer and achieve military renown as the Romans did we must expect the fate which befell the Roman Republic; if we would have a Cæsar to point his sword against our neighbors we may expect that he will at last turn that sword upon us. We can not have the glory of a strong government without paying the penalty in ruined liberties. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Three minutes.

Mr. SULZER. I yield those three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. For one, Mr. Chairman, I prefer to tread in the paths the fathers trod. In my opinion it is not nearly so important that the young men of this country should be taught to shoot as it is that they should be taught the dignity of labor and the duties of citizenship. I had rather see our people happy than illustrious; I had rather behold peace in the home than glory in the camp. I love the flag of my country, and because I love it I would haul it down whenever it floats over a conquered people; I would stay the onrushing flood of undesirable immigration to our shores; I would have this great Republic attend to its own business and cease meddling with the politics of Europe; I would cease spending the millions of the people in the making of great armies and great generals, and give more encouragement to those who labor in the farms, mines, and factories. I would mold fewer bullets and print more books; I would build fewer battleships and erect more schoolhouses. I would spend less money for destruction and more for construction. [Aplause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of cadets, $300,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there is an error in printing the bill, and I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, to be put in between lines 5 and 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of officers of the Army on detached service at the Military Academy:

"For pay of one commandant of cadets (lieutenant colonel), in addition to pay as captain, $1,140."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in the printed bill the words "for extra pay of officers" is left out, and the officer filling the position of commandant of cadets has been changed to a man of lower rank since the estimates were submitted. Under the law he is entitled to the pay of lieutenant colonel. This simply corrects it, and makes it what is necessary under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply to put in a letter of the Secretary of War in regard to the detail of officers, so that Members may have the privilege of reading it in the RECORD. I ask that it simply be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be inserted in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
Washington, February 18, 1911.

SIR: In connection with the statement of the Hon. JAMES HAY, of Virginia, before the House of Representatives, as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 16, 1911, in which reference is made to the number of officers detailed as instructors at the Army War College, Military Academy, Fort Monroe Artillery School, and other schools as follows:

"I have in my hand a statement furnished to me at my request by the Adjutant General of the Army, showing the officers of the Army who are detached from their regular service and assigned to duty either as instructors or as students at school, as of date January 1, 1911; and I say that there are 22 student officers here at the Army War College and 14 instructors. There are at the Military Academy at West Point 81 officers detailed as instructors. At the Army Service Schools at Leavenworth, Kans., there are 67 student officers and 22 instructors. At the Fort Monroe Artillery School there are 14 instructors and 40 students; and there are at these schools altogether 179 students and 148 instructors, including the officers at West Point."

I have the honor to say that the statement as printed was apparently misleading, as indicated by the debate which followed, and I submit the following memorandum which, in my opinion, more fully presents the facts:

ARMY WAR COLLEGE.

Mr. HAY states that there are at the Army War College 14 instructors and 22 students. The word "college" is used in a broad sense, and the 14 General Staff officers on duty in the War College Division of the General Staff are not instructors in the ordinary sense of the word. If there were no student officers whatever there the services of the 14 General Staff officers would be needed in the work of securing and compiling military information, and preparing plans, maps, etc. If the custom of foreign services were followed there would be a great many more than 14 General Staff officers on duty in the War College Division, even if there were no student officers whatever. Student officers are not a necessary adjunct of the War College Division, but as the officers in this division are a carefully selected body of men and have available an immense amount of information advantage is taken of the opportunity to use them as instructors of a class of carefully selected officers, who are detailed for a period of one year for advanced military studies in the art of war.

WEST POINT.

Mr. Hay states that there are 81 instructors on duty at West Point. It should be borne in mind that among the 81 detailed officers on duty at the Military Academy are included the superintendent and his staff, the surgeons, quartermasters in charge of construction, etc., and the officers on duty with the troops. Besides the 500 cadets there is on duty at the Military Academy a full battery of Field Artillery (135 enlisted men), the complement of officers for which, under existing law, is five. There is also a full troop of Cavalry, the complement of officers for which, under existing law, would be three. There is a detachment of engineers, which is practically a company of 100 men, and would ordinarily be entitled to a complement of three officers. There is also an Army Service School detachment of 225 men. Altogether there are 700 enlisted men on duty at the Military Academy, almost the equivalent of a regiment, the legal complement of officers for a regiment being 51.

The number of officers at West Point is proportionately high because the Corps of Cadets is only 80 per cent full. A full corps would require very few additional instructors.

COAST ARTILLERY SCHOOL.

It is stated that there are 14 instructors and 40 students at Fort Monroe. There are only 10 officers on duty at Fort Monroe on instruction duty exclusively. The remaining four officers perform duty as instructors in addition to other duty. In mentioning the number of students, omission is made of the students in the department of enlisted specialists, where there are 60 enlisted men under instruction as electricians, engineers, mechanics, etc. A correct statement would be that there are 10 instructors and 100 students, rather than 14 instructors and 40 students.

OTHER SERVICE SCHOOLS.

No detailed reference is made by Mr. Hay to the exact number of officers and students at other schools, but it is stated that, including West Point, there are 148 instructors and only 179 students. As a matter of fact, at the Mounted Service School at Fort Riley, which is apparently included in this, there is also a department for the instruction of enlisted men, known as the School for Cooks and Bakers, and another for the instruction of horseshoers and farriers, with a total of about 440 enlisted men under instruction, all of whom are under the instruction of these officers.

CORRECT STATEMENT.

Based upon the above figures, a more correct statement of the facts would have been that there are 148 officers on detached service as instructors. These officers, in addition to other duties, instruct 1,179 students, of whom 179 are student officers, 500 are cadets, and 500 enlisted men.

CIVILIAN SCHOOLS.

Subsequently, in the course of debate, reference was made to civilian schools. There are 64 officers of the active list detailed as instructors at civilian educational institutions. At these schools there are 19,633 students enrolled, making an average of one officer for every 307 students.

Very respectfully, J. M. DICKINSON, Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I notice there is an item here for the pay of the master of the sword, $2,400. The duties of this officer are about similar in character to the duties of the master of the sword at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, are they not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The master of the sword has a fixed pay by law; he has the pay of a first lieutenant.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Are his duties similar in character to the duties of the master of the sword at Annapolis?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am not familiar with the duties of the master of the sword at Annapolis, but I can say that the master of the sword at West Point is a very valuable officer. There is a provision of law to the effect that when he dies or retires his place is to be filled by the detail of an Army officer.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. A statement was made during the consideration of the naval bill that when the contest was held for the sword championship of the United States the prize was carried off by the Naval Academy last year. I think that statement was made in debate, and I understand that the instruction there is imparted by a $1,600 a year officer.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The law fixing this rate of pay was passed several years ago. This is simply carrying out the law.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I am not attempting to make a point of order on the paragraph. I am simply seeking information.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I know that all the authorities insist that the man at West Point is an exceedingly valuable man, and I know that at the request of the Academy some six or eight years ago his pay was fixed at that of a first lieutenant. The law at the same time provided that when he died or retired his place should be filled by the detail of an officer of the Army.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I am simply trying to get some information.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The contest between these two academies varies from year to year. Sometimes one wins and sometimes the other. We are all proud of both of them.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I understand that, but I was trying to discover some reason, if there is any, for the disparity in compensation of these two officials, one man getting $1,500 a year, I think, and no rank and no right of retirement, and practically a civilian employee of the Government, whereas the other man gets $2,400 a year, rank, and the privilege of retirement.

Mr. MANN. But the Navy man has an assistant and the Army man has not.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. That is the information I am trying to get.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of one sergeant of engineers, acting first sergeant, $108: Provided, That hereafter the pay and allowances of the acting first sergeant of the United States Military Academy detachment of engineers shall be the same as the pay and allowances of a first sergeant of a company of engineers: And provided further, That when an acting first sergeant of the detachment of engineers may hereafter be retired, his retired pay and allowances shall be the same as the pay and allowances of a retired first sergeant of a company of engineers.

Mr. MACON. I reserve a point of order for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill the necessity for this provision.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have recently added for educational purposes a detachment of engineers to the force at West Point. In place of taking a first sergeant from his company, they have detailed a sergeant, and made him first sergeant of that corps. He performs all the duties of a first sergeant.

Mr. MANN. An acting first sergeant.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He is an acting first sergeant all the time he is there. There is a bill now before Congress making this detachment of engineers permanent. In that event there would be a permanent first sergeant there, and this law would be of no effect. But we have not acted on that yet, and while I am rather of the opinion that it will come back here on this bill, I do not know that I ought to say that, but I have an intimation that it will be done; and while I think it is good legislation, we have not acted on it yet. As long as this man is acting there and performing all the duties of a first sergeant, there is no excuse for not paying him as a first sergeant.

Mr. MACON. What is the difference in the compensation he is to receive?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One hundred and eight dollars a year, and we provide for that for this year in this bill. The only difference will be that if he is kept there until he is an old man and retired, his retirement will be as a first sergeant.

Mr. MANN. This makes that the law.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Whereas the appropriation would only for the next year.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and under this provision it will not be necessary to carry this special appropriation next year.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk to treasurer, $1,800.

Mr. MACON. I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I notice the committee have increased the compensation of this clerk from $1,600 to $1,800.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. MACON. While the salary of the clerk to the adjutant, in the paragraph just above, remains at $1,500. Why should this increase be made?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This increase is made because of the long service of the man and the very excellent record he has made, and it is urged strongly by the officers of the academy. We believe it is only just that after his long years of service he shall have an increase from $1,600 to $1,800.

Mr. MACON. Are his duties any more tedious or exacting than those of the clerk to the adjutant?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The adjutant has more help and the duties of this clerk are more arduous. He is a first-class man. He has been there a great many years, and with the cost of living and all we thought this increase only fair. He is getting to be an old man and is so efficient that they regard him as worth even more than that. They have been urging this increase for some time, and the committee believed that in view of all the facts submitted it was a very moderate increase. If he had been in a department here in Washington, I will say to my friend that he would have been up to $2,000 a year long ago as a department clerk. I think this proposition is a very fair one.

Mr. MACON. I do not know; but it appears to me that a clerk of this character, when he gets a salary of $1,600 a year, is getting a little more than the average clerk that performs services in other positions.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman let me read what is said about him in the Book of Estimates?

NOTE.—This amount is for the cashier and confidential clerk to the treasurer of the Military Academy. He handles and is responsible for all the money transactions of this office. This requires the services of not only a clerk of excellent habits and utmost integrity of character, but one of considerable skill as an accountant. He has been employed by this office in various capacities for 30 years and is entirely worthy of the increase in salary requested. His duties are of such a nature as to frequently demand his services for additional hours and on Sundays and holidays.

I will say to the gentleman that if this same man had a clerkship in the Treasury Department he would have had $2,000 a year before this. Now, it is as expensive to live at West Point as it is in Washington. It is not like a village or a country town. I know my friend from Arkansas wants to be fair to these people who work for a low salary, and I sincerely hope that he will not make a point of order.

Mr. MACON. In view of what the gentleman from Iowa has said I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of chapel organist and choir master, $200.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment to strike out, in line 9, page 14, the word "two" and insert the word "seventeen."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 9, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "seventeen," so as to read "$1,700."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman. I want to say that I have no desire to detain the committee with an explanation, but the military school asked for this at seventeen hundred dollars a year. We now pay two. The committee thought that $200 was sufficient at this time.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the reason I offer the amendment is that when $200 was paid for an organist it was for services held in the old chapel, where I think there was not even a pipe organ installed. There is now at West Point one of the greatest chapels in the country, and where an organ has been appropriated for to cost $10,000. Now, no one who knows anything about the pay of an organist and a choir master would contend that they could get an organist to play this organ for $200 a year.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I gather the impression that at $200 a year the department would be pretty well satisfied for this next fiscal year, the one for which we are appropriating in this bill. The $10,000 organ has not yet been installed.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. OLCOTT. Am I not right in saying that it is being erected now?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not think so. I was in the chapel the other day. It is a very beautiful building, and, in my judgment, it is one of the most beautiful buildings I ever was in; also, in my judgment, it is one of the most inexcusable pieces of extravagance that the Government ever indulged in. I think to erect a $400,000 chapel for a school was a thing that ought to have made the American people indignant, and I believe that when the knowledge sifts through their minds it will.

Mr. OLCOTT. I do not think that is a question to be considered here now.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; but, Mr. Chairman, I do not think this $1,700 ought to be appropriated.

Mr. OLCOTT. Well, Mr. Chairman, the organ in this new church will not be played upon by anybody that you can get for $200 a year. Therefore I offer the amendment, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. To increase the compensation that the committee thought was not worth more than $200 to $1,700 strikes me as being inexcusable in the extreme.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MACON. Yes.

Mr. OLCOTT. The man who performs the service for $200 and the one who will perform it for $1,700 are not performing a like service at all. You can not get a man to play a large church organ for the same price that you can get one to play the small organ that was in the old chapel.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I understand that; but the committee in charge of this bill had all this matter under consideration, and they have reported the bill to the House, and say by that act that they think $200 is enough. They have reported other increases that were in reason, and nobody up to this time has objected to any of them, but if Members are going to ask increases of this character, then I must insist on knocking out every increase that is offered, because it is going too fast, in my judgment, to increase salaries from $200 to $1,700 at a clip. We ought to proceed by degrees in matters of this kind and not by leaps and bounds. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask a vote on it, of course. It is only a question of the employment of somebody to play a melodeon or a large pipe organ. If we build a big city organ we ought to have somebody who can play upon it.

Mr. MACON. I think the committee ought to have this matter investigated before we act upon it.

Mr. OLCOTT. If you get some person who will be employed at $200 a year, the chances are that your $10,000 organ would be ruined.

Mr. HAY. I would like to know why the gentleman thinks it is necessary to provide for this $1,700 man until we have the organ.

Mr. OLCOTT. I felt quite certain that it is now in process of erection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I was all through the building a few days ago, and I found no evidence of any construction in that building for an organ of that kind.

Mr. HAY. As a matter of fact, the superintendent of the academy said it had not been completed, and it is not completed, and the gentleman wants now to appropriate money for a position which can not be filled, and nobody knows when it can be filled.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, from the statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] and the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] that this will not be necessary for the coming fiscal year and that the organ is not now commenced, I will withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one clerk and stenographer in adjutant's office (to be immediately available), $1,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. This seems to be the creation of a new office.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is, but it is to take the place of one that was abolished, as I remember now. I can tell the gentleman in a minute.

Mr. MACON. It is on page 15, beginning with line 6 and ending with line 7, for one clerk and stenographer in adjutant's office (to be immediately available), $1,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that there is a change in clerks by the ordering away of clerks that have been heretofore employed there. There are some seven or eight clerks, I think, altogether—I can look the matter up and tell the gentleman exactly—that have heretofore served in the Military Academy, but have been paid out of the Army appropriation bill. The Adjutant General of the Army, in pursuance of the orders of his chief, notified the Military Academy before these estimates were submitted that those clerks would all be ordered away from the academy, and that the academy must provide its own clerks. The gentleman will find an increase of clerks here in the academy to make up for those who have been ordered away and that have been paid out of the Army bill. They asked for a larger increase of clerks in the Army bill for departments and headquarters and military posts and we cut that down, and they took these away from the Military Academy. It is an increase in the item, but the same number of clerks practically would be employed at West Point as have heretofore been employed. They have been paid out of the Army bill, and in taking them away they wanted a stenographer to be made immediately available.

Mr. MACON. Is the expense reduced; that is, the appropriation reduced that they have been heretofore paid?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; it was not reduced because there was an increase given to the Army, but if there had been no increase given there would have been a decrease here. Heretofore they were paid out of the Army bill.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of 2 book sewers in bindery, 1 at $24 and 1 at $20 per month, $960.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there is an error there in the language of the paragraph, and I move to strike out all after the word "bindery," in line 11, down to and including the word "month," in line 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 11, strike out all after the word "bindery" down to and including the word "month," in line 12.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Military Academy shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers of the Pay Department as pay of the Military Academy and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I want to ask the question I asked a few minutes ago, whether it is true the academy is below its full quota of students.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and always is.

Mr. BORLAND. How much below?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think about 120 cadets now.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the capacity of the academy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know that I can answer that off-hand. It is 391 for Members of Congress, 40 for the President, and 92 for Senators, one for each Territory, and one extra for Members whose cadet is in the senior class—about 600.

Mr. BORLAND. So it is short about 120?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is all of that short.

Mr. BORLAND. How long has that condition continued?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It varies, sometimes more and sometimes less. There have always been cadets going out, occasionally one will die, and a great many fail in their examinations, and sometimes they are discharged for hazing. I think that is what the gentleman wants——

Mr. BORLAND. No; that is not what the gentleman wants, but I will get to that. I want to know this, What is the reason of the shortage of practically 25 per cent in the academy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One is, there are none coming in. For instance, I have just received a notice that both of the men I have nominated, the principal and the alternate, had both failed. Besides, at the midwinter examinations, there is always a large number of cadets who are "plucked," as it is called, who have not passed their examinations, and it varies, owing to the ability of the class, and for other reasons.

Mr. SULZER. And in that connection allow me to say to the gentleman one of the reasons the classes at West Point are not up to the maximum in numbers is because the Members of Congress do not make their appointments as regularly and speedily as they should, and another reason is that a great many young men appointed by Members of Congress fail to pass the midwinter examinations, and the consequence is there is never a time, and probably never will be a time, when all the classes at the West Point Military Academy will be full and complete. I ask the gentleman in that connection if his cadet is now in the academy?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. Then the gentleman's district is represented. There are many districts, however, that are not represented, and it is urged by the officers at the academy that Members of Congress should do the best they can to keep their districts represented. This will go far to obviate the evil of which the gentleman complains.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will say, in view of what the chairman of the committee and a ranking Democrat have said on this subject, that it seems to me that the appropriation of over a million a year to maintain a school is so costly an expenditure that it ought to result in all the practical benefit to the country that is possible from that kind of an institution. Certainly a shortage of 20 to 25 per cent continually is not explained by death, resignation, or dismissal for discipline. It must be explained on some other ground. The gentleman says it is due to the fact that many Members fail to appoint and that many of the men appointed fail in their examinations. If the Members fail to appoint, there must be another way of keeping the academy filled, because surely we can not be running an expensive academy by depending upon the promptness or whim of 391 Members of Congress and 92 Members of the Senate. We must have the Army supplied with officers. It is further a fact, as I understand it, that nearly 60 per cent of the officers were appointed from civil life. Is it possible there are better men of whom to make officers outside of the academy than in it?

Is it possible that the best condition of affairs that can happen is that 60 per cent of the officers must be appointed from civil life? If so, that is an argument against the entire academy, for if the academy is kept up for the sole purpose of training officers and can only result in obtaining from the academy 40 per cent of the officers needed, then clearly the men appointed from civil life can take care of the whole job if necessary.

It is said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] that many of the appointees fail, and I know that to be true. I appointed a man who had the advantage of one of the best high schools in the West, the one at Kansas City, which I believe is fully the peer of any high school in the country. I believe that a man that has gone through a good high school should be qualified for the first year's class at either of the academies, especially if he has gone through a high school that is above the average of the ordinary rural, country high school. It seems that that man could not get into the academy until he had gone to some special instructors and taken further tuition in mathematics. In other words, there was a young man who was as thoroughly equipped as any young man could possibly be in this modern day and age of educational advantages, but he could not pass an examination at West Point without, first, a special, and, second, a failure that had to be compensated by restoration and reappointment. Now, I picked out the best qualified man I could find for that purpose. His father is a dignitary in the Episcopal Church. I do not know a thing that would disqualify him physically or mentally for the Military Academy, and yet he could not take that examination without a special training. That being so, there must be something materially wrong about the curriculum of the academy. It seems to me if we go into the open market and get 60 per cent of our officers from civil life, many of whom have not had better than the ordinary high-school training, why could we not take the ordinary high-school boy from the ordinary high schools of the country, from Missouri and Iowa, and the other States, and start them through the Military Academy?

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does he understand that 60 per cent of the officers being appointed now to the Army are from civil life, or that of the officers now in the Army 60 per cent are from civil life?

Mr. BORLAND. I see where my remarks were not clear. I understand about 60 per cent of the present force of officers were appointed from civil life, but I do not understand what the gentleman says I might have been implied to say, that 60 per cent of the appointments to-day are from civil life. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. TILSON. Not more than 25 per cent of the officers to-day are taken from civil life.

Mr. BORLAND. Why should that be so?

Mr. HAY. I would like to call the gentleman's attention, if he will permit me, to the hearings in this case on this very question. Gen. Barry, the Superintendent of the Academy, was being examined as to why the corps of cadets was not full, and he stated, among other things, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] has said, that the Members of Congress and Senators do not appoint, and therefore permit vacancies to be created. He also stated that in each class there are failures every year. But he went on and said further, as showing the improvement in that regard, that as the result of the last examination the whole first class got through, the whole second class and the whole third class, and only six of the fourth class were declared inefficient. I think that is a pretty good record.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, is it not true that if a Member of Congress fails to appoint within a certain time the appointment lapses to the President of the United States?

Mr. HAY. It lapses to the Secretary of War.

Mr. BORLAND. That is practically the same thing.

Mr. HAY. But the gentleman will understand they do not exercise that, because they do not wish to take that away from a Member of the House or the Senate, and he is given an opportunity to make the appointment.

Mr. BORLAND. But if the law provides that the appointment shall be made——

Mr. HAY. I do not know that the law is mandatory. I think it is simply in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BORLAND. It seems to me it is a discretion that he is expected to exercise, if it is necessary to keep up the full quota of the Academy.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman knows how these matters are. He knows that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy would not take away from a Senator or a Congressman the right to make an appointment when he was told that a nomination would be sent in in a few days, or some such matter as that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintaining the children's school, the Superintendent of the Military Academy being authorized to employ the necessary teachers, $3,520.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is a mistake here, in the proviso at the bottom of page 27.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is the children's school.

Mr. TILSON. Then we have a provision for a chemical fire engine in the next paragraph.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That does not apply to the school.

Mr. TILSON. It does not apply to the chemical fire engine?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. TILSON. It seems to follow the chemical fire engine as if it would apply to it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The chemical fire-engine item was put in there after the bill was prepared. The proviso applies to all foreign publications, foreign professional books, and so forth. It does not apply to anything except foreign publications, no matter where it goes in.

Mr. TILSON. It seems to me it should go in in connection with the library.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It has always been at the end of the whole provision, as it is in this bill. It does not make any difference where it is; it only applies to the one provision now. If the gentleman will notice he will see that it has always come in before "Buildings and grounds."

The Clerk read as follows:

For plaster and other models, relief plans, and maps to illustrate the facts of geology, photography, geography, hydrography, the processes and results of the useful arts, of the art of war, fortifications, artillery, and the like, to be displayed on the walls of the buildings of the academy, $5,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read, for the purpose of getting some information from the chairman of the committee. I will ask the chairman of the committee, Does this item propose to appropriate for some relief work on the exterior of the buildings?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; it is intended to put some models and plaster casts inside for the students to study. I do not think the item is subject to a point of order, because it is in line with the subjects decided on for the instruction of the students. It is in accordance with the plan for carrying out the course of instruction.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is for laboratory work and purposes of that kind?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is for instruction of cadets.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of increasing the efficiency of the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., and to provide for the enlargement of buildings and for other necessary work of improvement in connection therewith, as authorized in acts of Congress approved June 28, 1902 (Public, 181), April 28, 1904 (Public, 192), March 3, 1905 (Public, 137), and June 28, 1906 (Public, 310), in accordance with the general plan approved by the Secretary of War January 27, 1904, to remain available until expended, $300,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. I notice that the phraseology——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hardly think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman said that a moment ago, but in this case I may be more intent on the point of order. I would like to inquire if it is intended to insert this amount, $300,000, for the enlargement of the academy buildings?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is part of what has been authorized, and, as I understand, it completes the amount that has been authorized. They asked us this year to increase the authorization, and we declined. This is for the buildings already authorized, and it is within the limit of cost.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wished to ascertain that information, as to whether it was in addition to the amount heretofore authorized.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; it is in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated, but not in addition to the amount authorized.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is within the amount heretofore authorized it is not subject to a point of order. May I inquire what is the purpose of the appropriation of $300,000?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We appropriate each year under the authorization. This $300,000 completes the amount authorized by Congress and fixed as the limit of cost and is for continuing the erection and completion of buildings already authorized.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no new building contemplated by this appropriation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; that is to say, there will be new buildings built out of this appropriation, but buildings that have been approved; the plans have all been made for them. It is for carrying on the work, and with this appropriation stops the construction of new buildings, or the commencement of the construction of buildings, unless Congress authorizes an increase in the limit of cost.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman a statement of the total amount that will have been expended under these various enactments, with this $300,000 included?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Seven million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. In what period of years has that amount been expended?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would not like to give that off-hand, but it runs over a period of some 10 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not earlier than the first act mentioned here of 1902?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should think not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it is very likely within the last six or seven years?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it is more than seven years. That is my recollection, but it is off-hand. On page 59 of the hearings the question was asked:

What additional buildings and improvements would be left out if we did not authorize it—

That is the additional $3,000,000 they want. I can read to the gentleman what they say here.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are exercising their propensity for more appropriations to the amount of $3,000,000 only?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that the first act we passed limited the total to $5,000,000, as I recollect now. I am not speaking with absolute accuracy. After the plans had been approved, and after some appropriations had been made, Congress increased the limit of cost to $7,500,000. I will say to the gentleman that that is not unusual, because in the case of the Naval Academy—and I am not saying this for the purposes of criticism or comparison, but simply as a fact—they started out with a proposition for less than $8,000,000, and then it was increased to $8,000,000, and finally the limit of cost was increased to $12,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would not be unusual for them to ask for this additional $3,000,0000 in excess of the authorization.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have already done that, but we have not reported it, and so far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, it is not before Congress, because we failed to report it. It would be subject to a point of order if anybody should make it, and we do not believe they ought to have that authorization. But a future Congress may give such authorization.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DODDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 32436) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RETURN OF A BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT—HELEN S. HOGAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the request of the House of Representatives of February 21, 1911 (the Senate concurring), I return herewith House bill No. 25081, entitled "An act for the relief of Helen S. Hogan."

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 23, 1911.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the message will lie on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

CODIFICATION OF LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 7031) to codify and revise the laws relating to the judiciary, and without reading strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof, without reading, the text of the bill (H. R. 23377) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, as heretofore amended in the House, and ask a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 7031) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, and, without reading, strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof, without reading, the text of the bill (H. R. 23377) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, as heretofore amended in the House, and ask a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SHERLEY. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], a member of the committee, demands a second. Under the rule a second is ordered.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. On the last day on which this bill was discussed in the House—that is, the House bill which it is now proposed to substitute for the Senate bill—there was pending an amendment which had been voted upon and upon which tellers had been demanded and ordered, as I recollect the transaction, but before the vote was taken by tellers the House adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] would not cover anything except the amendments that had been agreed to. It does not cover anything else.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. That amendment had been defeated by division.

The SPEAKER. It is a question of fact. On the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey the division was going on.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The amendment was defeated, but the result was not announced, because a demand for tellers was made and tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing journalized except that which is agreed to; and from the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey the House was dividing.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I might say in addition that the announcement had been made by the Chair that the amendment was defeated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know anything about it except from the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to say upon this matter unless some gentleman asks me a question. This bill has been before the House for consideration on 9 or 10 different days, and I think everybody understands the attitude of the bill, and I prefer for the present to confine myself to answering questions, which I should be glad to do.

Mr. GARRETT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The effect of the motion is to include all amendments that have been agreed to in the House?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Absolutely; yes. It so states in the motion. The effect is to carry into conference all the amendments that have been adopted by the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania for this reason: There are included in the bill now amendments of vital importance, and this Congress can enact good legislation by passing the bill with those amendments. But I think in fairness that it should be said to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if this bill comes back from conference with these amendments eliminated the pressing necessity for passing it will also be eliminated.

There are involved here amendments that are far-reaching. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MADISON], which was adopted, the amendment offered by myself, which was adopted, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS], which was adopted, and the amendments offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], which were also adopted, improve this bill, improve the law, and make it worthy of passage. But if these amendments are eliminated in conference, then there is no pressing necessity for passing the bill.

I wish to be entirely candid about my position on it. I shall vote to send it to conference because of the valuable amendments that are placed on it. I shall vote against any conference report which does not include the fundamental propositions involved in at least two of these amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman from Tennessee would name those amendments.

Mr. GARRETT. I shall be very glad to do so. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MADISON] and adopted by the House provides, in substance, that the district Federal courts shall not interfere with the State officers executing a State law, when its constitutionality alone is involved, until that law has been passed upon by the highest court of the State. Then, of course, an appeal can be taken by writ of error from the supreme court of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The amendment proposed by myself and adopted was one which prevents the removal of causes brought in a State court of a State against corporations to a Federal court upon the ground of diversity of citizenship of the corporation. The amendment proposed by the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee has not completed his statement. That amendment does not prohibit the removal of causes from a State court to a Federal court on the ground of citizenship. It affects corporations——

Mr. GARRETT. I thank the gentleman. I thought I stated that it prevented removals of suits brought against corporations on the ground of diversity of citizenship of the corporation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It changes the old rule that a corporation is a citizen in the State of its formation.

Mr. MANN. And makes it a citizen in the States in which it does business.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It makes it a citizen in every State that it is doing business in.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; practically, though not in express terms. For jurisdictional purposes it will be so in so far as removals are involved.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That ought to have been the law long ago.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GARRETT. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] was simply to raise the amount from $2,000 to $5,000. As the law now is, a cause may be removed on the ground of diversity of citizenship from the State court to the Federal court where the amount involved is $2,000. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky raises the amount from $2,000 to $5,000. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is upon a question of procedure, upon the question of removing the judge upon the affidavit of——

Mr. MANN. A change of venue.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; a change of venue. The amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] applies to the abandoned property claims; that is his principal amendment. There are a number of other amendments offered by him and adopted, changing the phraseology so as to define the war of secession as the "Civil War," rather than as it has been defined heretofore in the law, the "War of the Rebellion." Those are the five amendments which have been adopted that I regard as of great importance, and in order to secure the adoption of which I am willing to vote for the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman desires to ask further questions, I will reserve the balance of my time and ask the gentleman from Kentucky to employ his time.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has stated very aptly some of the chief amendments that were put upon the bill in committee. As I shall be one of the conferees, it is perhaps not out of place that I should make this statement, in view of what the gentleman has said. As House conferee I should, of course, feel obligated to urge upon the conferees of the Senate the adoption of any amendments that the House has placed on the bill, but I would not be willing to have it understood now that I agree to the gentleman's statements that in the event a conference report came back here not containing everything that the House has seen fit to place in the bill that the bill should be defeated.

The situation is practically this: Without a suspension of the rules and the passage of this bill under suspension there will be no change of law either in the particulars enumerated by the gentleman from Tennessee or in any other particulars which are the result of the labor of the joint committee that reported the bill in the first instance. To my mind the bill, as reported, was a good bill, justifying its enactment—not a perfect bill—and it could and has been perfected by committee amendments, but irrespective of those committee amendments I believe that the bill ought to pass. I desire to make that statement, so that there may be no misunderstanding about my position.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a question.

Mr. GARRETT. This bill of the committee does make a rather fundamental change in the merger of the circuit and the district courts. The reasons have been presented for opposition to that, and I say very candidly to the gentleman that they do not appeal to me sufficiently to induce me to vote against the bill, but that does involve a considerable change in the law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; it changes the law in that respect.

Mr. GARRETT. So that it is not altogether correct to say that this bill contains nothing except existing law.

Mr. SHERLEY. No one has said it except the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. Now, may I ask the gentleman if we can be assured of a vote upon these amendments in conference?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the first place the bill has not reached a stage where there is even a conference ordered, and I presume at that time when a conference is ordered by the House the gentleman's question would then be in order. At this time we do not even know that there will be a conference or but what the Senate may accept the House bill. The only reason I made the statement was this: I did not want my side of the House to consider that the passage of this bill under suspension of the rules obligated the conferees to favor the defeat of a conference report unless it had in it an acceptance of the various amendments that the gentleman enumerates.

Mr. GARRETT. No; no; and I hope the gentleman will understand I did not, in anything I said, mean to undertake to bind the conferees. I was speaking for myself and outlining my own course of action.

Mr. PARSONS. Was not this merger of the circuit court with the district court in the report of the commission which was specially referred to the joint committee and had been agreed to both by the Senate and the House?

Mr. SHERLEY. It was; and not only is that true, but this other fact is true. This House has, day after day, on calendar Wednesday, practically considered everything in the bill. There are only a few pages containing matter which, so far as I know, would not be the occasion for any difference of opinion or discussion, and certain amendments pending that are unacted upon, and the proposition now before the House is this, Whether we shall suspend the rules and pass this bill by striking out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and substituting the House bill, so as to make it a basis for conference, or whether we shall let the work of several years fall to the ground and have to be gone over again in another Congress? This is all I desire personally to say. I promised to yield the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] five minutes, and I now do so.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill contains so many good features in the condition in which it left the Committee of the Whole that I quite agree with the gentleman from Kentucky that substantial progress has been made. If the bill can come back from the conference in anything like the shape in which it goes from the House, it will be a very desirable step for us to take. There is one feature, though, in view of his remarks, that he will probably as a conferee be obliged to sustain the amendments of the House, to which I should like to call attention, because I believe it has not been adequately discussed in this House. On last Wednesday an amendment was submitted by the gentleman from Illinois providing for the purchase (page 2621 of the RECORD) for the United States circuit and district judge at every place where the circuit and district court is held, and for various other officials of the United States therein enumerated, a set of private reports known as the Federal Reporter. This Federal Reporter, as most of the gentlemen in this House know, and all lawyers know, is a private set of reports published by a private publishing company, containing what they choose to publish of the decisions of the United States circuit and district courts. There is no other set of reports covering that exact ground. Now, I understand the fact is this, that these publishers for years have presented to the circuit and district judges of the United States a set of these reports as they were issued upon the consideration of reviewing the syllabus which was put on them, so that as a matter of fact the judges have a private set of these reports already. Now, it is proposed to spend $150,000 to buy complete sets of these reports from the beginning. This establishes these private reporters as official reporters of these United States district and circuit courts. We do not seem to have undertaken to follow the plan in the Supreme Court report, nor to make the Supreme Court reporter extend his duties over these other courts, but we are going to place the stamp of official approval upon a set of private reports. This amendment was offered by the gentleman from Illinois, who usually is most careful in the amendments and bills which he proposes and sometimes insists upon accuracy in others. Yet there is nothing in there as to the number of volumes these people may publish and send out, how much their volumes shall contain, nor the size of their volumes. They can send out 10 or 12 just as well as one——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands, of course, it is all subject to appropriations by the Congress.

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly; but after it is authorized by law——

Mr. MANN. Ah, but if they try to fake any volumes on us, there are plenty of men here to watch that. If they try to force a number of volumes that ought not to be published, there will be no appropriation made for them.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman does not mean to say that usual safeguards should be left out of a law because you can put a check on the appropriations to stop it?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the safeguards would be; I do not remember whether I offered the amendment or not.

Mr. BORLAND. I see by the RECORD he did.

Mr. MANN. If I offered the amendment, I offered a bill as an amendment to the bill after discussion, which bill was proposed and reported upon by the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry? Is he referring to an amendment that is substantially the same as Senate bill 179, concerning which all of us received a letter from the Keefe-Davidson Co.?

Mr. BORLAND. I believe that is the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Frankly, I will say to the gentleman, the letter I received rather convinced me of the correctness of the position of this company in complaining of the action of Congress, and I feel that I can say to the gentleman that he need not have any fear on the part of the committee that the conferees will embody in this bill any provision undertaking to give a monopoly to any particular law publishing company, or a provision so loosely drawn as to permit the unnecessary issuing of reports of the decisions of the Federal courts.

Mr. BORLAND. That is the only purpose I had in mind in calling this matter to the attention of the House at this time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will recall the amendment that was offered and reported by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House and that it passed the Senate, and that we inserted in the amendment the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], so that this would not be limited to one company or to one set of reports.

Mr. BORLAND. I am aware of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman calls attention to the amendment I suggested, namely, after the words "Federal Reporter," which was adopted——

Mr. BORLAND. I understand that. Yet, the gentleman will readily see that if we authorize by law the purchase of back volumes of this particular set of books, it is manifest there will be no competition by somebody else, who would have to go to work and get up a complete set of back reports before they could reach the point of competition. That sort of amendment does not cure the situation at all. If the gentleman were proposing to buy reports from now on it would be a different matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would suggest to the gentleman, if he will permit me, that the amendment would permit the Department of Justice at any time, if they became dissatisfied with the Federal Reporter, to substitute another set of reports, which could be continued from the time when the Federal Reporter would be continued.

Mr. BORLAND. We could always repeal this law, of course. But after we have made an expenditure of $150,000 on a particular set of reports up to that time, under what circumstances can a new company compete?

Mr. MANN. The old reports and the new ones have no relationship with each other. The Cooperative Report of the Supreme Court reports is just as good as the old reports, and the new reports have nothing to do with the question of the old reports. No lawyer pays attention to the number of the report, but the time of it.

Mr. BORLAND. It is perfectly true, as the gentleman says, that we can refuse appropriations and adopt another system, but why put into the law a provision so loose that it will require the action of executive officers or action of Congress to correct those particular things? If we design to have a system of reports of the circuit and district courts of the United States, why not provide how those reports shall be gotten up, what they shall contain, how much matter shall be in a particular book, and that the copyright or the matrices shall belong to the Government of the United States, so that reproductions can be made after they are out of print, and so on?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY].

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I dislike exceedingly to stand for any delay in giving to the country this codification. We ought to have the codification, for I think there has been much excellent work done on it. We have waited, however, for this codification a great many years, and, for my own part—and I think I speak for the bar of the section of the country from which I come—we are willing to wait a little while longer for it before taking it at the expense of abolishing the circuit courts of the country.

I do not believe it is wise, Mr. Speaker, to uproot and overturn a judicial system that has been in existence since 1789, and do it without hearings, without discussion, and without understanding by this House of the significance of the act. I have heard it said that the bar of the country favor this resolution. I have to receive the first letter from a member of the bar anywhere in the United States in favor of it. I have received letter after letter from some of the best lawyers in the country protesting against it.

I would like to see stricken from this bill all that part of it that destroys and uproots the circuit courts. I do not know, as I have said heretofore, of any way to do that by amendment, because the change that has been made runs through some 50 sections of the codification. The only way I know of to reach it is to defeat the codification now, and then at the next session of Congress let us have a corrected codification, limited purely and simply to a codification. Let us then insist that any changes in substantive law that are deemed desirable shall be proposed in a separate bill or bills and be considered by themselves before the appropriate committees, where they can be properly understood and dissected and a righteous conclusion reached in reference to them.

I do not know whether it is true or not, but some of the able lawyers that sit at the other end of the Capitol have raised the question that this codification not only abolishes the circuit courts but abolishes also the circuit court judges.

Mr. MANN. It would not be a great loss.

Mr. BRANTLEY. It is a very serious proposition.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman whether in his judgment that is true—whether he is not convinced as a lawyer that it does not do anything of the kind?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I might be able to answer that question, Mr. Speaker, to the satisfaction of my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, or I might not; but whatever my opinion might be after careful consideration, it would be but the opinion of one lawyer in opposition to the opinion of far abler lawyers, should I reach the conclusion suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania. The suggestion presents a grave question, and yet this Congress is proposing to settle it, or it is proposed that this Congress shall settle it, without investigating it, without considering it, and without understanding it.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will.

Mr. PARSONS. Can not that point be covered by a very simple amendment providing that the offices of the circuit court judges be not abolished, inserting same after the first clause of section 274? A very simple amendment would cover it.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It is covered.

Mr. BRANTLEY. You can, by simple amendment, save the circuit court judges, but you can not by that method save the court itself, and it is the abolishment of the circuit court that I object to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman let me make a suggestion?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. We could not save the circuit court clerks, who are responsible for most of the antagonism that exists against this proposition.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield me the time in which to answer him?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that I am informed that, so far as the circuit court clerks are concerned—and my information comes from high authority—that there is no disposition or purpose or intention on the part of the codifiers to abolish them, except perhaps in name, and that they are not in jeopardy. But I scorn the suggestion, Mr. Speaker, that the great bar of this country is actuated in opposing this revolutionary proposal simply by the consideration that they would like to take care of a few circuit court clerks. For my own part, when the American Bar Association, by a solemn resolution, requests this Congress not to do this thing until it can be investigated and understood, I do not propose to dismiss their resolution upon the supposition that the American Bar Association is simply interested in preserving a few offices for a few men.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, neither do I. But when the American Bar Association, after an investigation and examination of this subject, has reported in favor of this exact change, I prefer the opinion of that association, the result of that study, rather than a subsequent request to delay in order that another meeting of that association may have time to study the question.

This matter has been thoroughly discussed and understood in this country for several years past. Speaking of my own personal knowledge of the bar of my city, it has been brought formally before them, and I have received no protest from any of the lawyers of my city or State. This committee has received practically no protest from the bar of America.

Now, it is true that this matter has not been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, but it was considered by a joint committee of the House and the Senate. It was considered by a commission created for the purpose of codifying the laws. It has been considered by the Senate of the United States, and so far there has been no opposition of moment to it. Individual gentlemen have differed with the plan, as the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] has, but this House must not understand that this is some scheme that has been born overnight and has simply the support of the members of this committee that reported it to the House.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BRANTLEY. The gentleman does admit that it changes a system which has been in existence since 1789, and that it has never been considered by a legislative committee of this House.

Mr. SHERLEY. In a sense that is true, and yet it is true that the original plan that created the circuit court of appeals contemplated just that which is embodied here; and if any man can state any logical reason for the existence of this condition, save that it has existed in the past, I have yet to hear it. Why should we have a situation where the average lawyer who goes into a Federal court can not tell whether he is in the district court or the circuit court? The logic of the case is to make the district court an exclusive nisi prius court and make of the circuit court an appellate court.

Mr. PARKER. You leave the trial court with a single judge, and if he gets sick or old, you can not replace him except by getting details from other districts.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is stating a condition that I do not think necessarily exists as the result of this change.

Mr. PARSONS. Did not the House of Representatives in 1891 pass a bill embodying that which we now have in this bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. As to that I have no personal memory.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I understand the time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. How many minutes have I?

The SPEAKER. Tweive minutes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I do not propose to occupy more than five minutes of my time.

It does seem to me, after the extended discussion on the floor of this House respecting this subject, that nothing more need be said about it. I am astonished that the gentleman from Georgia should reiterate statements that have been so conclusively disproved by the facts submitted to this House. The most preposterous suggestion that ever emanated from any body is that which now comes from a segment of the American Bar Association, that we should postpone consideration of this subject until they have had time to examine it.

Why, gentlemen, it has been an acute subject for 12 years. It was introduced upon the floor of the Senate by a bill prepared by the American Bar Association. After the House bill of 1891, providing for the abolition of the circuit court, was so amended by the Senate as to defeat that provision, that association drafted the first bill that ever brought this subject before the country in a separate bill. Nay, more, Mr. Speaker, the man upon whose letter the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] to-day relies in part, Mr. Wetmore, was the man who drew the bill. He was then chairman of the committee on Federal legislation of that body, and he was the man who wrote a letter to Senator Hoar, which covered the ground so effectually that Senator Hoar filed his letter as a report to accompany the bill that the Judiciary Committee of the Senate filed in a favorable recommendation of that bill. I read it to this House a few days ago. The gentleman from Georgia knows what he said in that letter, that he had consulted every prominent Federal judge in the country, that he had consulted all the leading lawyers in the United States whose opinion upon this subject could be obtained, and that the opinion was so absolutely unanimous that it was absurd to consider it an open question. And yet the gentleman comes to-day and attempts to reopen that proposition which has been so effectually closed, and to ask further delay to enable the American Bar Association to examine into the wisdom of this change.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand a vote upon the bill.

The question being taken on suspending the rules and agreeing to the motion of Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, on a division (demanded by Mr. BRANTLEY) there were—ayes 130, noes 11.

Accordingly (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the motion agreed to; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, Mr. PARSONS, and Mr. SHERLEY.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee reported the bill (H. R. 32909) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, which was read a first and second time, and with accompanying papers referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed. (H. Rept. No. 2235.)

Mr. FITZGERALD reserved all points of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I shall call this bill up for consideration to-morrow morning.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I present a unanimous report of the conferees on the river and harbor bill for printing under the rule.

The conference report (No. 2236) and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28632) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 18, 28, 47, 61, 80, 87, 91.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 14, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 62, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72, 73, 77, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 88, 89, 90, 92, 93, 94, 96, 98, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Improving Weymouth Fore River, Mass.: Completing improvement below the Quincy Point Bridge in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 1334, Sixty-first Congress, third session, $140,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Provided, That the project for improvement below said bridge may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be so modified as to allow the widening of the channel of the river at bends wherever considered desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation: Provided further, That no additional work shall be done under this authority which will increase the total cost of the project given in report submitted in House Document No. 441, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the language proposed strike out the words "to the Carolina Beach Pier" and insert in lieu thereof the words: "and the Carolina Beach Pier"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed insert the following between lines 22 and 23, page 15, after the provision for the Coosa River: "The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contract with the Ragland Water Power Co., its successors or assigns, hereinafter designated 'the contracting party,' to complete the dam heretofore partially constructed by the Government at Lock No. 4 on the Coosa River, the work to be done under his supervision and control, and in accordance with the present adopted project and any modification thereof that he may deem proper: Provided, That the contracting party shall furnish all materials, of every character, and pay for all labor required in the construction of said dam, which, upon completion, shall become the property of the United States, free of all costs, claims, or charges of any kind whatsoever: Provided further, That the terms of this act and any stipulation which the Secretary of War may deem necessary to safeguard the interests of navigation and other interests of the United States shall be embodied in any contract entered into as aforesaid. The contracting party shall begin the said work within one year from the approval of this act, and shall complete the same within three years from the date of commencing construction; otherwise the authorization hereby conferred shall be void and the rights hereby conferred shall cease and be determined, the Government reserving the right to commence and finish the work, if deemed advisable, at any time before it is commenced by the contracting party; or, if begun and not carried out in strict conformity to the directions of the Secretary of War, the Government may assume the completion of said work at its option, the cost of such completion to be paid by the contracting party: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall determine from time to time whether the work is being properly done. In consideration of the completion of said dam free of cost to the Government, the contracting party is hereby granted such rights as the Government possesses to use the water power produced by said dam for manufacturing and other industrial purposes for a period of 50 years: Provided, That the plans for the necessary works and structures to utilize said water power shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the right is reserved to the United States to construct, maintain, and operate a forebay and lock for navigation purposes in connection with said dam, and nothing shall be done in the use of the water from said dam or otherwise to interfere with or in any way impede or retard the operation of said lock or the proper and complete navigation of the river at all times, nor in any way to interfere with the use and control of the same by the United States or the maintenance of the water surface above the dam at the established pool level; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prescribe regulations to govern the use of the said water power and the operations of the plant and force employed in connection therewith; and no claim shall be made against the United States for any failure of water power, resulting from any cause whatsoever: Provided further, That the contracting party shall furnish to the United States, free of cost, such electric current as may be necessary for operating the Government lock and lighting its buildings and grounds: And provided further, That the contracting party may have ingress and egress over Government lands in the construction and operation of the plant. The Secretary of War may require the contracting party to execute a bond, with proper securities, before the commencement of the work, in such amount as he may consider necessary, to insure the beginning, prosecution, and completion of the work and compliance with the terms and requirements of this act, and in case of failure to comply with the requirements of said bond the contracting party shall forfeit to the United States the full amount thereof: Provided, That a suitable force of inspectors shall be employed on the work by the Secretary of War, at the expense of the contracting party, to see that the plans and specifications and the terms and requirements of the act and the conditions of the contract are strictly carried out. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the rights and privileges hereby conferred, and the United States shall incur no liability because of the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof: Provided, That to insure compliance with the terms of this contract, or to protect the interests of navigation and other interests of the United States, the Secretary of War shall have power, at any time, to order a suspension of all privileges hereby granted, and a compliance with such order may be enforced by an injunction of the court of the United States exercising jurisdiction in the district in which the work is situated, and proper proceedings to this end shall be instituted by the Attorney General upon request of the Secretary of War. Nothing herein shall be construed as in any way abridging the exclusive jurisdiction and control by the United States of the Coosa River, and of any structure therein, or as repealing or modifying any of the provisions or laws now existing for the protection of navigation. The contracting party, in consideration of the privileges granted hereby, must, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may require, obligate and bind itself, its successors or assigns, to raise the height of said dam at Lock No. 4 3 feet, and shall stop the leaks above Dam No. 4 by which water escapes under such dam, so far as the same can be done, and to keep said leaks stopped so far as it is possible so to do. In consideration of making said improvements, the said contracting party shall have the right to raise said dam during low water to such a height as may be necessary to give it a storage basin above the dam, in order that it may develop and operate a water power: Provided, That the said storage does not interfere with navigation: Provided further, That the said contracting party shall pay all damages incurred by reason of overflowed lands. Beginning with the year 1925, the contracting party shall pay to the United States for the power due to the natural flowage of the river the sum of $1 per 10-hour horsepower per year: Provided, That in case the natural flowage of the river is increased at this point by storage reservoirs above this point, the power company shall have the right to lease, for a period not exceeding the life of this authorization, the increased power due to said storage, and shall pay on all power above that due to natural flowage of the river, as increased by local storage at Dam No. 4, the sum of $1 per year for the first five years, $2 per year for the second five years, and thereafter $3 per year for each 10-hour horsepower sold or used, or in lieu of above payment may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, pay its equitable share toward the construction of said reservoir or reservoirs, such share to be determined by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may readjust such rate of compensation at periods of 10 years;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "appropriated" in the twelfth line of the language proposed and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That no part of the amount herein appropriated or authorized to be appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that the interests of the general public are duly protected in the use of said harbor and that no terminal monopoly will be possible: And provided further, That the title or easements in any land needed in connection with the construction of the dike proposed as a part of this improvement shall be vested in the United States free of cost"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the second paragraph of the language proposed, insert the following:

"Such changes and diversion shall be shown by plans and plats to be prepared by the city of St. Paul which shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers before any work shall be done thereon, and any change therefrom shall be unlawful unless a plan and plat thereof shall have been previously filed with and approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers: Provided, That the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall submit to Congress an estimate of the amount, character, and cost of any work deemed proper to be done by the United States in connection with the improvement herein authorized, the expense connected with the preparation of such estimate to be paid from the appropriation for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors: Provided further, That neither this act nor any action taken thereunder by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall be construed as in any way committing the United States to any expense or obligation without further direction of Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the beginning of the fifth line of the language proposed, omit the words "Siuslaw River, Oregon," and the colon immediately following and insert a quotation mark; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "New York Harbor, New York, with a view to securing increased width and depth of water from a point at or near Southwest Spit, northwest of Sandy Hook, New Jersey, through Lower New York Bay, Raritan Bay, and the channel between New Jersey and Staten Island, New York, to the channel in Upper New York Bay"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Creek" insert the words "Craven County"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the fourth line of the language proposed, strike out the word "Ceia" and insert the word "Ceiga"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Bayou Lafourche, La., with a view to securing a depth of 20 feet at its mouth"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Mermentau River, La., with a view to the construction of a lock and dam to maintain the level of Grand Lake and the inland waterways of Louisiana"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "Guadeloupe" insert the word "Guadalupe"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the comma after the word "Texas" and all the language following, and insert a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the words proposed to be inserted; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 86: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the words "a harbor of refuge at that point" insert the words "increased harbor facilities"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "Spoon" insert the word "Apoon"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 97: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"SEC. 4. That so much of section 7 of the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1909, as provides that the term of the National Waterways Commission shall expire on March 4, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the said commission, with its present membership and as now constituted, shall be continued until November 4, 1911, with the powers and duties prescribed in said act. And the said commission shall make a final report to Congress and file the same with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives not later than November 4, 1911. Said commission is also authorized to investigate and report upon the advisability and feasibility of proposed artificial waterways and upon proposed plans for the impounding of flood waters in rivers by reservoirs or otherwise, including the following: First, the construction by the United States of the proposed canal from the Ohio River at a point near Pittsburg to Lake Erie, the expense thereof being borne by local interests affected; second, the proposed canal from Lake Erie, by way of the Maumee River and Fort Wayne, or other direct and feasible route, to the southerly end of Lake Michigan; and, third, the proposed canal to connect the Anacostia River at some point near the District of Columbia boundary line with Chesapeake Bay or some tributary thereof. For the obtaining of the necessary engineering data the commission is authorized to call upon the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and said corps shall furnish said data upon the request of the commission, and the expense of obtaining the same shall be paid from the appropriation made by said act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

24. Illinois and Mississippi Canal, Ill.	125,000
26. Reservoirs at headwaters of the Mississippi River	10,000
29. Humboldt Bay, Cal.	170,000
31. Pinole Shoal, San Pablo Bay, Cal.	400,000
32. Columbia and Lower Willamette Rivers below Portland, Oreg.	200,000
35. Bellingham Harbor, Wash.	25,000
36. Olympia Harbor, Wash.	43,000
37. Willapa River and Harbor, Wash.	50,000
39. Examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors	50,000
Total	1,960,481

The continuing contract authorizations, amounting to $3,587,232, are made by the following items:

Amendment No.—
3. Connecticut River below Hartford, Conn.	$100,000
9. St. Johns River, Fla., between Jacksonville and the ocean	500,000
13. Aransas Pass, Tex.	250,000
14. Channel to Beaumont and Orange, Tex.	371,500
22. South Haven Harbor, Mich.	198,000
27. Missouri River, between Kansas City and the mouth	600,000
29. Humboldt Bay, Cal.	717,400
31. Pinole Shoal, San Pablo Bay, Cal.	360,000
33. Columbia and Lower Willamette Rivers, below Portland, Oreg.	320,000
35. Bellingham Bay, Wash.	52,250
37. Willapa River and Harbor, Wash.	118,132
Total	3,587,232

To the list of surveys contained in the bill as it passed the House the Senate made 57 amendments, of which 39 were agreed to by the House conferees, as follows:

40. Rockland Harbor, Me.
41. Kennebec River, Me.
42. Bluehill Inner Harbor, Me.
43. Winter Harbor, Me.
44. Carvers Harbor, Vinalhaven, Me.
45. Providence River and Harbor, R. I.
46. New York Harbor, N. Y., channel to the navy yard.
48. For deepwater connection with the New York State barge canal at North Tonawanda, N. Y.
49. Fort Pond Bay, N. Y.
51. Delaware River, at Morrisville, Pa.
52. Allegheny River, Pa.
53. Leipsic River, Del.
54. Appoquinimink River, Del.
55. Mispillion River, Del.
56. Murderkill River, Del.
57. Little River, Del.
59. Cape Charles City Harbor, Va.
60. Western Branch of Elizabeth River, Va.
62. Potomac River at Colonial Beach, Va.
63. Pamlico River, N. C.
64. Northeast Cape Fear River, N. C.
66. Winyaw Bay, S. C.
67. Darien Harbor and Doboy Bar, Ga.
68. Tugaloo River, Ga. and S. C.
70. St. Johns River at Jacksonville, Fla.
72. Channel between St. Johns River, Fla., and Cumberland Sound, Ga. and Fla.
73. St. Petersburg Harbor, Fla.
77. Colorado River, Tex.
79. Green River, Ky., at Lock 3.
81. Cuyahoga River, Cleveland, Ohio.
82. White Lake Harbor, Mich.
83. Pentwater Harbor, Mich.
84. St. Joseph Harbor, Mich.
88. Crescent City Harbor, Cal.
89. Fremont Channel and McLeoad Lake arms of Stockton Channel, San Joaquin River, Cal.
90. Mokelumne River, Cal.
92. Nehalem Bar and entrance to Nehalem Bay, Oreg.
93. Oregon Slough branch of Columbia River, Oreg.
96. San Juan Harbor, P. R.

Verbal amendments to the following survey items in the House bill were also agreed to:

58. Harbor at Newport News, Va.
94. Yaquina River, Oreg.

The following Senate amendments involving surveys were concurred in after being modified:

50. New York Harbor, N. Y., for increased width and depth in channel between upper and lower bays through Raritan Bay and the channel between Staten Island and New Jersey.
65. Swift Creek, Craven County, N. C.
69. Clearwater Harbor, Fla.
74. Bayou Lafourche, La.
75. Mermentau River, La.
76. Guadalupe River, Tex.
78. Mouth of the Brazos River, Tex.
86. Lake of the Woods, at or near Arnesen, Minn.
95. Apoon mouth of Yukon River, Alaska.

The Senate receded from the following amendments involving surveys:

47. Gowanus Bay, N. Y.
61. Archers Hope River, Va.
80. Cimarron River, Okla.
85. Manitowoc Harbor, Wis.
87. Jordan River, Utah.
91. San Rafael Creek, Cal.

The following miscellaneous amendments were agreed to:

4. Buffalo Harbor, N. Y. This amendment authorizes the application of $15,000 from the appropriation now on hand and available for work of maintenance for the completion of Stony Point Breakwater.

5. Passaic River, N. J. This amendment authorizes the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to modify the existing project for this river so as to allow of the widening of the channel at the bends where considered desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation, subject to the proviso that the estimated cost of completing the project shall not be increased, and the House receded from its objection thereto.

7. Cape Fear River below Wilmington, N. C. This amendment permits the expenditure of $1,000 for increasing the depth of the channel between the main channel of the river and the Carolina Beach Pier, and the House receded from its objection thereto.

10. Dam No. 4, Coosa River, Ala. This amendment authorizes the Secretary of War to permit certain local interests to camplete the dam and to use the power created by said dam upon certain conditions involving payment at specified rates for the power so used. This authority was conferred by a special act passed by Congress and approved under date of June 4, 1906, the provisions of which act have since expired by limitation. After amendment, so as to more adequately protect the interests of the United States, the House conferees receded from its disagreement to the amendment and concurred therein.

12. Inland waterway between Franklin and Mermentau, La. This amendment authorizes the Secretary of War to make such changes in the route of this section of this waterway as may be recommended by the Chief of Engineers, subject to the condition that the necessary right of way involved in any such change shall be secured to the United States free of cost. It appearing that this amendment was in the interest of the improvement heretofore authorized, the House receded from its disagreement.

21. Harbor at Holland, Mich. Without increasing the appropriation for maintenance of improvement at this locality, the Senate inserted language which requires that any work of maintenance deemed necessary in the inner harbor should be done, and the House receded from its objection to this amendment.

25. St. Paul Harbor, Minn. This amendment authorizes the city of St. Paul to make provision for the improvement at its own expense of the Mississippi River at that point, including suitable levees, transportation terminals, and landing places for shipping, and also authorizes an estimate to be submitted by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers of such work as may be deemed proper for the United States to do in connection therewith, but it is also specified that this amendment should not be construed as in any way committing the United States to any expense or obligation without the further action and direction of Congress.

34. Siuslaw River, Oreg. This amendment authorizes the Secretary of War to accept certain work being done by local interests under the agreement contemplated in the item of appropriation carried by the river and harbor act of 1910. With a slight verbal amendment, not affecting the import of the original language proposed, the House receded from its disagreement.

38. Hilo Harbor, Hawaii. This amendment contemplates a resurvey of the harbor with a view to determining whether a modification of the adopted project may not be desirable. In the opinion of your conferees such resurvey should be made, and they therefore receded from their disagreement to the amendment proposed.

97. National Waterways Commission. This amendment, as modified, extends the life of the commission to November 4, 1911, to enable it to complete certain work already undertaken and to make a final report as contemplated by existing law.

98. Corps of Engineers. This amendment, increasing the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, has been recommended by the War Department, approved by the President, and passed by the House of Representatives as a separate measure. It adds 5 colonels, 6 lieutenant colonels, 19 majors, 17 captains, and 13 first lieutenants. This increase is absolutely essential for the prosecution of the extensive works of river and harbor improvement heretofore authorized and in contemplation.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ORGANIZED MILITIA.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 28436) to further increase the efficiency of the Organized Militia, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The Clerk read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the National Militia Board may prescribe the commissioned officers of the Organized Militia of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia shall receive in compensation for their services, other than at annual encampments or in case of riot, insurrection, or invasion, certain percentages of the annual rate of pay for officers of like grade in the Army of the United States as is now established by law, as follows: All officers below the grade of general officers, including officers of the Medical Corps serving with troops, 15 per cent, and an additional 5 per cent to the commanding officers of all companies, troops, and batteries; general officers and officers of staff departments serving with general officers, 5 per cent: Provided, That each such officer shall have performed at least 75 per cent of the duties prescribed by statutes or in orders by the commander in chief of his State or Territory or the commanding general of the Organized Militia of the District of Columbia, excepting for services hereinbefore excluded: Provided further, That no officer shall be entitled to such compensation until he shall have passed such examination as shall be prescribed for officers of that grade by the Secretary of War and the National Militia Board.

SEC. 2. That under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the National Militia Board shall prescribe each enlisted man of the Organized Militia of each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia shall receive in compensation for his services, other than at annual encampments or in case of riot, insurrection, or invasion, 25 per cent of the annual rate of pay for enlisted men of like grade in the Army of the United States as is now established by law for attendance upon 48 drills or equivalent military duty prescribed by statutes or in orders by the commander in chief of his State or Territory or the commanding general of the District of Columbia during any one year, or a proportionate amount for attendance upon any number of drills or equivalent military duty not less than 20: Provided, That no compensation shall be paid for attendance at less that 20 such drills or equivalent military duty: Provided further, That the compensation provided for herein shall be computed and paid semiannually as proportioned above: And provided further, That no compensation hereunder shall be paid to any enlisted man, except noncombatants, in the first year of his enlistment unless and until he shall have made a record score with the prescribed weapon of his arm of the service, nor thereafter unless and until he shall have fired the prescribed course or such equivalent as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War and the National Militia Board.

SEC. 3. That all disbursements under the provisions of the preceding sections shall be made on or before the 15th day of June and December of each year.

SEC. 4. That stoppage may be made against the compensation payable to any officer or enlisted man hereunder to meet the cost of public property lost or destroyed by and chargeable to such officer or enlisted man.

SEC. 5. That all moneys required to meet the disbursements provided for in this act shall be payable out of any public moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no money appropriated under the provisions of this act shall be paid to be paid to any person who has not take the oath of allegiance to the standards prescribed by the Secretary of War, nor shall any such money be paid to any person who has not taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, including an agreement to render military service to the United States during any period for which he may be called into such service, providing such period shall not exceed two years; and any officer or enlisted man of the militia who, having received pay under the provisions of this act, neglects or refuses, under any pretext whatsoever, to present himself for muster when called into the service of the United States, shall be subject to trial on the charge of desertion by any court-martial constituted as now provided by law for militia in the service of the United States, and upon conviction shall be punished as such court-martial may direct: And provided further, That nothing in this act, or in any other act, shall be construed to require the United States, in time of war, to accept the services of any militia organization or of any person belonging to such organization unless such organization or person has been regularly inspected, reported fit for military service according to the standard prescribed by the Secretary of War, and so carried upon the rolls of the Adjutant General of the Army.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands a second, and under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arkansas 20 minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the so-called militia pay bill. It provides in the first section that the officers of the militia shall receive as compensation for their services certain percentages of the annual rate of pay for officers of a like grade in the Army of the United States; that all officers below the grade of general officers, including officers of the Medical Corps, 15 per cent, and an additional 5 per cent to the commanding officers of all companies, troops, and batteries; general officers and officers of the staff department, 5 per cent. That is section 1. In section 2 it provides that the enlisted men shall receive a compensation of 25 per cent of the annual rate of pay for enlisted men of a like grade in the Army of the United States, provided they attend 48 drills or the equivalent of military duty during the year. If they do less than 20, they will not get any. If they do more, they will get a like proportion.

The War Department has suggested an amendment, which is printed on page 4 of the bill. I will state for the benefit of Members that I have been unable to get the Committee on the Militia together since the bill was reported, but I have prepared certain amendments which I will try to explain, and those of you who have the bill will understand readily what they are.

On page 1, line 10, I strike out the words "or may be hereafter," so that it will read, "certain percentages of the annual rate of pay for officers of like grade in the Army of the United States as is now established by law."

And I make a like change on page 2, line 22, so that the pay will not change automatically by the change of pay of the Regular Army.

Then I have made an amendment to the amendment printed on page 4, drafted by the War Department, which I think is very important, inserting in line 14, after the word "trial," the words "on the charge of desertion," and then I strike out all of line 16 after the word "conviction." This, I think, will obviate any objection that has been suggested.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would the gentleman accept an amendment taking out the first three lines in section 5, which make a permanent annual appropriation, and providing that all money required to meet the disbursements provided for in this act shall be estimated for annually?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I think so. I will yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD], and ask him—he is a member of the committee—would he be willing to do that in case the bill passes?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I am going to resist the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What is meant by the phrase about an officer performing at least 75 per cent of the duties prescribed by statute? How can you measure the performance of duties by percentages?

Mr. STEENERSON. The War Department and the militia board have a way of counting the amount of services rendered, either by drills or marksmanship—shooting at a range—so that its counts up to a maximum.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does it mean 75 per cent of efficiency or 75 per cent of attendance upon duties?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, it would mean both. You would have efficiency and you would also have to show you did the work.

Mr. SHERLEY. But how can that be measured?

Mr. STEENERSON. They say it can.

Mr. SHERLEY. How can they measure a man's regular performance of duty in percentages? It seems to me impossible.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman will permit, I think the War Department and the militia board have a standard of excellence, a prescribed regulation, whereby they take into account several things measuring the percentage of performance of duties.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, if they have such a scheme it is probably workable.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand they have.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman tell me what is meant by the phrase on line 13, "until he shall fire the prescribed course?" Does it mean fire the prescribed score?

Mr. STEENERSON. That means to fire the prescribed amount.

Mr. OLCOTT. I really am somewhat hazy as to what that phrase means.

Mr. DALZELL. That means target practice.

Mr. STEENERSON. They prescribe a course of firing for rifle practice.

Mr. DALZELL. Target practice.

Mr. WEEKS. The course prescribed for firing at rifle practice would be to attain some percentage. That is to say, a man might qualify as a marksman or a sharpshooter. It must necessarily mean that he must attain some kind of standard.

Mr. OLCOTT. I meant that he shall have made the prescribed firing-record score. I do not want to be captious about it, because I want to see this bill go through, but I really do not know what that means.

Mr. TILSON. It is evident the bill could not mean that a man must keep up the standard of a sharpshooter, for instance, which very few men can attain, but there are a number of different grades through which a man may pass, and he can not have passed through this course, as I understand it, until he shall have passed the lowest one of those standards.

Mr. OLCOTT. Then I do not think the word "fire" ought to be in there.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, certainly; he has to fire so many shots before he shall have passed that course.

Mr. WEEKS. Why should a man fire so many shots if he could qualify as a sharpshooter the first time he went to the range?

Mr. KEIFER. He can not do that under the prescribed rules.

Mr. TILSON. In order to be a sharpshooter he must fire so many shots and maintain a certain percentage of hits, a certain number of points on a certain well-defined scale.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. On page 4, line 22, appear the words "regularly inspected, reported fit for military service," and so forth. Does that contemplate that a physical examination will have to be made such as is prescribed for the Regular Army?

Mr. STEENERSON. It says, "According to the standard prescribed by the Secretary of War."

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does that mean he will have to undergo a physical examination such as required for recruits for the Regular Army?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, I should think so.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that that applies to a time of war.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; it does.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Now, under the law as it is written to-day and passed a few years ago guardsmen were exempted from a physical examination, and I think they ought to be subjected to it, because they can be called out in time of war, and if they are called out and have not been subjected to a physical examination the gentleman knows, from the experience we have had in the past 40 years, that it will cost this Nation a great many million dollars for pensions for ailments which were not contracted in the service and for maladies that existed prior to the enlistment.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman from Minnesota permit me to interrupt the gentleman from Mississippi and ask him a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. All right.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi undertake to say that in the National Guard of any State of this Nation that the men are admitted without a physical examination?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I say that under the law of the United States they are not subject to a physical examination; they are especially exempted, and that ought not to be the law; but if it is the law and it remains the law and they are called out, as they may be called, it will cost this Government millions upon millions of dollars for pensions for men who will claim pensions by reason of some physical defects that they had before they ever were called into the Army.

Mr. TILSON. If I may be permitted a moment, I desire to say to the gentleman that the State in which I live has a very rigid requirement in regard to physical examinations, and substantially he receives the same as that required in the Regular Army.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Well, we have nothing at all in this bill on the subject, and I think it ought not to be dependent alone upon the States to make these regulations.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what he estimates the cost of this bill will be to the country annually?

Mr. STEENERSON. The lowest estimate is $4,000,000 per annum, but it is hoped, however, that it will reach $8,000,000 a year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is "hoped" it will reach $8,000,000?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; because that would indicate that the 120,000 men and officers of the militia had performed the services required and would be in a very efficient state, ready for war, and show that all of them in doing this service had earned the highest amount.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. I will say to the gentleman I am troubled about this bill, because I can not quite understand it. Officers of the Army now get a flat pay, and they get 10 per cent increase for every 10 years of service, so that it goes to 40 per cent more. I am not sure here in regard to the flat pay; it does not say flat pay.

Mr. STEENERSON. This is duly graded.

Mr. PARKER. I am speaking of the same thing. Privates also receive various amounts for the number of terms they enlist and for their proficiency in the service, and I see that they shall receive 25 per cent of the annual rate of pay for enlisted men of like grade in the Regular Army. I do not know any flat pay established for men in the Regular Army for attendance—for instance, on 48 drills—nor do I understand what it means by 25 per cent of the whole annual pay. I do not understand what becomes of the allowance for food; I do not know what becomes of their increase for length of service.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is no allowance for anything except for service.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. What I wanted to know was, how do you expect to put in the amendments that you suggested a moment ago under your motion?

Mr. STEENERSON. I have drafted them as a part of my motion and submitted it to the Speaker.

Mr. KEIFER. You mean your motion does not cover the amendment?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; I have reduced them to writing and sent them to the desk as part of my motion.

Mr. KEIFER. They are not to be voted on separately, but as a part of the bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. Now, I will say to the gentleman further, that this bill was prepared by a committee representing the National Guard and it was very carefully looked into. They came before the Committee on the Militia and we had extended hearings, and we also heard representatives of the War Department. We have estimates of the exact amount that each officer and private would receive under the bill, but I do not know that I will take up the time of the committee by reading those estimates unless there is some one who desires to know the specific amount.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the gentleman to say that those who were without hope thought that this bill would tax the Treasury about $4,000,000?

Mr. STEENERSON. Without hope?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; those who were without hope.

Mr. STEENERSON. I said it was hoped that the militia would earn the maximum amount estimated, which would be $8,000,000, because that would indicate that it had done the work and was in as efficient a state, practically, as the Regular Army would be.

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad, then, that I did not understand the gentleman correctly, because I would be very sorry to have any of those people who were without hope disappointed.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I did not use any such word at all. The gentleman is disturbed entirely without cause.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, I just want to state, in reply to an interrogatory made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] in reference to the pay that this bill prescribes, that it shall be under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the National Militia Board shall prescribe. The Secretary of War is thoroughly conversant with all the matters of pay connected with the Army, and it is according to instruction from him.

Mr. PARKER. He can not by his regulations reduce the amount of pay under this act. It says they shall receive 25 per cent of the pay, and the pay rises from year to year as the man stays in.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is the pay of the grade. I desire to say further that the reason for this legislation is in the fact that since the enactment of the Dick law in 1903, which made the discipline and organization of the militia the same as that for the Regular Army, a great deal more work has been required of the National Guard than formerly; that the requirements have become so onerous that it is felt we can not maintain the guard in its present strength unless we do allow them some pay for this work. As the law now is, they are only paid when called into the service of the United States in case of war, or riot, or insurrection, and also when they are called out for camps of instruction.

But for the work that is done the balance of the year there is no compensation. And in many cases they are put to considerable expense, and we believe it is but just and fair that these young men throughout the country who are volunteering into the National Guard and rendering this service and preparing themselves for eventual war should be in part compensated by the very small compensation that is called for.

Mr. COLE. Is there any provision in this bill providing that men in the employ of the National Government shall not be entitled to the compensation provided for in this bill? It occurs to me there ought to be some such provision as that.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield? I would like to inquire——

Mr. STEENERSON. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has two minutes remaining.

Mr. STEENERSON. I decline to yield, then. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be called down when I have consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this bill, and I desire to state some of my objections to it. In the first place, I desire to state that I believe in maintaining an Organized Militia in the different States of this Union. In the early history of this country our defense rested largely upon such organizations, but at the same time I desire to maintain such organizations in the control and power of the States and independent of the control of the War Department of the Federal Government.

First, I desire to state my objections to this bill on account of its cost to the Government. We hear a great clamor for economy by the administration and by Members of Congress. We are already, under existing law, paying from the Federal Treasury $4,000,000 a year to the different militia organizations of the several States, but this bill provides for paying the men who serve in the militia organization for attendance and practice. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] says that the lowest estimate is $4,000,000. That is based on the theory that half of the men will not come up to the standard. But I contend that the most reasonable estimate under this bill is that it will cost $8,000,000 in addition to the $4,000,000 that we are already paying to the Organized Militia of the States.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman tell us for what purposes the $4,000,000 is now paid as authorized by law?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. It is paid for maintaining the organizations in the States. Part of it is paid out for equipment and uniforms. Part of it is for maneuvers and drills. I could not go into the details as to how the fund is distributed, but it is expended for the purpose of the training and development of the militia organizations and to bring the Organized Militia up to the standard of the Regular Army.

Mr. COLE. Does any part of it go to the compensation of enlisted men?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Not unless they are engaged in joint maneuvers or something of that kind.

Now, the gentleman from Minnesota says that the reason for the demand for this bill is that under the Dick law, heretofore passed by Congress, so many requirements are imposed upon the National Guard that the men are no longer willing to continue in the work unless we give them some compensation. They ask in this bill a compensation of one-fourth that of soldiers of the Regular Army for the enlisted men, and then the officers are to be paid according to their rank, and so forth. But the gentleman fails to see or to understand that if we pass this bill we put upon the Organized Militia of the different States much more arduous duties than we now impose under the existing law, and according to his own reasoning, it will be only a short time until they will be contending that inasmuch as they are required to undergo all the hardships and submit to all the exacting regulations of the Regular Army, they therefore should have the same pay as the Regular Army, and under the guise of a National Guard we shall have a great standing army in the United States.

Now, another objection, and a more serious objection than the question of economy or the amount of money involved, is this: I believe in maintaining the autonomy of the States. I believe in observing the Constitution of the United States. I believe in time of peace in the States maintaining their own militia organizations for their own purposes, and then, in case of war, under the Constitution, I believe in the right of the President to call them into the service of the United States.

But what does this bill provide? Contained in its provisions is an attempted merger of the National Guard and the Regular Army. If you will take up the different sections of the bill here, you will find that everything that is done under the provisions of this bill must be done as the Secretary of War and the national militia board shall prescribe, and all through it you will find such phrases as this: "Under the regulations of the Secretary of War and the national militia board." Follow section after section and you will find the words "under the regulations of the Secretary of War and the national militia board," thereby giving the Secretary of War control over these regulations, or, at least, giving him the same control that the militia board will have. And the result will be that this militia organization will be subjected to all the requirements of the Regular Army, and these two forces will be completely merged.

But what more? The bill, in my judgment, is in far worse form than it was when it was introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] by request. That was a bill that was prepared by the National Guard organization of the United States; but when it was submitted to the War Department the Secretary of War offered an amendment, and the committee have adopted that amendment. That amendment is embodied in section 5, and I want to call your special attention to it:

SEC. 5. That all moneys required to meet the disbursements provided for in this act shall be payable out of any public moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Under existing law this money is apportioned and turned over to the authorities of the States, to be paid by the States.

Section 5 contains this further provision:

Provided, That no money appropriated under the provisions of this act shall be paid to any person who is not suited to the military service according to the standards prescribed by the Secretary of War, nor shall any such money be paid to any person who has not taken the oath of allegiance to the United States, including an agreement to render military service to the United States during any period for which he may be called into such service, providing such period shall not exceed two years.

Have you any such requirement as to enlisted men in the United States Army? Here is a proposition, that if these militia organizations receive pay from the Federal Government the individual enlisted man shall take an oath that he will serve during the continuance of a war, provided it does not continue over two years, ignoring the question of enlistment, compelling him to take an oath in advance that, notwithstanding his period of enlistment may have expired in the meantime, he will serve for at least two years independent of his enlistment. Have you any such regulation as to the men who enlist in the Regular Army? I never heard of it. It is an injustice to the enlisted men in the Organized Militia to put any such harsh provision into the Federal statutes. Yet herein it is proposed to make such requirement a part of the law, and without it the War Department would not indorse the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the money appropriated under this act is apportioned among the States and then paid over to the States?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. No; I said that the money apportioned under the existing law is apportioned to the States. But one of my objections to this bill is that that provision is destroyed in this bill, and the money is paid directly from the Treasury of the United States, thereby merging the two forces in one, so that a man who serves in the National Guard and receives pay gets his pay at the War Department just as an enlisted man in the Regular Army receives his pay.

Mr. TILSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman think that it would be right, after a man had enlisted for three years and the Government had paid him for two years and 10 months and had him properly drilled for service, if then there should come up a war that he should be allowed to get out of it after two months' service, his term of enlistment having expired?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I will answer that question by asking another. Does not the regular soldier have a right to quit at the end of his enlistment? Why should there be a requirement upon the militiaman that is not upon the regular soldier? The regular soldier receives pay, and full pay, from the Government.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. It purports to make more efficient the National Guard by providing pay for their services during time of peace. It is assumed that it is necessary to offer some financial inducement to the men who enter the guard in order to obtain from them the services prescribed by their own States in the performance of their duties in the guard.

This bill provides that the private shall receive 25 per cent of the pay of an enlisted man in the Army, provided he completes 48 drills in one year. The pay of an enlisted man in the Army is $15 per month, and his annual pay is $180. Under the operation of this bill it will be necessary for him to attend 48 drills, or the equivalent military duty prescribed by statute or orders, in order to receive the sum of $45 annually for his services. Some men may imagine that will induce men to enter the National Guard in the States, but anyone familiar with the guard knows that it is preposterous to so assert.

The most peculiar thing about the bill and report is that while there is no estimate of the amount of money required to carry out the provisions of the bill, a permanent annual appropriation is made by the terms of the act of all the money necessary. From the information I have been able to obtain from those somewhat familiar with the subject, I am inclined to conclude that it fastens a permanent annual appropriation of $6,000,000 a year upon the Federal Government upon the pretense that some inducement will be offered to men to enlist in the National Guard.

The truth of it is this bill will be of some financial benefit to the officers of the National Guard, but none whatever to the men of the guard.

Mr. Speaker, the permanent annual appropriations of the Government aggregate about $131,000,000 annually, and it has been the constant effort of those who have given any attention to our financial operations to repeal as fast as possible these permanent appropriations, so that Congress might know what money is being expended and exercise some supervision over it. And if for no other reason I should oppose the bill on this ground alone.

But there is another reason, Mr. Speaker. The real object of this bill is to devise a system by which the men in the National Guard may be coerced into signing the contract mentioned by others in this discussion to agree to serve in case of necessity for a period of two years in the service of the Federal Government. Seldom, if ever, in the history of the country have the men who have been in the militia or the National Guard—have all members of the organizations—enlisted at the time of the war. Many good reasons exist that they should not do so, but this bill is so framed that under its provisions men will be coerced to sign this agreement when they enter the guard on the pretense that they are to receive some financial benefit.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have only five minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection to the bill if section 5 was amended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will not. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that since this bill proposes to pay the men in the guard not to exceed $45 a year for services, that that would not be an inducement to engage in the arduous duties now imposed under the Federal law. No State in the Nation is unable to pay such compensation to the men in the guard if it be deemed necessary or desirable to make such payment. But the enactment of this bill will result in the augmentation of the organization existing in the United States for the purpose of extorting money from the Federal Government for services which should be paid for by the various States. Pass this bill and let members of the National Guard sign that agreement and receive 25 per cent of the pay of the enlisted men of the Army, and the demand will shortly be irresistible to give them 100 per cent of the pay of enlisted men, and from a permanent charge of $6,000,000 a year it will speedily grow to a permanent charge of $25,000,000 a year, with no resulting benefits to the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the title of this bill should read, "A bill to further increase the efficiency of the Army for the more successful lobbying in the interest of increasing appropriations for that organization." [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I have served in this House for a number of years. I have frequently observed in recent years the growth of the influence and power of the officers of the Army of the United States in their endeavor to secure increased appropriations and increased compensation. It has been under the influence of that organization and of the officers of the Navy that our expenditures in preparation for war have more than tripled in the last decade. Only a few days ago I called attention to the fact that during the last 10 years we had expended in preparation for war $2,192,000,000, or within about $400,000,000 of the bonded debt of the United States at the close of the Civil War.

That included the permanent appropriation for the Militia. This rapid increase in appropriations for preparation for war has been due more to the increased influence and activities on the part of Army and Navy officers than to any other cause that can be assigned.

Mr. Speaker, it is now proposed to add to the influence of these officers the influence of a military organization more powerful, because it will include the rank and file as well as the officers of an organization that numbers anywhere from 150,000 to 200,000 men. An organization whose influence is not confined to Washington, but extends throughout the United States. An organization whose influence will be used for the purpose of aiding the officers of the Regular Army to still further increase their appropriations in the future for war expenditures. The officers of the Army are comparatively few in number. Their influence, the potential, is exerted largely through social channels in the District of Columbia and in the communities in which they are temporarily located.

The rank and file of the Regular Army exerts no influence whatever, because it has no fixed status so far as residence is concerned, but when you have anywhere from one to three regiments in every congressional district, composed of active young men, many of whom are influential politicians, working with the officers of the Regular Army for increased appropriations, that influence will be absolutely invincible, and they will be able to secure all the money their voracious appetites for war regalia, power, and influence may demand. The militia to-day is receiving a permanent appropriation of $4,000,000 a year. It is not 10 years ago, Mr. Speaker, that the permanent appropriation for the militia was less than a million dollars. We increased it to $2,000,000, and then just as soon as the Dick bill passed, which amalgamated the Organized Militia of the United States with the Regular Army and created a Militia

Division in the War Department here at the seat of government, the influence of that organization was sufficiently strong to bring about the enactment of a law giving them two million more of a permanent annual appropriation, making the total of their permanent annual appropriation $4,000,000.

Now, you propose to pay direct to the members of the militia, and as a part of the standing Army of the United States, as compensation for their services in the Organized Militia 25 per cent of the pay of the enlisted men of the Army. I seriously doubt, Mr. Speaker, our constitutional right to do that, because we can not under the Constitution appropriate for the Army for more than two years at a time. But notwithstanding this constitutional provision, it is proposed to fasten perpetually on the Federal Treasury an appropriation for the Army or that part of it known as the militia of at least $8,000,000 a year. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, when you substitute dollars for patriotism and enthusiasm among the young men who constitute our militia organization you have destroyed that organization or laid the foundation for a standing army at such a high rate of compensation as will bankrupt the Treasury in order to maintain it. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, that is not the first time that we have heard the cry of militarism on the part of my colleague from Minnesota; but I think he is on the wrong track, so far as that complaint in this case is concerned. Militarism is the giving of undue prominence to military training and military glory. The proposed expenditures obviate the necessity for increasing the Regular Army. It is, in my opinion, the greatest measure of economy that has ever been brought into this House, because it makes a further increase of the Regular Army unnecessary by increasing the efficiency of and giving encouragement to the citizen soldiery of the people in every State in the Union. I am tired of hearing this claim that there is undue pressure for appropriations exerted on the part of the Army. The Army has no vote. We give them what we think wise and proper. We have not been any more liberal in providing for the Army than for any other branch of the Government service. The existing appropriations alluded to are not for the pay of the National Guard. In the appropriation of $4,000,000 there is $2,000,000 allotted to the States, and the other $2,000,000 are for ammunition, for guns, for clothing, for uniforms. Does my colleague contend that the National Guard should pay for their uniforms and for the powder it burns in target practice? Certainly not; and that is what those $2,000,000 are for. I contend that this appropriation, whether it will amount to $4,000,000 or $8,000,000, is a measure of economy, because it will give a full return in the shape of a suitable and proper preparation for war. The man is not a wise statesman who desires to neglect this preparation. We have only 20,000 soldiers of the Regular Army in the United States. The rest of them are scattered throughout the globe. We are a world power, and we have our soldiers in the Philippines, in Porto Rico, in Alaska, and in the Canal Zone, so that we have but a handful left. It is wise and proper to make this appropriation for the National Guard in order that they may to a greater extent than heretofore prepare themselves for war.

The efficiency of the National Guard since the legislation of 1903 and 1908 is recognized by the War Department and by all familiar with military matters in the country. To achieve this degree of training and efficiency has cost both officers and men a great deal of labor and some actual outlay of money over and above what they have received under existing law. The national guardsman of to-day is a man who voluntarily enters the service in order to obtain military training and instruction, so that he can more effectually serve his country in case of war. This training is no holiday affair, but involves actual work. When he enlists now he offers not only his services but his life for his country. This compensation of $48 a year is no inducement to enter the service, but will reimburse him for the extra outlay he will incur on account of the service.

Our fathers inherited a dread and hatred to a standing army, for they feared that it might develop into a military despotism. Although the advance in civilization has, it is believed, rendered such fears at this time groundless, yet we find that this fear of militarism still lingers in some quarters and accounts for this hostility and prejudice that is sometimes met with even to absolutely necessary and proper military preparation such as the development of the efficiency of the militia. Now, why this hostility? Why this vague and unreasonable fear? Is it because military organization in its very nature is the embodiment of despotism and the antithesis of individual liberty?

The organization of an army is the exemplification of despotism. It has its different ranks and orders of superiority distasteful to the ordinary man. The enlisted man is a thing—a tool—to his next in authority; so is the company to the captain, and so on to the one supreme head—the general or commander in chief. It is an organization that is antagonistic to liberty in the individual—it is hostile to freedom. It is an easy step to conclude from this, in times of peace especially, that the less we have of this the better; that it is liable in the future to invade civil government and to create rank, caste, and aristocracy—hostile to democracy, hostile to the principles of individual liberty and equality upon which our Government is founded. In view of the lessons of history it must be admitted that these fears are not without reason, and that in many instances where people have been organized for military purposes, this organization has invaded civil society and formed governments upon the same plan—and despotism has resulted. In fact, sociology teaches that this tendency of the militant type of organization to invade civil government has been almost universal. But notwithstanding all this I do not think this can ever be a real danger in this country, for the reason that we have a greater general intelligence and advance in civilization than has ever existed before, and our democratic institutions are too well grounded in the life and affections of our people to be supplanted by militarism in any form. It has always been one of our cardinal principles of government that the military must always be subordinate to the civil power, except in the theater of actual war. Yet in order for any society to survive, it must at any time be able to organize in a militant form. If it ever loses this power its disruption is inevitable. An industrial society, organized upon democratic principles, for the benefit of individual liberty, is best for the advancement of civilization, but if such a society should become incapable of assuming, so far as necessary, the militant type of organization it will be liable to destruction whenever it comes in contact with a people so organized or capable of such an organization.

In order, therefore, for a society like our own, organized, as we are, upon principles of individual liberty, upon the principle that the Government exists for the individual and not the individual for the benefit of the Government, to be permament and capable of preserving its life it must be capable of adopting, so far as necessary, the very opposite form of organization—the militant type—in virtue of which the individual exists for the benefit of the Government. We must adopt the militant form because it is the form that is efficient in warfare and therefore necessary. But the fact that we, wholly or in part, put on the militant garb and form does not destroy our love of liberty, nor prevent us from again resuming it when the occasion has passed. This is shown by our experience in all our past wars. At the close of the Civil War we had over a million soldiers in arms, but we had no trouble in disbanding them and returning them to civil life. Why? Because they were free American citizens, and loved liberty and peace more than war. They, in fact, appreciated more than ever before in their lives the blessings of liberty. They had had experience with military life and discipline, and could now understand what rank and despotism meant. It is the same to-day. Let our young men have a little military training and discipline; it will do them good; it will increase our safety as a Nation, and it will make each one of them a better citizen, with a fuller realization of the blessings of our freer institutions than he ever had before. Mere love of liberty and free institutions without military organization and training does not make fighting men, but military organization and training will increase the love of liberty in those who have been trained in free institutions. One who has never been sick does not appreciate the blessings of health like one who has, and likewise one who has never experienced the self-abnegation necessary to military life does not appreciate liberty as much as one who has.

I therefore hold that in this day and age the fear of militarism is unfounded, and will gradually disappear as the subject of due military preparation is more generally understood. Mere numbers and wealth and patriotic feeling do not make a nation invincible. There must also be military preparation. The wider the military education and training among a people like ours the greater the security of our continued existence as a nation and of our institutions, founded upon the idea of individual liberty and freedom. [Applause.]

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NICHOLLS] be given three minutes to address the House on the subject of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be permitted to speak for three minutes on this measure.

Mr. MANN. Let him talk on something else.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 49.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 106, answered "present" 11, not voting 114, as follows:

From 12 m. Thursday until end of session, excepting on District legislation:

Mr. SMITH of Michigan with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. FINLEY, has voted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina did not vote.

Mr. CURRIER. I voted "aye," and I am paired with him. I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

Mr. CURRIER's name was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if I am recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not.

Mr. CARTER. I was present in the room, Mr. Speaker, when my name was called——

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and giving attention when his name was called and did not hear it?

Mr. CARTER. I was present in the room, but I was not giving very strict attention——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," and I want to be recorded as voting "no," but as I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WANGER, I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

Mr. ADAMSON's name was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no" under the impression that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GOEBEL, had voted. I find that he did not vote. I therefore withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SMITH of California was given leave of absence for the remainder of the session on account of sickness.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DELAWARE RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate of the United States:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate Senate bill 10632, to authorize the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Delaware River.

The request was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16268. An act for the relief of Thomas Seals;

H. R. 32220. An act to authorize the board of supervisors of the town of High Landing, Red Lake County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red Lake River;

H. R. 32571. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Kansas National Forest;

H. R. 31538. An act to authorize the Pensacola, Mobile & New Orleans Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a bridge over and across the Mobile River and its navigable channels above the city of Mobile, Ala.; and

H. R. 32400. An act to authorize the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Delaware River from Lower Makefield Township, Bucks County, Pa., to Ewing Township, Mercer County, N. J.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. 10015. An act for rebuilding and improving the present light and fog signal at Lincoln Rock, Alaska, or for building another light and fog-signal station upon a different site near by;

S. J. Res. 132. Joint resolution authorizing the delivering to the commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans of one or two dismounted bronze cannon; and

S. J. Res. 145. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy which will occur on March 1, 1911, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Member of Congress;

AMENDMENT TO INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 28626) to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes, which is a privileged bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] calls up the following privileged bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3255 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by act of June 3, 1896 (29 Stat., p. 195), be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3255. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, grapes, pears, pineapples, oranges, apricots, berries, or prunes from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so: Provided, That where, in the manufacture of wine, artificial sweetening has been used the wine or the fruit pomace residuum may be used in the distillation of brandy, and such use shall not prevent the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from exempting such distiller from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so."

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "berries," insert "plums, pawpaws, persimmons."

Page 1, line 11, strike out "or" and after the word "prunes" insert ", figs, or cherries."

Page 2, line 3, after the word "Revenue" insert ", with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall have to object to that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 28626.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28626) to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes, with Mr. DIEKEMA in the chair.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury upon this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 4, 1911.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 21st ultimo, inclosing copy of bill (H. R. 28626) to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes, and requesting my views as to whether the same should be enacted into law, and the reasons therefor.

In reply I would say that section 3255, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of June 3, 1896, and also by the act of February 4, 1901, authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from the fruits enumerated therein from any of the provisions of the title relating to the manufacture of distilled spirits, except as to the tax thereon.

Wine makers in certain sections of the country, in the manufacture of sweet wines, find it necessary to add artificial sweetening in order to perfect such wines. Inasmuch as brandy distilled from wine so made, or from the fruit residuum, is not made exclusively from grapes, or either of the other fruits named in section 3255, its manufacture is not permissible under the exemptions.

The proposed amendment will authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to exempt distillers of brandy from wine or fruit pomace residuum, when in the manufacture of the wine artificial sweetening has been used, from any or all the provisions of law relating to the manufacture of distilled spirits, except as to the tax thereon.

Authority to extend the exemptions to distillers using wine or the fruit residuum where, in the manufacture of the wine, artificial sweetening has been used, seems to be necessary, inasmuch as the use of such fruit charged with sugar or sugar solution is entirely impracticable under the general statutes relating to distilleries, because of the limitations placed thereby upon the fermenting period of each of the recognized classes of distilleries, which period is insufficient for the complete fermentation of such fruit.

I invite attention to certain defects in the bill as drawn. The only amendment to section 3255, Revised Statutes, to which reference is made, is that of the act of June 3, 1896, whereas this section was further amended by the act of February 4, 1901, which provided for two additional fruits, "figs or cherries." Further, the additional proviso authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue alone to exempt this class of distillers without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In my opinion the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury should be required as in the original act and in the other amendments.

With the changes suggested in the bill, I am of the opinion that it should be enacted into law.

Respectfully, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

THE CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been amended in accordance with the suggestions made by the Secretary of the Treasury. It was acted upon by the Ways and Means Committee after an exhaustive hearing, at which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue appeared before us. It comes to the House now with the unanimous report of the committee. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, it seems to me, explains very fully the necessity for this legislation, and therefore I do not care to occupy the time of the House in a prolonged discussion of it, unless some gentleman may desire to ask some questions.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LONGWORTH. With pleasure.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The purpose of my inquiry is to ascertain from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] what effect this would have on the distilling of fruit; for instance, peaches, apples, and things of that sort. I notice that he shall have right over certain regulations, except as to the payment of the tax.

Now, distillation from fruit—peaches and other things of that kind—in my country has ceased altogether owing to the restrictions. Men might be willing to pay the tax, but there are other certain regulations prescribed by the laws or rules of the Internal Revenue Department that they can not comply with. I want to know if this provides for the distillation of fruit—peaches and apples and so forth—where we can not now distill them, and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. LONGWORTH. This bill does not change in any respect the present law of distillation from fruits, except it adds one or two other sorts of fruit than those now authorized by statute. The only change made in the law by this bill is in the proviso which allows the Secretary to include in "fruit distilleries" those distilleries which now make brandy from sweetened grapes. The necessity for the law arises from the following reasons: For nearly 40 years there have been certain districts in this country which make wine from grapes to which sugar has been added. That includes the New York district and the districts of Missouri, Pennsylvania, and Ohio. In all of those districts wine is made from sweetened grapes.

Now, it has been the custom to distill the residue which remains after making wine into brandy; but recently the Internal Revenue Department has been prosecuting certain distillers who used sugar in the distillation of brandy made from fruits generally, which is against the law, the law providing that fruit distilleries are only exempt from the provisions of grain distilleries if they make their distillation from fruit exclusively. The moment you add sugar you thereupon take them out of this exemption.

This law does not change in any respect the distillation from fruits, but will only provide that those who manufacture brandy out of the residuum of sweetened brandy may continue as they have done for about 40 years.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That would not take away, then, any of the restrictions that are thrown around or the requirements provided for the distillation of brandy from fruit, like peaches and things of that sort?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not at all. The fact is, there are two kinds of distilleries only, distilleries that use fruit and distilleries that do not use fruit, which means, of course, grain distilleries.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But different as to the amount of fruit or grain?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under this section, section 3255, I think it is, the Secretary of the Treasury is allowed to exempt fruit distilleries from all provisions except the tax. Now, the fact is that the reason why the Internal Revenue Department is anxious that this bill should pass is that if it shall not pass at this session of Congress the Government will lose somewhere between $500,000 and $800,000 of revenue. I have heard the amount estimated at as high as $800,000.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do.

Mr. MANN. Neither the bill nor the report indicates what is new and what is old, but from an examination of the act referred to in the report it would seem that there are some new fruits added in the bill, and the proviso is entirely new.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The proviso is entirely new, and there are two kinds of fruit added.

Mr. MANN. Peaches and cherries, and——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Peaches and cherries, I think, are in the old law.

Mr. MANN. And pawpaws, and persimmons, and figs——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Those are new, I believe.

Mr. MANN. And cherries and plums are entirely new. However, that is of no importance, I suppose?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No.

Mr. MANN. Has there been a ruling under the present law by the department to the effect that under the law they can not use the pomace resulting from sweetened wines to distill brandies?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under what law is that ruling made?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under the law that provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall——

Mr. MANN. What law is it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is section 3255.

Mr. MANN. But section 3255 does not cover it at all.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It says the Secretary of the Treasury may exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from fruits, and so forth. Now, under this it is held that this sort of brandy is not made exclusively from fruits, because there is an admixture of sugar in the production of the wines.

Mr. MANN. That is a new ruling?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is a new ruling, and the effect of it has been postponed until March 15, so that if this bill does not pass at this session of Congress the distillers of this kind of brandy must go out of business, because it is impossible for them to comply with the regulations that apply to grain distillers with respect to the period of fermentation.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman knows, does he not, that there has been more or less controversy over the manufacture of sweetened wines and fruit wines, and so forth, under the pure food law?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue says this bill will not in any way violate the provisions of the pure-food law.

Mr. MANN. Of course he thinks nothing in the way of liquor violates anything connected with the pure-food law. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say also to the gentleman that Mr. McCabe, the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture, says that this bill will not violate the provisions of the pure-food law. If we do not pass this bill, the Government will be deprived of something between half a million and three-quarters of a million dollars of revenue.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had indicated what the changes were in the report I do not think anybody would have questioned it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will ask for the reading of the bill and of the amendments recommended by the committee.

The bill and the committee amendments were again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and recommend to the House that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DIEKEMA, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 28626) to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes, and directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the amendments will be voted on in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. LONGWORTH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 288. An act for the creation of the police and firemen's relief fund, to provide for the retirement of members of the police and fire departments, to establish a method of procedure for such retirement, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 20603. An act for the relief of Henry Halteman;

H. R. 24153. An act for the relief of John Marshall; and

H. J. Res. 276. Joint resolution modifying certain laws relating to the military records of certain soldiers and sailors.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 9693. An act to provide for the payment of the traveling and other expenses of United States circuit and district judges when holding court at places other than where they reside; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds upon the Speaker's table H. J. Res. 281, to create a joint committee to continue the consideration of the revision and codification of the laws of the United States, which provides for an expenditure of money from the contingent funds of the House and Senate. After examination of the precedents, which are conflicting, the Chair is of opinion that the bill should be on the House Calendar and not upon the Union Calendar. Without objection, it will be so referred.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEASING COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 32080) to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes, with committee amendments, and move to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended. The Clerk will read the bill and amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands in the District of Alaska containing workable deposits of coal are hereby reserved from all forms of entry, appropriation, and disposal, except under the provisions of this act: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall in any manner affect any claims or rights to any such coal lands heretofore asserted or established under the land laws of the United States, and all such claims and rights shall be treated, passed upon, and disposed of as though this act had not been passed.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, for and on behalf of the United States, to issue licenses granting the holders thereof the right to prospect and explore for coal on the vacant public lands in the District of Alaska and to execute leases authorizing the lessee to mine and remove coal from such lands. No license or lease shall pertain to an area of more than 3,200 acres, and all such areas shall be in reasonably compact form and conform to the public-land surveys in all cases in which said surveys have been extended over the lands. No prospecting permit shall be issued for a longer period than three years, but upon a showing of due diligence on the part of the lessee in prospecting and exploring, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, extend the license for a period not exceeding one year. All licensees shall pay in advance a fee of 25 cents per acre for the first year covered by their license, 50 cents per acre for the second year, and $1 per acre for the third year, and at the same rate for any extension of the license. Lessees shall pay in advance a rental of 25 cents per acre for the first calendar year, or fraction thereof, 50 cents per acre for the second year, and not less than $1 and not more than $4 per acre for each succeeding year. The sums paid for rent by a lessee shall in every case be a credit upon the royalties that may be due for the same year. All lessees shall pay a royalty on each ton, of 2,000 pounds, of coal mined, as follows: From the passage of this act until the end of the calendar year 1920, not less than 3 cents nor more than 6 cents per ton; for the succeeding 10 years, not less than 5 cents nor more than 8 cents per ton; for the succeeding 10 years, not less than 5 cents nor more than 10 cents per ton; and thereafter as Congress may provide. All leases shall be granted for such period as the lessee shall designate, but in no event for more than 30 years; but all lessees who have complied with the terms of their leases shall have a preferential right to an extension of their lease for a period not to exceed 20 years upon such conditions and the payment of such rents and royalties as Congress may prescribe.

SEC. 3. That any person over the age of 21 years who is a citizen of the United States, or any association or corporation composed of such persons, may apply for a permit to prospect for, or a lease to mine, coal in the District of Alaska, and upon compliance with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder shall be granted a license or lease as provided herein, but no person, association, or corporation, or stockholder therein shall, during the lifetime of such permit or lease, receive or be permitted to hold, directly or indirectly, any other permit, lease, or license, or any interest therein, to coal lands in Alaska under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That applications for prospecting licenses and mining leases, and all payments on same, shall be made to such officer and in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may designate, and in all cases where more than one application shall be received for a license or lease covering the same area, in whole or in part, preference shall be given to the qualified applicant who shall show prior possession with a view of acquiring title to coal lands or prospecting for or mining coal, and reasonable diligence in applying for such license or lease, but the holder of a prospecting license shall have a preference right, during the period of his license, to apply for and obtain a mining lease to the lands covered by his license: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may adjust the boundaries of conflicting applications in such manner as will best promote the public interest by affording opportunities for speedy development.

SEC. 5. That all applications for licenses or leases shall describe the lands applied for according to the public-land surveys or private surveys which may have been approved by the United States surveyor general, or, if on unsurveyed land, by description by metes and bounds and reference to natural objects or permanent monuments as will readily identify the same. No license or lease shall be issued until after publication of the application therefor at least 30 days in some newspaper of general circulation in the land district in which the land is located and an opportunity has been given for the hearing of any protests which may be made during the period of publication against the issuance of such license or lease, and no lease covering unsurveyed land shall be issued until a survey shall have been executed, at the expense of the lessee, by or under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, permanently marking the outboundaries thereof and subdividing the same according to the rectangular system of surveys. Licenses may be canceled by the Secretary of the Interior after reasonable notice for failure to pay rent when due.

SEC. 6. That all leases issued under the provisions of this act shall be upon the condition that the lessee shall proceed with due diligence to open a coal mine or mines on the leased premises and to produce coal therefrom during the life of the lease in such quantity as the condition of the market shall justify. That he shall not monopolize, in whole or in part, the trade in coal. That he will at all times sell the coal extracted from the leased premises at just, fair, and reasonable rates, without the giving of rebates or drawbacks, and without discrimination in price or otherwise, as between persons or places for a like product delivered under similar terms and conditions. That the mining operations shall be carried on in a workmanlike manner with due regard to the permanence of the mine, without undue waste, and with especial reference to the safety and welfare of the miners. That the leased premises and all mines opened thereon and all maps and records of coal production shall at all times be subject to inspection and examination by such officers as may be provided by law or designated by the Secretary of the Interior for such purpose. That the lessee shall observe, abide by, and conform to all of the provisions and limitations of this act, and that he shall pay promptly all rents and royalties when due; and the Secretary of the Interior or any person in interest may institute in the United States district court for division No. 1, District of Alaska, appropriate proceedings for the enforcement of the terms of the lease or for its cancellation for violation of the terms thereof or of the provisions of this act. Appeals from the decisions of the said court shall lie to the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit. Said leases shall also be upon the condition that the United States shall, at all times, have a preference right to take, wherever found, so much of the product of any mine or mines, opened upon the leased land, as may be necessary for the use of the Army or Navy or Revenue-Cutter Service, and pay such reasonable and remunerative price therefor as may be fixed by the President, but the owner of any coal so taken who may be dissatisfied with the price thus fixed shall have the right to prosecute suits against the United States in the United States district court for division No. 1, District of Alaska, for the recovery of any additional sum or sums claimed to be justly due upon the coal so taken.

SEC. 7. That no lease shall be granted or issued until the applicant shall have given a bond to the United States in such sum and with such surety as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the payment of all rents and royalties and for the due and faithful compliance with all the terms and conditions of the lease. The existence of such bond shall be no bar to the institution of a suit for the enforcement of the terms of the lease or for its cancellation for the violation of the terms thereof or the provisions of this act, and a judgment of forfeiture of the lease shall be no bar to the enforcement by legal proceedings of the bond given in behalf of the lease.

SEC. 8. That no license or lease shall be assigned, mortgaged or sublet, except to a person, association, or corporation qualified to receive and hold an original license or lease under the provisions of this act, and with the written permission and approval of the Secretary of the Interior; and whosoever succeeds to the interest of the licensee or lessee by foreclosure, purchase, or assignment shall be subject to all the limitations and obligations contained in the license or lease or in this act.

SEC. 9. That a license or lease may be terminated at any time on the application of the licensee or lessee and the payment of all rents and royalties which may be due, but no lease shall be terminated until the Secretary of the Interior shall have had an opportunity to have an examination made into the condition of the property and such reasonable provision shall have been made for the preservation of any mine or mines which may have been opened on same, as he may require. Upon the cancellation of the lease or its expiration, or upon the forfeiture thereof and the satisfaction of any judgment rendered in the decree of forfeiture, the retiring lessee may, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, remove or dispose of all of the machinery, buildings, or structures upon the leased premises, except such structures as may be necessary for the preservation of the mines.

SEC. 10. That no prospecting license issued under the provisions of this act shall give the licensee the exclusive use of any of the lands covered by his license, except for the purpose of prospecting and exploring the same, but all lessees under the provisions of this act shall enjoy the exclusive use of the surface, providing that this exclusive use shall in no wise interfere with the establishment and use of all necessary roads and highways, so located as not to interfere with the mining operations, and the granting by the Secretary of the Interior of such rights of way across such lands as may be necessary for use in the production, handling, or transportation of coal or other products of the District of Alaska.

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue limited mining leases to applicants qualified under section 3 of this act, and to municipal corporations, a tract not exceeding 160 acres in extent, and covering a period not exceeding 10 years, for the mining of coal for use in the District of Alaska. Such limited leases shall, in addition to the above limitations, be subject to all of the conditions of the general leases issued under the provisions of this act, except that a renewal of such lease shall be discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior and that the acquisition or holding of such limited lease shall be no bar to the acquisition or holding of a general lease provided for in this act, nor shall the holding of a general lease be a bar to the acquisition or holding of a limited lease.

SEC. 12. That 75 per cent of all the moneys derived from licenses and leases granted under the provisions of this act shall be paid into and constitute a part of the "Alaska fund" in the Treasury of the United States, provided for and created by the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, and may be expended for the purposes described in said act; and the residue of the moneys derived from such licenses and leases shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and constitute a part of the general fund of the Treasury. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make all necessary rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 13. That the reservation contained in section 1 of this act shall not prevent the location and patenting of lands containing workable deposits of coal under the mining laws of the United States with a view of extracting metalliferous minerals therefrom. But licenses and leases provided for in this act may be issued without regard to the fact that the lands may be covered by mining locations and the Secretary of the Interior shall provide by appropriate regulation for the observance by licensees, lessees, and locators of the respective rights of each: Provided, That all patents issued under the mineral laws to such lands shall reserve to the United States all the coal contained therein, together with the right to provide for the prospecting for and mining of the same.

SEC. 14. That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto are hereby extended to and made operative within the District of Alaska. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make all necessary rules and regulations in harmony with the provisions of this act needful and necessary for the administration of the same.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out after the word "license" the words "or lease."

Page 2, line 5, after the word "acres," insert the following: "and no lease shall pertain to an area of more than 2,560 acres."

"That the act of February 4, 1887, entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' and all acts amendatory thereof, are hereby extended to and made applicable to the District of Alaska in so far as the transportation of coal is concerned. And for the purpose of administering said acts in Alaska with regard to the transportation of coal, the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the Commerce Court is hereby extended to the District of Alaska."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MADISON. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. A second is ordered under the rule. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MADISON] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House is the result of a very earnest, careful, and painstaking effort to meet in a fair way, and a way which we believe is in harmony with the best public sentiment, the coal situation in the District of Alaska. There are three distinct features of the coal situation in Alaska that are at present unsatisfactory. First, the coal land sells for a flat price of $10 an acre, without regard to its value, and it is generally believed that that price is too low. Second, under the law, except under the provisions of the act of 1908, which are difficult to comply with, entries are limited to 160 acres, and it is difficult to acquire legally a sufficient area for a coal operation. Third, under this system of sale in fee there is no control over the coal operations or over the prices that may be charged. The committee set out to remedy this condition along the line of what we considered to be a sound policy, one which will make possible the development of the Alaskan coals and at the same time protect the public and bring a very considerable revenue to the Government.

We provide, first, for a prospecting license which may cover 3,200 acres and which may extend over three years upon the payment of certain rents during that period. We then provide for a lease which may extend as long as 30 years upon the payment of certain royalties, and the maximum area is 2,560 acres. The royalties are fixed at from 3 to 6 cents per ton for the first 10 years and increased so that in the last 10 years of the 30 it runs from 5 to 10 cents a ton on the coal as it comes from the mines, so that, allowing for slack, these royalties per ton of merchantable coal will be from 25 to 40 per cent above the royalty fixed in the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice, in line 7, page 2, that a license for not more than 3,200 acres is provided.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a prospecting license.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And a lease of not more than 2,560 acres.

Mr. MONDELL. The mining lease is for a smaller area than the prospecting license.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the license would a man have the right to mine coal?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; that is just a prospecting license, to give the prospector the opportunity to prospect the area within which to select the tract upon which he can secure a lease to mine coal.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The licensee pays 25 cents the first year, 50 cents the second year, and $1 the third year.

Mr. MONDELL. The licensee pays a ground rent. The lessee pays a ground rent, which after the second year may be as high as $4 an acre, and in addition to that he pays his royalties.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Both of them pay rent.

Mr. MONDELL. They both pay rent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The lessee pays rent and royalty.

Mr. MONDELL. He pays rent and royalty.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I have a very brief time in which to complete my statement.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think the gentleman has unintentionally made a misstatement. He said the lessee paid not only a rental, but a royalty in addition.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not intend to say in addition. He pays a rental, but after he gets to mining coal the rental is absorbed by the royalties. The rental is for the purpose of preventing him from holding the area without mining coal. In section 6 of the bill are contained all the covenants of the lease and all of the requirements with regard to careful mining, safeguarding the life and limb of miners, in regard to payment of rents and royalties, in regard to the maintenance of the mines, against holding more than one lease, and every prohibition contained in the bill is made a covenant of the lease in section 6, and enforcible by a suit begun by the Secretary of the Interior, or any interested party, in the United States district court for the District of Alaska.

Mr. JAMES. I see the gentleman's bill provides that no one person or corporation shall have the right to more than 2,560 acres. Suppose other persons already have claims which aggregate 5,000 acres. Does this give them that number of acres in addition?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will read the section, he will see that it provides:

But no persons, association, or corporation, or stockholder therein, shall, during the lifetime of such permit or lease, receive or be permitted to hold, directly or indirectly, any other permit, lease, or license, or any interest therein, to coal land in Alaska under the provisions of this act.

Mr. JAMES. That refers to this bill. That does not refer to other claims outside.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not.

Mr. JAMES. So if the Guggenheim-Morgan syndicate has 5,000 or 6,000 acres of land, they can take up under this bill 2,560 acres in addition.

Mr. MONDELL. So far there have been no patents issued to coal lands in Alaska.

Mr. JAMES. No; but there have been claims filed.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee did not feel that it ought to go further than a limit under the law. The limitations under this law are drastic and readily enforceable.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there any inhibition against the transfer of licenses?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; you will find that in section 8 of the bill. I believe the bill is very carefully safeguarded. We have gone just as far as we have dared to go in fixing safeguards around the mining of coal in Alaska without absolutely preventing development.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman call the language in section 8 an inhibition?

Mr. MONDELL. It says that—

No license or lease shall be assigned, mortgaged, or sublet except to a person, association, or corporation qualified to receive and hold an original license or lease under the provisions of this act, and with the written permission and approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

For instance, a party holding a lease and finding it impossible to operate under the lease might transfer to another party who was eligible to take a lease, and it seems to me there could be no objection to that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Line 23, in italic, on page 25, says:

That the lessee shall not, during the lifetime of the lease, receive or hold, directly or indirectly, any other lease under the provisions of this act or interest therein.

The same lessee could not get two leases, but another lessee could get a lease and transfer the assignment of his lease to the other man.

Mr. MONDELL. The lease could only be assigned to a person qualified as lessee. This whole matter was thrashed out carefully in the committee, and the bill is perfectly clear. No person who is not qualified as a lessee or a licensee could obtain an assignment or a mortgage of one of these claims.

Mr. JAMES. I notice section 2 of the bill provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, for and on behalf of the United States, to issue licenses granting the holders thereof the right to prospect and explore for coal on the vacant public lands in the District of Alaska and to execute leases authorizing the lessee to mine and remove coal from such lands.

Is it not true under this bill that you lodge absolutely in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior the right to give one man a license and deny that right to another?

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, there is absolutely no ground on which the Secretary can deny an application of a party qualified under the law.

Mr. JAMES. I wish the gentleman would point out in his bill where he provides that the Secretary shall issue to any person a license who demands it. On the contrary, you lodge in the hands of the Secretary the right to give a lease or license to one person and deny it to another.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can have his own time in which he can make his speech.

Mr. JAMES. I made the suggestion to the gentleman because he is the author of this bill, and if he can point out in this bill where that statement is untrue I want him to do it.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill provides in section 3:

That any person over the age of 21 years, who is a citizen of the United States, or any association or corporation composed of such persons, may apply for a permit to prospect for, or lease to mine, coal in the District of Alaska, and upon compliance with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, shall be granted a license or lease as provided herein.

If the gentleman knows of any expression in the English language that is more definite than that, then I do not know what it could be. That purposely leaves no discretion in the Secretary except where two parties apply for overlapping leases. We leave with him there necessarily a discretion, and he must exercise that discretion in the public interest.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. As I understand this bill, any person may apply for not more than 2,560 acres.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

Mr. HAMLIN. Would it not be possible for a combination of persons—50 or 100—to each lease that number of acres of land, or a combination of even more people, so that one company might control all of the coal lands of Alaska?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, if there is anything in this bill that would make that possible I can not see where it is, because, first, there is a covenant in the lease that no lessee or association or associated interests on a lease shall own or have any interest in any other lease, and also that the lessee shall not monopolize in whole or in part the trade in coal.

Mr. HAMLIN. They would be issued in the names of different individuals, but may there not be a secret understanding between them, and as a matter of fact they might be controlled by one company or corporation?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman knows of any way by which you can write anything into law, anything that is going to prevent men having secret understandings, I would be glad to have it done here and accept it as an amendment to this bill. I know of no way of doing that. We prohibit any person or association of persons or anybody connected with an association of persons from having any right or interest in more than one lease, and that is a covenant of the lease, and the lease can be canceled and there is a bond given which can be sued upon and the party put entirely out of business and made to pay heavy damages for attempting to do anything of that sort. Certainly no legislation could go further than that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does not the gentleman know that these combinations are formed every day of the world?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says that the lessees might have a secret understanding. I take it that men may have a secret understanding that you can not reach by law. That seems to me to be something that can not be reached by legislation, unless that secret understanding results in a monopoly or an attempted monopoly; then it can be reached under the terms of the bill.

Mr. JAMES. Suppose, as a matter of fact, that 100 men do get together, and, under the provisions of this act, get two or three thousand acres of land each, and then after that there is no proof that the United States can get that they have a secret understanding, after they have gotten practically all of the land in Alaska, what provision have you in your bill to keep them from associating that land together and under one mammoth concern controlling it all?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman is trying to use my time for an argument.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman must not conclude that because a man puts questions about his own bill that he is doing it for an ulterior motive. The gentleman owes a duty to the House to explain the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. There is nothing in the bill that will justify such a suggestion, for I have read twice to the House an absolute prohibition against that being done, against anyone acquiring or holding or having at any one time an interest in more than one lease, and that is as plain as the English language can make it.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MORSE. In section 4 I see a provision which gives a man in possession preferential rights. Now, whether he is in possession of the land, legally or illegally, fraudulently or honestly, he is given preferential rights. Does not the gentleman think that a newcomer ought to have the same rights as these people who have been squatting on the land waiting for the law to be amended so that they could get it legally?

Mr. MONDELL. It is pretty difficult to provide any method whereby the right to make these applications shall be based, except that on that of priority of application or possession, unless you leave the entire matter in the discretion of the Secretary. The man who makes the first application and the man who is in possession has an equitable right if he is in possession for the purpose of acquiring the lease or of acquiring title to coal lands.

It seems to me that is a very wise provision. It is a provision that runs through all our land laws that the man first in possession has a first right to make application.

Mr. LENROOT. Would the gentleman make that statement in just that way if the possession was for the purpose of securing claims in a fraudulent manner—that is, perpetrating a fraud upon the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not know how we are going to differentiate in a matter of that kind. We must give some one the right to make these applications, and it seems but natural that the party in possession should be given the first opportunity to acquire the right to lease, inasmuch as he pays as much to the Government as any other person would, and he is under all the limitations that any other person would be. I can see no reason why the one in possession should not be given the right to make the application.

Mr. LENROOT. Would not an amendment providing that the possessor had attempted in good faith to acquire title without fraud be perfectly practicable?

Mr. MONDELL. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that no one can be in possession of over 160 acres of this land with a view of obtaining title, and therefore the provision in regard to the prior right of the possessor only gives him prior right to lease 160 acres of land. I am of the opinion that it was in the public interest to encourage the merging of these claims into leases whereby the Government would get not $10 an acre for the land, but in some cases as high as $1,000 or $1,500 an acre for the land under the terms of this bill.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman know how many claims in the Katalla field, where the Cunningham claims are, have been proved up on since the 19th of last January?

Mr. MONDELL. There have been no claims passed to patent. There are about 215 claims upon which proof has been offered in all the fields in Alaska, but in no case except in the so-called Cunningham cases has a final receipt been issued.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Does the gentleman say that to this House?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true; and if the gentleman will kindly read the letter of the Commissioner of the Land Office in the last page of the hearings he will find that what I have said is in harmony with the statement from the Land Office sent to the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLMSTED). The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman be allowed a little more time.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have a little time, as I have been interrupted so often. Most of my time has been taken up in answering questions.

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly not object if an equal amount of time is granted to this side. I think it but fair that an equal amount of time should be granted this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there a request submitted?

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, I request that the gentleman be given five minutes' additional time and equal amount of time be granted to those in opposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that 10 minutes' additional time be given, five minutes to be used by the gentleman from Wyoming and five miutes by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not care to use additional time at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. Now, the gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that each side may be given five minutes' additional time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Does the gentleman from Wyoming reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, if I should take as long as seven minutes, I wish the Chair to notify me at the end of that time. Mr. Speaker, this bill ought not to pass under suspension of the rules. There has been some important legislation submitted to this House during this session of Congress, but there has been no legislation that is more important than this, and yet it is proposed to pass this bill after only 50 minutes' discussion, without reading the bill under the five-minute rule, or giving any opportunity to offer amendments. No bill of the importance of this should be passed under suspension.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MADISON. No; I have only seven minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. It is not our fault that we have to do that.

Mr. MADISON. There has been a great deal of discussion throughout this country with regard to Alaska and the Alaskan coal fields, and there is a general consensus of opinion that those lands should not be permitted to go into private ownership, but that title should be retained in the Government and the lands leased, or the privilege of working the mines leased. It is estimated that there are 15,000,000,000 tons of coal in Alaska, some of it as fine coal as can be found anywhere on the face of the earth. The finest kind of anthracite coal exists in those fields and in veins so thick that it causes every man to wonder if the stories with regard to them can be true, and that coal, except that which has passed already into the hands of private owners, is the property of all the people of the United States. Alaska is the last great national storehouse of natural resources, and you are asked by this bill to give a large portion of its wealth away after a discussion of only 50 minutes, and without any opportunity to amend this bill.

I call upon every man within the sound of my voice to-day, who would protect the interests of the American people, to stand here and voice his protest by his vote against this bill.

I have only a few minutes, and I need but few. There is one great enormity in this bill that should defeat it. The testimony before the Ballinger-Pinchot committee was that the Guggenheims agreed to pay what in effect amounted to a royalty of 50 cents a ton on run-of-mine coal for every ton of coal taken from the Cunningham mines.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] shakes his head in the negative. I sat too long in that case and have read it too many times not to know what the evidence is. It is there, and any man who wants to read it can find it. They formed their own corporation, then they entered into an option for the purchase of the coal lands, and agreed that for every bit of that coal that was mined and went into the general market they would pay 50 cents royalty. That is what it amounted to.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MADISON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. As a matter of fact, is it not true that they agreed to pay so much per ton for the coal, and that some one estimated that that meant a margin of 50 cents a ton? They agreed to pay $2.25 a ton, and it was estimated it could be mined at $1.75 per ton. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. MADISON. True.

Mr. MONDELL. That is not a royalty; that is a profit.

Mr. MADISON. Who gave the figures? The manager of the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate. He testified it would cost $1.75 a ton to mine the coal, and he did not put an estimate upon it that he believed was giving the Guggenheims the worst of it, and then he said they agreed to pay for the coal as it came from the mines $2.25 a ton.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What did he say it would net them?

Mr. MADISON. It is a matter of computation. That meant, in substance, a royalty of 50 cents a ton, and any man who can add two and two understands beyond any question that that is what it means. The Guggenheims and the Cunningham claimants owned the corporation which intended to mine the coal, and the Guggenheims allowed it a profit of 50 cents a ton and then would have sold the coal on the general market at an additional profit, thus, in effect, allowing a royalty of 50 cents a ton. The Government expert, a man by the name of Kennedy, and a man as honest as any man that appeared before that committee and who impressed the committee with his ability as an expert, testified that there were 90,000,000 tons of coal in sight on the Cunningham claims. They were willing to pay a royalty or profit, if they got all the coal, of $45,000,000. Of course those figures are large and may be said to be an exaggeration, if you please, but cut it in two and say that they would have gotten out only half of the coal estimated by Kennedy, then they were willing to pay twenty-two and one-half million dollars for that coal in the way of royalty at 50 cents a ton. This bill fixes the maximum for the first period of 10 years at 6 cents a ton.

Mr. JAMES. From three to six.

Mr. MADISON. The maximum at 6 cents a ton. Gentlemen, no leasing bill that is ever passed by the Government of the United States should have a maximum royalty.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADISON. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. Is this hard coal or soft coal?

Mr. MADISON. All kinds.

Mr. WEEKS. How much of it is hard and how much of it is soft?

Mr. MADISON. I am unable to state, but millions of tons of it is hard coal, and as good coal as could be found anywhere on the face of the earth.

Mr. WEEKS. There is no reasonable deduction to be drawn from the statement, unless the statement can be confirmed, as to whether it is hard or soft coal.

Mr. MADISON. Much of it is equal to the best grade of Pennsylvania anthracite coal, and there are good bituminous coals in the same region, or in the immediate vicinity.

Mr. Speaker, has my time expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has not expired.

Mr. MADISON. How long, Mr. Speaker, have I talked?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has talked for seven minutes.

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, I will just say this in conclusion, using just one minute more.

This bill as it stands, as a leasing bill, is a mockery. If this is what the Government of the United States has to offer the people as a conservation measure, as a leasing bill, then I say, God save us from this kind of a conservation measure. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM].

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman in charge of the bill said awhile ago that no coal lands in Alaska had been patented. That is true, but it is equally true that more than 268 of those coal claims have been sold by the Government of the United States, the final proofs have been made in the local land office, the proofs have been approved, the final receiver's receipt has been issued, and the equitable title of the United States has been conveyed to the purchaser.

The gentleman need not look at the report from the Secretary of the Interior at the back of his report, because it is incorrect. And I will say to the Members of this House that if you want to care for the best interests of the Territory of Alaska every one of you should vote against this bill. No gentleman ought to vote for it who is not sure from the testimony before him that it is right. I say it is wrong; it is all wrong. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman wants the coal lands of Alaska sold for $10 flat?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Does the gentleman desire that this bill should apply to the State of Wyoming?

Mr. MONDELL. I did not say that.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. If the gentleman were to advocate that, and were to go back to Wyoming, I feel confident his action would be disapproved there.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says he wants inserted here a $10-an-acre clause.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The gentleman from Wyoming said at the time of the passage of that bill that it was the best bill ever passed for Alaska, and the gentleman was urging its passage then, just as he is urging the passage of this bill. Now the gentleman says the former bill is wrong.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the gentleman sure that I said that that was the best bill that could be passed?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I am quite sure that the gentleman said that—at least in substance.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not recollect that I said a word about the passage of that bill. But did not the gentleman tell our committee that he wanted the sale price of coal land in Alaska to be $10 flat?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; but, Mr. Speaker, I desire the passage of a bill that will give the people of the United States and the people of Alaska some little show, and not a bill of this kind. This bill does not give the people of Alaska a fair opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, since the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation committee was appointed on the 19th of January of last year there has been much talk of conservation and of saving the coal in Alaska, and a great deal of talk about a Government leasing bill for Alaska. But at the back door, before the local land office in Alaska, where you do not know what is being done, they have been issuing patents on final proofs of these coal claims and final receipts just as fast as it could be done. More than 120 of those claims in the Katalla field alone have been proved up since the 19th of January of last year, and yet no one in Washington seems to know anything about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman tell us who has issued those local certificates that he refers to?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. They have been issued by the local land office at Juneau, Alaska, and that fact is known to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was our impression that all of those claims had been withdrawn.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have a list here that shows that more than 24,000 acres in the Katalla field have been sold since that time, and Mr. Brooks has testified that there were not more than about 25,000 acres in the entire field.

Mr. MADISON. Then they have practically all been sold?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; they have all been sold.

There is nothing in either the Katalla coal field or the Matanuska coal field to lease; and if I had had an opportunity to appear before the committee and advise them of that fact, I would have been pleased to do so.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for an interruption?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee has a list of every entry which has been made in Alaska, with the name of the entryman and the area of the land. There have been no final receipts issued whatever; there have been receipts issued for money, but nothing known as a final receipt, except in the so-called Cunningham cases.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The gentleman is mistaken in his facts. That shows how little the gentleman knows about the true situation in Alaska.

Mr. MONDELL. I am taking the statement of the Interior Department.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. There are two reports, then, issued by the Interior Department.

Mr. MONDELL. That does not affect the situation.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Alaska if it is not true that in these cases the people who have invested their money and developed these lands can not get final receipts.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No, sir; that is not true. I have a letter here which I will read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 21, 1911.

Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In response to your inquiry of the 13th instant, you are informed that reports from United States land offices in Alaska show that they have received payments under 118 coal locations upon which no final certificates have been issued, but these reports do not indicate the number of locations under which payments have been tendered but not received. The locations mentioned by you as Cunningham and Whorf cases are not included in the 118 mentioned above.

Very respectfully, R. A. BALLINGER, Secretary.

But the final receipt is issued in every case, and that is equivalent, under the decision of the Supreme Court, to a patent for the title.

Mr. MONDELL (from his seat). He is a liar; that is all.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You are a liar, if you say that; that is all.

[Menacing actions took place between Mr. WICKERSHAM and Mr. MONDELL.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will preserve order.

[The Sergeant at Arms, bearing the mace, appeared.]

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I want the RECORD to show that I apologize to the House. I was called a liar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. All gentlemen will be seated.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move that the words occurring in the colloquy between the gentleman from Alaska and the gentleman from Wyoming be reported from the desk to the House, for the future action of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. TAWNEY. That the words be taken down and reported from the desk to the House.

Mr. JAMES. About taking the words down, I do not know that any of the reporters heard the words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the words be reported from the desk to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The words will be reported from the desk by the Official Reporter.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Mr. WICKERSHAM (after reading the letter from the Secretary of the Interior continued). The final receipt is issued in every case, and that is equivalent under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to a patent for the title.

Mr. MONDELL. He is a liar; that is all.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. You are a liar, if you say that; that is all.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the language used by both gentlemen is in violation of the rules of the House, and I think they both ought to be required to apologize to the House.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I do desire on my part to apologize to the House; I lost my temper. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. If the Chair will allow me, I think the apology must go a little further than that connected with the words; it should go to the unseemly incident that followed.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I want my apology to be just as broad as any gentleman in the House desires it to be. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I made no such statement in debate as was read from the Speaker's desk. Listening to the reading of the statement by the gentleman from Alaska, which I did not hear very clearly, I turned to the gentleman from South Dakota in answer to a suggestion from him as to whether that were true or that was different from the statement that was in the record, and said, if I recollect rightly, "Then he must be a liar."

My reference was to the fact that in the letter which we have received and which is in the hearings there is nothing to indicate that the final receipts were issued, constituting the equivalent of a patent. On the contrary, in the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is in the hearings, the statement was made that the only final receipts that had been issued were on the Cunningham claims and that the other receipts that had been issued were simply receipts for money paid. It is well known that a receipt for money paid is not a final receipt.

The statement, on the one hand, that final receipts had been issued which were equivalent to a patent and the statement in the letter that no final receipts had been issued except in one case constitute at least a direct contradiction one of the other. Hence the statement I made, which was not directed to the gentleman from Alaska at all, and it was not in debate, but was a word spoken to a gentleman who stood before me.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, however, that I should not have used the word at all with regard to anyone here or elsewhere. I appreciate that fact, and I apologize to the House for having used it out of debate. I certainly should not have used it in debate. I used it as a chance word to a Member standing beside me with reference to the two statements containing, if I understand them rightly, two directly opposite statements as to the receipts which have been issued.

I greatly regret, gentlemen, that anything I have said here has caused a disturbance or led to any unparliamentary action. If I have been unparliamentary, I desire to apologize to the House for having been so. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were 86 ayes and 71 noes.

Mr. MADISON. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. MADISON.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 84 in the affirmative and 72 in the negative.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 93, nays 113, answered "present" 7, not voting 170, as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For balance of day:

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. MALBY with Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

Mr. PEARRE with Mr. RUCKER of Colorado.

For the session:

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. HARDWICK.

Mr. SLEMP with Mr. FLOOD of Virginia.

Mr. BUTLER with Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia.

Until further notice:

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. LEVER.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. HARRISON.

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. ANDERSON.

Mr. PRINCE with Mr. GREGG.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota with Mr. LEGARE.

Mr. MCMORRAN with Mr. PUJO.

Mr. MOREHEAD with Mr. POU.

Mr. OLCOTT with Mr. SULZER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WANGER, voted?

The Speaker pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then I withdraw my vote of "no," and desire to be recorded as "present."

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire if the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. WOODYARD, voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He did not.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. HARDWICK, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I agree with Judge MADISON, of Kansas, that this is one of the most important bills that has been or will be considered by this Congress. Alaska, beyond all question, is the greatest storehouse of the people's resources in the United States for coal and all minerals. The value of these minerals can not be overestimated. It leaps into untold millions of dollars. Experts tell us that the finest coal in the world is to be found there; anthracite of the best character, steaming coal of the greatest value, minerals of all sorts and kinds are in this wonderful storehouse, which is now the property of the people. This bill, Mr. Speaker, will soon dispose of this valuable property; but it will go into the possession of a few men who have had their hands at the throat of Alaska until the exposures made by Gifford Pinchot and Louis R. Glavis and the investigation precipitated by them called a halt. [Applause.] This bill brought in here to-day will lodge, if passed, in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, Richard A. Ballinger, the right to lease the most valuable resources owned by the people of the United States, lease to whom he pleases, deny to whom he desires; for section 2 of the bill provides:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, for and on behalf of the United States, to issue licenses granting the holders thereof the right to prospect and explore for coal on the vacant public lands in the District of Alaska and to execute leases authorizing the lessee to mine and remove coal from such lands.

The amount that can be leased to one person or corporation is 2,560 acres. The disposition of this valuable property is to be placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, when right in this House to-day there is a report signed by three Members of this House out of six who represented this body in the investigation of the Interior Department, finding that Secretary Ballinger is an unfaithful public official, and that the interests of the people of the United States are not safe in his hands. [Applause.] And yet we are called upon, with this report unacted upon, and you gentlemen upon the other side will not dare to allow it to come up to be acted upon, because you know if it is permitted to come up for consideration the findings made by this committee will be adopted, and yet we are told that this property of immeasurable value should be turned into the hands of an official who to-day is under a solemn finding of three Members of this House to this effect. This report holds that Secretary Ballinger's acts in connection with these very coal fields of Alaska were unfaithful to the people of the United States, finding that he was an attorney for the Cunningham claimants, who with the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate undertook to exploit and own Alaska, holding that he had patented lands without authority of law to the Cunningham claimants, who had sold and optioned their land in advance to the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate. This bill lodges in this Secretary of the Interior's hands the right to say to whom he will give prospecting rights, the right to say to whom he will give the privilege of going into Alaska and prospecting for coal, virtually turning over to him the whole of the people's property in Alaska.

It is provided further in this bill that before any lease shall have been authorized, before any right to go forward and search for coal lands upon which a lease is desired, that the person applying for the lease must go to Alaska and, in the language of the bill—

No license or lease shall be issued until after the publication of the application therefor for 30 days in some newspaper of general circulation in the land district in which the land is located and an opportunity has been given for the hearing of any protests which may be made during the period of publication against the issuance of such license or lease, and no lease covering unsurveyed lands shall be issued until a survey shall have been executed, etc.

Here is the further extraordinary power given into the hands of Secretary Ballinger of hearing protests which may be made against the issuance of such license or such lease, lodging in his hands the right to say whether, if a person goes under a permit to prospect and locates the land, it shall be leased to him or not. The protest can be made by any person, and the decision is in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. And what is the amount under the provisions of this bill that we are told must be paid to the United States Government as royalty upon each ton of coal? Three cents a ton is the royalty, notwithstanding the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate, in their testimony before the Ballinger-Pinchot committee, stated that the profit upon each ton of coal mined was not less than 50 cents per ton. Yet under the provisions of this bill coal is to be given away at the rate of 3 cents a ton as royalty to the Government of the United States. And it gives the power to the Secretary of the Interior to grant this lease for a term of 30 years, and in addition to the 30 years given, which is at the option of the lessee, it is also provided that there shall be a preferential right to extend the lease for a period of not more than 20 years, which means throwing the Alaska coal fields and mineral fields over to the favorites of Secretary Ballinger for half a century.

This bill further lodges in the hands of Secretary Ballinger, under section 8, power as follows:

SEC. 8. That no license or lease shall be assigned, mortgaged, or sublet, except to a person, association, or corporation qualified to receive and hold an original license or lease under the provisions of this act, and with the written permission and approval of the Secretary of the Interior; and whosoever succeeds to the interest of the licensee or lessee by foreclosure, purchase, or assignment shall be subject to all the limitations and obligations contained in the license or lease or in this act.

This is a nice provision that will allow corporations to send forth various individuals and get interests in Alaska and have them transferred to them after they obtain the written permission and approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Yet, under the law as it now stands, no person can go to Alaska with the purpose or intention, either express or implied, and take any land for the purpose of selling it to another.

The real joker in this bill, however, and it is virtually all jokers, is section 4, which provides as follows:

SEC. 4. That applications for prospecting licenses and mining leases, and all payments on same, shall be made to such officer and in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may designate, and in all cases where more than one application shall be received for a license or lease covering the same area, in whole or in part, preference shall be given to the qualified applicant who shall show prior possession with a view of acquiring title to coal lands or prospecting for or mining coal and reasonable diligence in applying for such license or lease, but the holder of a prospecting license shall have a preference right, during the period of his license, to apply for and obtain a mining lease to the lands covered by his license: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may adjust the boundaries of conflicting applications in such manner as will best promote the public interest.

This section would at once validate the fraudulent Cunningham coal claims. The brief filed with President Taft by Gifford Pinchot and Amos Pinchot to my mind shows without doubt that these Cunningham claims are fraudulent. This brief is unanswerable in reasoning and conclusion, and a great public service has been performed by these gentlemen upon this question—the Cunningham claims, which are now the joint property of these claimants and the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate, the claims which Clarence Cunningham swore had not been optioned to the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate and, with this affidavit, sent Mr. Ballinger to Mentor, Ohio, to Secretary Garfield to have patented and deeded to the Cunningham claimants, and yet we now know that the Cunningham claims had been optioned by Clarence Cunningham and others at this very time he was attempting to have them patented by Mr. Garfield.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this valuable Alaskan property should be leased, but it should be under safeguards and protection that would give to the American people equal rights. This rich coal field, sufficient when developed to warm the world for generations, ought not to be turned over to the tender mercies of those who have been attempting to seize it, but have been beaten back for awhile by the white light of publicity. If it is to be leased, it should be done under safeguards as strong as bands of steel, under royalty commensurate with its rich value, under conditions that will reserve to the people some of the proportionate value of the rich fields we are now asked to give away.

Mark my words, Mr. Speaker, if this bill becomes a law, Alaska is gone. [Loud applause.] These valuable resources of the people of the United States will be gobbled up, and it will be but a short while until the richest coal fields in all the world will be owned by a few men who happen to be favorites of the Secretary of the Interior. [Loud applause.] This is not our property to give away; it is the people's property, and if it is to be leased, let us take the time to consider well, to investigate thoroughly, to examine carefully every sentence in the bill that undertakes that task. Let us not in the last days of an expiring session, under suspension of the rules and with most limited debate, take such action that will subject us to severest, yet most merited, criticism for dealing out public property to those who would exploit and grow great fortunes out of it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, this bill, one of the most important that has been before this Congress, ought not to pass under suspension of the rules, without opportunity for amendment, and with only 50 minutes of debate. If this bill becomes a law, section 4 will give a preference to every man now in possession fraudulently attempting to gain coal lands in Alaska. It will give preference to every one of the Cunningham claimants if the President shall find that their patents should be denied because of fraud. It gives a preference to a fraudulent claimant over that of an honest man. It is unthinkable that this Congress will enact legislation of that character. It seems to me that the committee could not have considered the effect of the terms of section 4 in this regard. It reads:

Preference shall be given to the qualified applicant who shall show prior possession with a view of acquiring title—

And so forth.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], when I questioned him in regard to this section, made the statement that it might be true as to 160 acres only, but it would go no further than that.

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, the construction of that section is this, that if a man is in possession of a single 160-acre tract, he will be given preference under section 4 to the entire tract of 2,560 acres applied for under his lease, and that means that every one of the Cunningham claimants will be included in the leases that the Secretary of the Interior will be compelled to grant.

This Congress, if this bill passes, will order the Secretary of the Interior to give preference to the Cunningham claimants, no matter how fraudulent their attempts may have been to acquire title to these coal lands in the past.

And, Mr. Speaker, with reference to sections 3 and 6, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] stated—and I do not question but that he stated it in good faith—that the conditions prescribed in section 6, the conditions of the lease, were coextensive with the prohibitions of the bill.

Section 3 provides that no person, association, or corporation applying for a lease of these coal lands, or a stockholder therein, shall during the lifetime of such permit or lease receive or be permitted to hold, directly or indirectly, any other permit, lease, or license, or any interest therein, to coal lands in Alaska under the provisions of the act. This is a prohibition broad in terms, but it will be observed that there is no penalty whatever prescribed for a violation of the terms of this section, nor is there any method prescribed for compelling observance of its requirements.

Section 6 prescribes that all leases issued under the provisions of the act shall be upon certain conditions, and one of the conditions is—

That the lessee shall not during the lifetime of the lease receive or hold, directly or indirectly, any other lease under the provisions of this act, or interest therein.

Upon a breach of the conditions of the lease the same may be forfeited and canceled by a suit instituted in the United States district court of Alaska. The most casual examination of this condition, however, will show that it is not coextensive with the prohibition in section 3. The condition is that the lessee shall not hold, directly or indirectly, any other lease. Section 3 prohibits not only the lessee but any stockholder therein to hold any other lease or permit. We therefore have this situation: That under the terms of the bill a corporation may become a lessee of coal lands in Alaska.

The stockholders of that corporation may form another corporation and take another lease of coal lands, and they might go on indefinitely doing this, and, while it is prohibited in section 3, there is no penalty prescribed for its violation, and each of the leases would be absolutely valid, not subject to cancellation or forfeiture, because there would be no breach in the conditions of the lease, as defined in section 6. Neither would there be any violation of the act, so far as the lessees were concerned. A casual reading of the bill would give one the impression that the spirit of it was to prevent the common ownership or control of coal lands in Alaska in excess of 2,560 acres. The bill itself utterly fails to accomplish this.

The provision in section 6 that is intended to guard against monopoly will be ineffectual not only from a practical standpoint but under the very terms of the bill itself. The section provides that the lessee shall at all times sell the coal extracted from the leased premises at just, fair, and reasonable rates, without the giving of rebates or drawbacks, and without discrimination in price or otherwise, as between persons or places for a like product delivered "under similar terms and conditions." The House well remembers how the long-and-short-haul clause of the interstate-commerce law was for a great many years rendered absolutely nugatory through the use of the terms "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions," and yet, notwithstanding the many decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that this language will permit of widely different rates in transportation, we are expected to believe that this language will tend to secure uniformity in price of coal.

It seems to me that there ought to be an absolute requirement that an absolute price should be made to all in carload lots; and, more than that, there should be reserved in some proper department of the Government the right to control and fix the prices to be charged for the coal mined.

I have only the time, Mr. Speaker, to refer to one other section of the bill, and that very briefly. Section 10 gives to the lessee the exclusive use of the surface of the leased lands, with the exception of roads and highways granted by the Secretary of the Interior and rights of way across the same. Under this language it would be possible for the lessee, if there was any coal upon a tract of 2,560 acres, to reserve and control a town site, a forest, or large water powers. This section should be amended so as to provide that the exclusive use to be enjoyed by the lessee should be so far as necessary for the purposes of mining, and it should go no further than that.

I am in hearty sympathy with the general purposes of the bill, and if the House had an opportunity to amend it I believe that a bill would be passed by the House that would mean much for the development of Alaska and for true conservation of our natural resources. This bill, however, is not a conservation bill. It is a bill that if enacted will practically give away a large part of our national domain to men who have for years been attempting to defraud the Government out of these coal lands.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, the first section of the bill before the House reserves all lands in the District of Alaska which contain workable coal from all forms of entry, appropriation, and disposal, except under the provisions of this bill. I have no doubt that those who read the bill without knowing the facts will imagine that the valuable coal lands in Alaska, about which we have heard so much in the last few years, are reserved by that section. Such is not the fact. It reserves everything which ought not to be reserved in Alaska, while the proviso following it specifically excludes everything from reservation which the people of the United States think ought to be reserved. That proviso reads as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall in any manner affect any claims or rights to any such coal lands heretofore asserted or established under the land laws of the United States, and all such claims and rights shall be treated, passed upon, and disposed of as though this act had not been passed.

That proviso is practically a curative act. Every claim or right to any coal lands in Alaska "heretofore asserted or established" is excluded from the reservation. It is important, then, to know how many claims in Alaska and how many rights to coal lands have been heretofore asserted or establishd.

I can only advise the House that I am informed that about 900 claims have been asserted, but herewith I exhibit to the House a list of claims, beginning with the Cunningham claims, which have been established by final proof in the local land office at Juneau, Alaska.

In addition to the claims set out in the table following, I am informed that the Pittsburg and Cleveland groups in the Katalla field have also been proved up on and paid for and the title of the United States thus equitably conveyed to the purchasers. This would make a total of about 268 claims, of 160 acres each, 32 of which are in and command the Matanuska field, and the others are in and constitute practically the whole of the Katalla field.
